Second. As a necessary curtailment on defense and war profiteering, I believe in some kind of excess-profits tax, though I recognize that no economist has yet devised an absolutely just excess-profits tax.

Third. As a necessary curb on inflation it may be necessary to establish some kind of price limitation. Again, I am fully aware of the undesirable economic implications of such a proposal, but those implications are far less serious than an uncontrolled orgy of inflation precipitated by an abnormal demand which skyrockets prices.

Let us briefly consider the problem of excess profits. I make no claims to being an economist but there are certain economic factors involved in any excess-profits tax which are at once apparent to any observer.

In considering the plan, let us disregard the customary emotional appeals. A great deal of time and no little oratory can be saved if we concede at the cutset that every one here is opposed to profiteering as distinguished from a fair and reasonable return on capital.

Now, what are these self-evident economic factors?

First of all, we have to determine what constitutes excess profits. In a system of free enterprise based on individual initiative, our economic activity requires a certain operating level of profits. We know that when we slash profits below that level we cripple production and destroy the incentive for management, which results in destruction of jobs. We also know that when we cut profits over that level we are eliminating what we call excess profits.

No one has any quarrel with the Government's demand for these excess profits. Our only problem is to determine the operating level above which profits are excess.

There are many factors which make this level difficult to determine in any one yardstick. A hazardous industry with alternate periods of profit and loss demands a higher profit. Profits for a short period of several years may appear excessive in relation to invested capital, although they may be only a small offset to years of operating losses during an experimental and developmental period.

We are all conversant with the factors which may cause excess profits. We know that inflation brings excess profits. We know that monopolies can create excess profits. We know that a distortion in normal demand can create excess profits.

We know further that all of these factors can play a part during our present period of defense financing and during any war period in which the United States might become involved.

We know also that we can control inflation to some degree at least by price controls and by a combination of taxation and borrowing in our defense financing. We know also that we can tighten our controls on monopolies, and in fact that we are already doing so. Our problem then is to cope with the excess profits resulting from a distorted demand factor.

We know that the supply factors of those goods for which there will be an abnormal demand cannot readily be increased overnight. On the other hand, the demand factor cannot be greatly altered though we can attempt substitutions, synthetics, conservation, and economy in the use of goods whose supply will be inadequate to the demand.

Because we cannot exercise more control on the demand factor it is reasonable to expect possibilities for excess profits. It is likewise perfectly reasonable for the Government to attempt to recover a substantial share of these excess profits which have been in part created by the activities of government.

The Revenue Act of 1940 has already subjected the earnings of corporations to increased rates on their Federal income tax, their capital-stock tax, and on the somewhat limited excess-profits tax already in force. These taxes are not negligible but they are not directed at defense excess profits. Our problem now is to tax these excess profits without destroying wealth and working hours for labor.

This bill, I believe, is not in the public interest. It was hurried into being. I refuse to accept it as my child.

In conclusion, let me say, Mr. President, I think we should refuse to pass the portion of the bill which refers to the so-called excess-profits tax, but should divide the bill and pass the feature which relates to amortization and depreciation.

Secondly, we should strike from the bill the additions to the normal tax.

Thirdly, as the bill does not do the job, it is just another Democratic palliative measure. It pretends to raise $115,000,000 in excess profits.

With such a measure passed, the country can be told that an excess-profits tax has been passed. Shame on such chicanery.

Fourth, it's main purpose seems to be to harass business, make more jobs for accountants and tax lawyers.

Fifth, it does not apply the basic principle of all taxation—the ability to pay.

Sixth, it does not do the job it is supposed to do.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 2991) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States certain lands in the city of National City, Calif.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10361) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 7357. An act to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 465), to provide for the safe carriage of explosives or other dangerous or semi-dangerous articles or substances on board vessels; to make more effective the provisions of the International Convention for Safety of Life at Sea, 1929, relating to the carriage of dangerous goods, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9982. An act to amend section 4551 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 7357. An act to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 465), to provide for the safe carriage of explosives or other dangerous or semi-dangerous articles or substances on board vessels; to make more effective the provisions of the International Convention for Safety of Life at Sea, 1929, relating to the carriage of dangerous goods, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9982. An act to amend section 4551 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and for other purposes.

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	George	Lee	Schwellenbach
Andrews	Gerry	Lodge	Sheppard
Barkley	Gibson	McCarran	Stewart
Bilbo	Gillette	McKellar	Taft
Brown	Gurney	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Hale	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Harrison	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Hatch	Norris	Townsend
Capper	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Truman
Caraway	Herring	Overton	Tydings
Chandler	Hill	Pepper	Vandenberg
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Pittman	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Radcliffe	Walsh
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	White
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds	Wiley
Ellender	King	Russell
Frazier	La Follette	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BULOW (when his name was called). On this question, I have a pair with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], and therefore withhold my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. CHANDLER'S name was called). On this question the present occupant of the chair has a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. Understanding that if the Senator from Pennsylvania were present he would vote "nay," the present occupant of the chair votes "nay."

Mr. HATCH (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]. If the Senator from Pennsylvania were present, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MURRAY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER]. If he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TRUMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea." Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. McCARRAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator has not voted.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota. In his absence I withhold my vote. I understand that if he were present he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] has a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. The Senator from Oregon is unavoidably detained from the Senate on important business.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] has a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS].

I announce the following special pairs on this question:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], who would vote "yea";

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], who would vote "yea";

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], who would vote "yea"; and

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], who would vote "nay," is paired as heretofore announced.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are necessarily absent. I am advised that if present and voting, these Senators would vote "nay."

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are unavoidably detained. I am advised that if present and voting, these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—20

Adams	Gibson	Lodge	Schwartz
Capper	Holt	Norris	Truman
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	O'Mahoney	Wagner

So, Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have three amendments which I should like to offer at this time. They are merely technical.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the committee on page 86, line 20, after the word "tax", it is proposed to insert in parentheses the words "not including the tax under section 102."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. A little later I shall offer an entirely new title, known as the war-profits-tax bill, which we have had before us previously. Will it be in order to offer that at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be in order to offer it as soon as the committee amendments are acted on.

Mr. CONNALLY. I merely wanted to preserve my rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he will restate the reference to be inserted after the word "tax", in line 20, page 86. Did the Senator say section 102?

Mr. HARRISON. These three amendments I have to present were prepared by the legislative draftsmen. They are merely technical in character. They carry no substance. Did the Senator ask me why I was asking that the amendment be inserted?

Mr. DANAHER. Where section 102 appears.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will restate the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 86, line 20, after the word "tax", it is proposed to insert in parentheses the words "not including the tax under section 102."

Mr. DANAHER. What would the amendment do, I ask the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HARRISON. Under these amendments in computing the tax both under the income and invested-capital methods, and for the purposes of the base period, the surtax on corporations improperly accumulating a surplus does not increase the deduction for taxes.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 89, line 2, after the word "tax", it is proposed to insert in parentheses the words "not including the tax under section 102."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 92, line 4, after the word "tax", it is proposed to insert in parentheses the words "not including the tax under section 102."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 89, line 5, it is proposed to strike out the words "gains or" and to insert "capital gains and."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 97, lines 4 and 5, it is proposed to strike out "(d)" and to insert in lieu thereof "(c)."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, does that conclude the committee amendments?

Mr. HARRISON. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The whole thing is a committee amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator from Michigan that that is all I have to offer at this time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I desire to move at the proper time that the bill be recommitted with instructions to the committee to report back forthwith with the entire excess-profits section eliminated. When will be the appropriate time for me to submit that motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At any time between now and the time the bill shall be passed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The motion is in order at any time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may make the motion now if he desires to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to get that subject out of the way.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well. The Senator can make the motion now if he wishes to do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not care to debate the matter further. I have presented my full reasons, and I think the Senate is familiar with them.

I move that the bill be recommitted with instructions to report it back forthwith with the excess-profits tax section eliminated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi now to the amendment I have offered providing for preserving the social-security rights of men who are either drafted into the conscript army or into the National Guard service. I fully understand that the text of the amendment may not be in adequate or satisfactory form. In fact my conference with Mr. Altmeyer this morning would indicate that it probably is not. Nevertheless, the subject cannot go to conference except as it is opened by some sort of an amendment. My amendment is in line with the President's message submitted today, and I ask the Senator from Mississippi if he will permit the amendment to enter the bill so the subject may be canvassed in conference.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is on the subcommittee of the Finance Committee which was appointed to go into the various matters with respect to social-security amendments or legislation. The President in his message suggested that a study be made of the subject and that these matters, after study, then be put into the law. It seems to me that would be the better order in which to handle the matter.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator is under a misapprehension regarding the character of this particular suggestion. It refers exclusively to preserving the rights of draftees and trainees and National Guard men, and it is admitted that if their rights are to be protected at all it must be undertaken long before the committee to which the Senator from Mississippi refers can possibly hope to explore the subject. All I suggest to the Senator is that in the light of the President's message of today on the subject, he permit my amendment to go to conference. I will not hold him to account for what happens there. If in conference it develops, through the source of the Security Board, that something of this character ought to be written into the bill, which I think it must be if the rights of these particular draftees are to be protected, I think he will be pursuing a proper course.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Security Board is in complete accord with the President. I believe the suggestions were made after conference between the Security Board and the President. I am told it will take some time to draft these amendments so they will be correct and perfect. I have been in conference this morning to some extent with the representatives of the Social Security Board and I think the amendment suggested by the Senator ought not to go into the pending bill. I think the committee of which the Senator from Georgia is chairman would certainly cooperate with the subcommittee of which the Senator from Michigan is a member, in making a study and getting these matters in proper form, and bringing them in at the next session.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, this subject cannot await the next session, unless the Senator is willing to jeopardize the social-security rights of the groups which he has just voted into the Army of the United States. The President does not want to jeopardize those rights, and he said so in his message of today. I did not happen to sustain conscription, and I did not vote for it, but I certainly want to protect the rights of those who are to be conscripted. Action cannot wait until January; it cannot wait until some special committee—and I am a member of the committee, also—explores the subject.

What I am asking the Senator to do is to accept my amendment to the only available vehicle in which this action can be taken, namely, the pending bill. All I ask is that the Senator take the subject to conference, and if, when he gets into conference, the conferees decide this is not the proper bill in which to place it, I shall not object to having the amendment thrown out.

If the conferees decide, on the advice of the Social Security Board, that different language is advisable, I shall be most happy to accept it. I do not want this opportunity to pass without opening the door to an opportunity to defend and preserve the rights, under the Social Security Act, of the men who are to be conscripted. What is wrong with that?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is no more ardently enthusiastic in trying to accomplish what the President recommended be done than I am, but I see no reason why we cannot take care of the matter in another bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I offer the amendment. If it is to be resisted we ought to have a discussion of the subject.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that no harm could result from taking this matter to conference, and there we can ascertain, upon consultation with the representatives of the Social Security Board, and the Treasury, and the legislative draftsmen, whether such language can be worked out, but if we do not do that, the conferees would be precluded from considering it, and we would have to await the origination of a bill in the House, and its coming over here, because we cannot originate legislation on a subject which affects the tax base on which the social security legislation rests.

So I wish to ask the Senator if he will not take the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to conference, especially in the light of the statement made by the Senator from Michigan that he will not object if it is found that the technical difficulties of drafting are insurmountable in the time permitted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. KING. As I understand the draft which has been proposed, it does not include railroad employees, and a number of other classes of employees. I was wondering if the Senator from Michigan might not explore the matter a little further so as to include all classes of employees that ought to be included.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It should include all, and my theory is that if we can open the subject by this amendment it can be made to cover whatever is necessary to be covered.

Mr. KING. I was wondering if we could include in the draft, when it goes to conference, legislation not contemplated in the bill itself, and include a number of classes of employees not covered?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I quite agree that the railroad employees should also be covered, and the matter can be made to touch everything covered in the President's message of today.

Mr. HARRISON. To include those covered by the Railroad Retirement Act, which the President suggested and advised. So far as I am concerned the amendment can go to conference.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I offer the amendment in its perfected form, as follows: At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. VANDENBERG to the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, viz:

Title II, section 209, of the Social Security Act of 1935, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (o), as follows:

"(o) In determining eligibility and in computing benefits under section 209, and for no other purpose, the term 'total wages', as used in subsection (f) of this section, shall, in the case of any covered individual who, after July 1, 1940, has served in the land or naval forces of the United States, be deemed to include for each month of such service an amount equal to the average monthly wage received by such covered individual during the quarter immediately preceding such period of service, but in no event shall such 'total wages' exceed $3,000 for any single year."

SEC. 2. Section 1603 of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act of 1939 is hereby amended by adding at the end of subsection (a) a new paragraph (7), as follows:

"(7) For the purpose of computing eligibility and benefits of any covered employee who, since July 1, 1940, has served in the land or naval forces of the United States, such period of service shall be included in the same manner as though said individual had continued in a covered employment during such period of service, and for the purpose of computing benefits only, such individual shall be credited for each week of such service with wages equal to the average weekly taxable wage earned in the quarter immediately preceding induction into such land or naval forces."

The necessary corrections also are herewith made to protect the rights of men in the armed forces whose rights are affected under the Railroad Retirement Act and the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan have any choice with respect to what part of the bill the amendment should be incorporated in?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The amendment states that it should be inserted in the proper place in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would probably be, as the Chair understands, at the end of the bill. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, does the question comprehend the whole of titles I and II.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Yes; the whole of titles I and II.

Mr. HARRISON. What is pending now, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment as amended, beginning on page 1, and extending to line 10 on page 141.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has one or two suggestions he wishes to make before action is taken on the pending matter. I do not wish him to be precluded. Therefore, I ask that the committee amendment, as amended, be passed over temporarily, and that we recur to it later, after the Senator from Georgia shall have looked into the matter a little further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Finance as to the matters contained on page 109, which is the so-called hardship section. The Senator will recall that we had considerable discussion in the Finance Committee regarding subsection (3) of section 721, on page 109. The Senator will recall also that that is the so-called hardship section by which it is provided that in the calculation of the excess-profits tax attention may be given to prior experience of the corporation or a taxpayer who has been engaged in mining, or research, or development. I raised the question in the committee whether or not in the type of case where an individual or partnership have formed a corporation the taxpayer would be entitled to the relief provided in section 3. That is highly important to many mining corporations. It is highly important to some development corporations in my State of Michigan. The Senator from Mississippi will recall that the committee voted to instruct the experts to draft a provision which would cover the situation. I understand it has not been done. The problem presents considerable difficulty.

In view of the parliamentary situation, may that matter be taken to conference, and may subsection 3 be rewritten in conference under the present parliamentary status?

Mr. HARRISON. I recall the discussion we had in the committee. The committee was in sympathy with the view of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], and others who presented the idea. As I recall, the committee was asked to draft an amendment to the relief provision carrying out this general idea. I understand from the draftsmen that they have tried to do so, but some time will be required to write the provision. That is the information which comes to me.

Mr. BROWN. My question is, can appropriate language to carry out that idea, if it can be drafted—and I see no reason why it cannot be—be added in conference?

Mr. HARRISON. In my opinion it could not be added in conference, but if the Senator will draft something which points in that direction I shall have no objection to taking it to conference to see if we can work it out in a manner satisfactory to the Senator.

Is that arrangement satisfactory to the Senator?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I have examined the provision and it seems to me it is not sufficiently comprehensive. I sincerely hope that the Senator from Michigan, with such aid as he can obtain, will draft a provision which will afford ample relief.

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator from Utah that this afternoon I shall be concerned with an amendment which I think will require some little discussion, but if he and the Senator from Colorado could undertake the task, with the assistance of some of the experts, I should very much appreciate it. I think we shall make a mistake if we do not cover that kind of a situation before the bill is finally passed.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that the understanding in the committee was that a comprehensive relief provision should be adopted. In my opinion we have not carried out our intentions.

Mr. BROWN. According to my understanding, the Finance Committee voted on precisely that question, and asked that such a provision be drafted.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I wonder if the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Mississippi can enlighten me in my ignorance as to how far this section goes in protecting those in the mining industry, who, as Senators know, engage in a development process for years and invest their money without any return. Then in 1 year they happen to derive some profit, the accumulated profit resulting from their efforts for 4 or 5 years past. How far is such a development protected by positive provisions; how far is opportunity afforded for protection merely under rules and regulations; and how far is it left unprotected?

Mr. HARRISON. Protection is afforded under the relief provisions of the bill, which permit promoters, developers, or inventors to go back and apportion over several years what they have accumulated in earnings.

Mr. ADAMS. Is that a positive right, or is it merely a privilege which may be given by the Commissioner?

Mr. HARRISON. That is a specified, particular opportunity permitted them, and does not come under the general provisions, which would buttress that special right.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. The right of appeal to the Board of Tax Appeals is also granted.

Mr. ADAMS. That would also follow. My inquiry is whether or not there is protection by positive declaration, or whether leeway is simply left to the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, to make rules and regulations which might protect or which might not protect.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Commissioner is required to grant the opportunity.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes; it is specified, and if there is complaint there may be appeal to the courts. This provision was adopted as a relief provision in special cases. It seems to me it cannot be ignored by the Commissioner under any circumstances. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] was on the committee, and I think he will bear me out in the statement that that was the interpretation placed upon it. We all seemed pretty well satisfied with it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That was the understanding we had in the committee, and we instructed the drafting division to draft an amendment to bring about the result. This is the language which was brought to us. From the interpretation given by the draftsmen to their own language I am quite satisfied that it does the very thing we want to accomplish.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I understand the effect of this provision, in cases of exploration in the mining, oil, coal, or gas industries, if a concern makes an inordinate profit in 1 year as compared with what it usually makes in a year, it is then allowed to prorate that large amount back over a period of years and divide it up.

Let us assume that a concern makes $1,000,000 in some particular year, and that for the 4 preceding years it has not made anything. It allocates $200,000 of the $1,000,000 to each of the 5 years, and estimates what it would have paid on a normal tax basis for each of the 5 years, and pays the tax on that basis. However, for the purposes of the excess-profits tax it pays only on $200,000 in the taxable year, which would be 1940.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I think the statement of the Senator is accurate, except with regard to the remarks he made about paying the normal tax. The normal tax is paid on the entire amount earned in the calendar year, or $1,000,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true; but let me say to the Senator from Michigan that under the practice of the Treasury, in prior years the concern would have been permitted to deduct from its net income the expenses of operation, and all that sort of thing, upon which it had not realized. When it finally obtains a return on the money invested, if it is allowed to capitalize it and use it without paying a tax, it escapes paying any normal tax upon that part of its income.

Take the case of a concern which makes nothing for 4 years: Of course, it pays no tax. Then, in the fifth year, it makes $1,000,000. It is proposed that the concern shall have the privilege of prorating the $1,000,000 back over a period of 5 years; and upon the constructive theory that $200,000 of that amount was earned in 1936, we will say, the concern pays the normal tax for that year on $200,000, and so on.

Mr. BROWN. I must differ with the Senator. I think he is in error with regard to the normal tax. I asked this precise question of the experts. The normal tax is assessed entirely in the year in which the income is earned, which would be 1940.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. BROWN. There is no levying of a tax back over the previous period. The only purpose of using the previous period is as a basis for calculation of the excess-profits tax, which does not relate to the normal tax at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. In any event, the concern is not penalized, except on a pro rata basis, with the excess-profits tax in the year in which the income was earned.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not happen to be an attorney. My colleague asked a technical legal question, and I have been informed by the experts that this provision does not give the Commissioner discretionary power. It lays down a legal rule, and the Commissioner does not have power to reject it or otherwise. He must be guided by it.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am not in touch with these things, and I know little about taxation. However, I am hopeful that that is an entirely correct answer. The language of the general provision is:

If there is includible in the gross income of the taxpayer for any taxable year an item of income of any one or more of the following classes—

And the classes are set out—

and, in the light of the taxpayer's business, it is abnormal for the taxpayer to derive income of such class, or, if the taxpayer normally derives income of such class, the item includible in the gross income of the taxable year is grossly disproportionate to the gross income of the same class in the 4 previous taxable years—

If we are dealing with mines, I suppose that means the average of a group of mines, or mines generally, rather than a particular mine.

Mr. HARRISON. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. The provision continues:

Then: (A) The amount of such item attributable to any previous taxable year or years shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

Mr. HARRISON. The amount attributable to the previous years is to be fixed by the Commissioner and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ADAMS. But it is left entirely to their judgment and discretion. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] gave an illustration, saying that if there were an income of $1,000,000, the only income over a period of 5 years' development, it would be divided and allocated over a period of 5 years. He used the illustration of $200,000 a year. That is not the requirement. It would be left to the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, to decide how much should be allocated to prior years. The Commissioner might set back one amount for one year, another amount for another year, and a different amount for a third year. Is not that correct?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is correct, except that there may be an appeal to the courts or to the Board of Tax Appeals from the Commissioner's decision on the question.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. There can be no effective appeal from a discretionary action. If it is discretionary with the Commissioner to determine how much shall be attributed to previous years, an appeal may not be taken to the Board of Appeals on a question of discretion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The discretionary features do not pertain to the rule at all; but they do pertain, of course, to calculations involved in the whole matter. Somebody has to attribute the amount to certain years. The rule itself, however, is a matter of definition.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask the Senator, then, what is the rule?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The rule is that a taxpayer having had development work over a period of time, more than 12 months, can go back and take that period of time into consideration.

Mr. ADAMS. But it is the Commissioner, not the taxpayer, who decides the question and who attributes the income. Take a man owning a patent on which he has been working for 5 years, he has been putting in his money and his time and all he could borrow from his friends, and suddenly, at the end of 5 years, is able to sell his patent for, say, a million dolars. The bill does not say that the million dollars shall be prorated back evenly over the period of 5 years; it does not lay down any rule; but merely says that if the amount which he received is abnormal and excessive or disproportionate to the gross income of the same class in the 4 preceding taxable years, then "the amount of such item attributable to any previous taxable year or years shall be determined under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary."

If the Commissioner were to decide that nothing should be prorated the first 3 years, and should divide the million dollars into the last 2 years, as a matter of discretion, the owner of the patent would be bound by it, as I read the provision. I am trying to get the information because of its vast importance to the section of the country in which I live.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. As I understand the proposal, that only pertains to the arithmetic of the matter, and not to the right of the taxpayer at all.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish I could concur with the Senator. The Senator is on the committee, and I will accept his judgment, but he will have to pardon my ignorance.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The junior Senator from Colorado knows that the senior Senator from Colorado is a very distinguished and able lawyer.

Mr. ADAMS. There is no one who knows less about income tax matters than does the senior Senator from Colorado.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the senior Senator from Colorado that Mr. Stam, who is chief of our staff, and who has had long experience and help in writing this, thinks and so states in a report which I have in my hand that the colleague of the Senator from Colorado is exactly right in his construction of the provision.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator, then, translate to me from the expert what is the rule? It is, I am told, a matter of arithmetic.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well. I will read:

This section grants certain relief to taxpayers in the following cases:

Where the gross income of the taxpayer for the taxable year includes income of the following classes:

(1) Income from claims, judgments, or interest thereon;

(2) Amounts payable in 1 year from long-term contracts;

(3) Income resulting from exploration, discovery, prospecting, research, or development of tangible property extending over a period of more than 12 months;

(4) Income which is abnormal due to a change in the taxpayer's accounting method or accounting period; and

(5) Buildings taken over by a lessor upon termination of the lease.

In this class of cases, if it is abnormal for the taxpayer to derive income of such class, relief is granted. Relief is also granted where even though the taxpayer normally derives income from such class, the income is grossly disproportionate to the gross income in the same class in the 4 previous taxable years.

In such cases, the excess-profits tax cannot exceed the aggregate taxes if it had been received in the taxable years to which it had been attributable if received ratably over the period.

For example, if a taxpayer receives income from a judgment in 1940, for which claim was pending for a period of 5 years of $1,000, only $200 is reportable as income for 1940 subject to excess-profits tax. The balance is attributable to the base period years, and since no excess-profits tax is imposed for such years, the remaining $800 is not subject to excess-profits tax.

An oil company might derive income from an oil well in 1940, which is much greater than it received in the 4 preceding taxable years for oil wells. If such income is attributable to a 5-year period, only one-fifth would be reportable as income subject to the excess-profits tax for 1940.

I hope that explanation will help somewhat to explain this particular question.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish the explanation were in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. It is in the report, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to correct one thing I said a moment ago. I said that in making out the income for tax purposes and spreading it over a 5-year period the normal tax was estimated as of the year when it was constructively earned; but that was inaccurate. The normal tax is payable in the taxable year 1940, but, for the purpose of the excess-profits tax, it is prorated back over a 5-year period, and only one-fifth of it in the taxable year is assessable under the excess-profits tax. It would have been better for the miners and oil producers had the suggestion I first made been correct.

I made the suggestion in the Finance Committee, and was under the impression that the amendment had been drawn in such fashion as to carry out my original thought, but I see I am in error in that respect. Otherwise I think my statement was accurate. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. KING. As I understood the Senator from Texas, I interpreted his observation to mean, if a mining corporation has been working for a number of years—say, 10 years—and a windfall comes on the tenth year, there would be no exception with respect to the normal income tax, but, for the purposes of the excess-profits tax, the amount would be considered to cover 5 years, and the windfall would be allocated to a number of years rather than to the year in which it was paid.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that, if this bill were not passed at all, that is exactly what would happen, but, under existing law, if they get the money in 1940, they would pay the normal tax on all of it.

Mr. KING. That is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. This does not change that.

Mr. KING. It does not change it with respect to the normal tax.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Delaware has an amendment to offer. I assure him that it will take me only a moment to clear up the matter I have in mind. Referring to subsection 3 on page 109, the experts from the Treasury and the Finance Committee tell me that this matter could be perfected in conference if we added the language which I am about to read:

In line 15, after the word "foregoing", to insert the words "by the taxpayer or any of its predecessors."

I therefore ask that the committee amendment be amended as I have suggested.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to that amendment going to conference, so that we may perfect it in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, on page 127 I offer an amendment to strike out lines 1 to 14, both inclusive, and insert:

After December 31, 1939, if, on September 11, 1940, and at all times until the taxpayer became an acquiring corporation:

(1) the taxpayer owned not less than 75 percent of each class of stock of each of the qualified component corporations involved in the transaction in which the taxpayer became an acquiring corporation; or

(2) one of the qualified component corporations involved in the transaction owned not less than 75 percent of each class of stock of the taxpayer, and of each of the other qualified component corporations involved in the transaction, the average base period net income of the taxpayer shall not be less than (A) the average base period net income of that one of its qualified component corporations involved in the transaction the average base period net income of which is greatest, or (B) the average base period net income of the taxpayer computed without regard to the base period net income of any of its qualified component corporations involved in the transaction.

That amendment would take the place of the language which I propose to strike out.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say that I have no objection to the amendment going to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 146, after line 15, to strike out:

(5) Recomputation of tax in case of election under this subsection: If the adjustment of the income or excess-profits tax liability for any taxable year necessary to give effect to paragraph (4) of this subsection is prevented (A) on the date of the certificate of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy or on the date of the President's proclamation, whichever is the basis of the taxpayer's election under this subsection, or (B) within 1 year from such date, by any provision of law (other than this paragraph and other than section 3761, relating to compromises), an adjustment of the tax liability shall nevertheless be made if in respect of such taxable year a notice of deficiency is mailed or a claim for refund is filed, as the case may be, within 1 year after the date of such certificate or such proclamation, whichever is the basis of the taxpayer's election under this subsection. If at the time of the mailing of such notice of deficiency or the filing of such claim for refund, the adjustment is so prevented, then the amount of the adjustment authorized in this paragraph shall be limited to the increase or decrease in the tax previously determined for such taxable year which results solely from the effect of paragraph (4) of this subsection, and such amount shall be assessed and collected, or credited or refunded, in the same manner as if it were a deficiency or an overpayment, as the case may be, for such taxable year and as if on the date of such certificate or such proclamation, whichever is the basis of the taxpayer's election under this subsection, 1 year remained before the expiration of the periods of limitation upon assessment or filing claim for refund for the taxable year. The tax previously determined shall be ascertained in accordance with section 3801 (d). The amount to be assessed and collected under this paragraph in the same manner as if it were a deficiency, or to be refunded or credited in the same manner as if it were an overpayment, shall not be diminished by any credit or set-off based upon any item, inclusion, deduction, credit, exemption, gain, or loss, other than one resulting from the effect of paragraph (4) of this subsection. Such amount, if paid, shall not be recovered by a claim or suit for refund or suit for erroneous refund based upon any item, inclusion, deduction, credit, exemption, gain, or loss, other than one resulting from the effect of paragraph (4) of this subsection.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(5) Recomputation of tax:

(A) If the adjustment of the income or excess-profits tax liability for any taxable year necessary to give effect to paragraph (4) of this subsection is prevented (i) on the date of the certificate of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy or on the date of the President's proclamation, whichever is the basis of the taxpayer's election under this subsection, or (ii) within 1 year from such date, by any provision of law (other than this paragraph and other than section 3761, relating to compromises), an adjustment of the tax liability shall nevertheless be made if in respect of such taxable year a notice of deficiency is mailed or a claim for refund is filed, as the case may be, within 1 year after the date of such certificate or such proclamation, whichever is the basis of the taxpayer's election under this subsection.

(B) If the adjustment of the income or excess profits tax liability for any taxable year necessary to give effect to subsection (i) of this section is prevented (i) on the expiration of 30 days after the making of the contract described in such subsection or 60 days after the date of the enactment of the Second Revenue Act of 1940, whichever of such periods expires the later, or (ii) within 1 year from such expiration, by any provision of law other than this paragraph and other than section 3761, relating to compromises), an adjustment of the tax liability shall nevertheless be made if in respect of such taxable year a notice of deficiency is mailed or a claim for refund is filed, as the case may be, within 1 year after the date of such expiration.

(C) If at the time of the mailing of such notice of deficiency or the filing of such claim for refund, referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B), as the case may be, the adjustment is so prevented, then the amount of the adjustment authorized in this paragraph shall be limited to the increase or decrease in the tax previously determined for such taxable year which results solely from the effect of paragraph (4) of this subsection or of subsection (i), as the case may be, and such amount shall be assessed and collected, or credited or refunded, in the same manner as if it were a deficiency or an overpayment, as the case may be, for such taxable year and as if on the date of such certificate or such proclamation, whichever is the basis of the taxpayer's election under this subsection, or on the date of such expiration, as the case may be, 1 year remained before the expiration of the periods of limitation upon assessment or filing claim for refund for the taxable year. The tax previously determined shall be ascertained in accordance with section 3801 (d). The amount to be assessed and collected under this paragraph in the same manner as if it were a deficiency, or to be refunded or credited in the same manner as if it were an overpayment, shall not be diminished by any credit or set-off based upon any item, inclusion, deduction, credit, exemption, gain, or loss, other than one resulting from the effect of paragraph (4) of this subsection or of subsection (i), as the case may be. Such amount, if paid, shall not be recovered by a claim or suit for refund or suit for erroneous refund based upon any item, inclusion, deduction, credit, exemption, gain, or loss, other than one resulting from the effect of paragraph (4) of this subsection or of subsection (i), as the case may be.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 151, line 12, after the word "after", to strike out "July 10" and insert "January 1"; in line 18, before the numerals "1940", to strike out "July 10" and insert "January 1"; on page 152, line 6, after the word "after", to strike out "July 10" and insert "January 1"; on page 155, after line 5, to strike out:

(i) Destruction, etc., of facility: Any taxpayer taking deductions for amortization of emergency facilities pursuant to the provisions of this section may not thereafter destroy, demolish, impair, or substantially alter such emergency facilities without the consent in writing of the Secretary of War or of the Secretary of the Navy. In the event such consent is not given within a period of 90 days from the date of receipt of written request therefor, the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, shall and he is hereby directed to purchase such facilities at a price which he shall fix not to exceed the adjusted basis but not to be less than $1. In case such facilities consist of buildings, or fixtures not removable without substantially affecting the structure to which the same are affixed, the taxpayer shall have an option to repurchase such facilities at the price which he was paid before such facilities are resold to any other person.

(j) Consent to provisions of subsection (i): No deduction for amortization under the provisions of this section shall be allowed in any case unless the taxpayer files with the Commissioner a signed statement acknowledging, and consenting to the application of, the provisions of subsection (i). Such statement shall be signed and acknowledged under oath by the person or persons required to swear to returns made by the corporation under this chapter.

(k) Penalty for destruction, etc., of facility: If the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy certifies to the Secretary of the Treasury that a taxpayer subject to the provisions of subsection (i) has willfully destroyed, demolished, impaired, or altered substantially any emergency facility without having first obtained the written consent of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to such destruction, demolition, impairment, or alteration, then such taxpayer shall be liable to a penalty in an amount equal to the unadjusted basis of such facility in the hands of the taxpayer for the purpose of computing gain, to be assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner as if it were a tax imposed by this chapter. Such penalty may be assessed or a proceeding in court for the collection of such penalty may be begun without assessment at any time with 1 year after the date of such certification.

(i) Protection of the Government's interest in emergency facility: If, directly or indirectly, the taxpayer has been or will be paid or substantially reimbursed by the Government for all or a part of the cost of any emergency facility pursuant to any contract with the Government for the construction or acquisition of such facility, for the purchase of supplies, or otherwise, no amortization shall be allowed with respect to such facility under this section unless, before the expiration of 30 days after the making of such contract or 60 days after the date of the enactment of the Second Revenue Act of 1940, whichever of such periods expires the later, the Advisory Commission to the Council on National Defense, and either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy certify to the Commissioner that the contract contains provisions, adequately protecting the public interest, with reference to the future use and disposition of the facility. If such contract is made after the amortization period has begun, and such certificate is not made, the income and excess-profits tax liability for all taxable years, beginning with the taxable year in which the amortization period began, shall be computed without the amortization deduction allowed by this section with respect to such facility.

The terms and conditions of such contracts with reference to payment or reimbursement of the cost of such facilities and the protecting of the Government's interest therein shall be made available to the public.

So as to read:

(e) Definitions:

(1) Emergency facility: As used in this section, the term "emergency facility" means any land, building, machinery, or equipment, or part thereof, the construction, reconstruction, erection, or installation of which was completed after January 1, 1940, or which was acquired after such date, and with respect to which a certificate under subsection (f) has been made.

(2) Emergency period: As used in this section, the term "emergency period" means the period beginning January 1, 1940, and ending on the date on which the President proclaims that the utilization of a substantial portion of the emergency facilities with respect to which certifications under subsection (f) have been made, is no longer required in the interest of national defense.

(f) Determination of adjusted basis of emergency facility: In determining, for the purposes of subsection (a) or subsection (h), the adjusted basis of an emergency facility:

(1) There shall be included only so much of the amount otherwise constituting such adjusted basis as is properly attributable to such construction, reconstruction, erection, installation, or acquisition after January 1, 1940, as the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense and either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy have certified, within the time specified in paragraph (3) of this subsection, and under such regulations as the President may prescribe, as necessary in the interest of national defense during the emergency period;

(2) After the completion or acquisition of any emergency facility with respect to which a certificate under paragraph (1) has been made, any expenditure (attributable to such facility and to the period after such completion or acquisition) which does not represent construction, reconstruction, erection, installation, or acquisition included in such certificate, but with respect to which a separate certificate is made under paragraph (1), shall not be applied in adjustment of the basis of such facility and shall be considered as an expenditure with respect to a new emergency facility; and

(3) The certificate provided for in paragraph (1) shall have no effect unless made before whichever of the following dates is the later: (A) The beginning of such construction, reconstruction, erection, or installation, or the date of such acquisition, or (B) the sixtieth day after the date of the enactment of the Second Revenue Act of 1940.

(g) Depreciation deduction: If the adjusted basis of the emergency facility computed without regard to subsection (f) of this section is in excess of the adjusted basis computed under such subsection, the deduction provided by section 23 (l) shall, despite the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, be allowed with respect to such emergency facility as if its adjusted basis were an amount equal to the amount of such excess.

(h) Payment by United States of unamortized cost of facility: If an amount is properly includible in the gross income of the taxpayer on account of a payment with respect to an emergency facility and such payment is certified as provided in this paragraph, then, at the election of the taxpayer in its return for the taxable year in which such amount is so includible—

(1) The amortization deduction for the month in which such amount is so includible shall (in lieu of the amount of the deduction for such month computed under subsection (a)) be the amount so includible, but such deduction shall not be in excess of the adjusted basis of the emergency facility as of the end of such month (computed without regard to any amortization deduction for such month). Payments referred to in this paragraph shall be payments, the amounts of which are certified, under such regulations as the President may prescribe, by either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy as compensation to the taxpayer for the unamortized cost of the emergency facility made because—

(A) A contract with the United States involving the use of the facility has been terminated by its terms or by cancelation, or

(B) the taxpayer had reasonable grounds (either from provisions of a contract with the United States involving the use of the facility, or from written or oral representations made under authority of the United States) for anticipating future contracts involving the use of the facility, which future contracts have not been made.

(2) In case the taxpayer is not entitled to any amortization deduction with respect to the emergency facility the deduction allowable under section 23 (l) on account of the month in which such amount is so includible shall be increased by such amount, but such deduction on account of such month shall not be in excess of the adjusted basis of the emergency facility as of the end of such month (computed without regard to any amount allowable, on account of such month, under section 23 (l) or this paragraph).

(i) Protection of the Government's interest in emergency facility: If, directly or indirectly, the taxpayer has been or will be paid or substantially reimbursed by the Government for all or a part of the cost of any emergency facility pursuant to any contract with the Government for the construction or acquisition of such facility, for the purchase of supplies, or otherwise, no amortization shall be allowed with respect to such facility under this section unless, before the expiration of 30 days after the making of such contract or 60 days after the date of the enactment of the Second Revenue Act of 1940, whichever of such periods expires the later, the Advisory Commission to the Council on National Defense, and either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy certify to the Commissioner that the contract contains provisions, adequately protecting the public interest, with reference to the future use and disposition of the facility. If such contract is made after the amortization period has begun, and such certificate is not made, the income and excess-profits tax liability for all taxable years, beginning with the taxable year in which the amortization period began, shall be computed without the amortization deduction allowed by this section with respect to such facility.

The terms and conditions of such contracts with reference to payment or reimbursement of the cost of such facilities and the protecting of the Government's interest therein shall be made available to the public.

The amendment was agreed to.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, it must be apparent to every Senator that the situation confronting us is a very serious one; and I am very much disturbed by the rumor that a move is on foot to adjourn the present Congress next week, or the week after that. I hope the rumor is not well founded.

On June 11 I spoke in the Senate in opposition to the adjournment plans which I understood then called for Congress to leave Washington on June 22. At that time I said:

> If adjournment should take place on the 22d of June, no power on earth but the President could call us back. Until we were called back, the sole control over our foreign policy would remain in the hands of the President. The issue is not whether we do or do not trust the President, or whether we agree with his foreign policy. It is simply that the responsibility for the sole direction of the foreign policy of the United States in days like these is too much, under a democracy, for one man to have. That would be true regardless of the party or the political belief of the man who might be President.

Fortunately, Congress remained in session. Since I made that statement on June 11, much has happened. France has fallen; the battle of Britain has begun, and no one can foresee the results of that battle. We know that we are closer to war today than we were on June 11. Moreover, the lives of millions of our boys may be jeopardized by a single mistake in our foreign policy. The entire future of our country is at stake. In a situation like this Congress has a definite responsibility, and that responsibility is to remain in session.

In his press conference on June 4, and again on June 11, the President pointedly said he could see no reason for Congress remaining in session except for the laudable purpose of making speeches. The legislation passed since that date indicates rather clearly that Congress, in June, had scarcely touched the defense program.

We have authorized a two-ocean Navy. We have authorized in two different bills the appropriation of nearly $7,000,000,000 to be spent for defense purposes. We have passed one tax bill and are about to complete action on another for taxing excess profits. We have passed legislation increasing by $500,000,000 the capacity of the Export-Import Bank to lend money to countries in the Western Hemisphere. We have passed the alien-registration bill, and the Burke-Wadsworth conscription bill. I may say that with the exception of the Burke-Wadsworth bill I have voted for all the defense measures, and I think the Congress has done a good job. We have passed the Hatch Act outlawing certain corrupt political practices. We have completed action on the transportation bill. We have amended the patent laws to protect secret inventions useful for defense. This is only part of the important legislation that has been acted upon, and all this has been done since I opposed adjournment on the floor of the Senate on June 11.

In his acceptance speech to the Democratic convention, President Roosevelt made the following statement:

> Events move so fast in other parts of the world that it has become my duty to remain either in the White House or at some near-by point where I can reach Washington and even Europe and Asia by direct telephone—where, if need be, I can be back at my desk in the space of a very few hours.

With the President taking this position, it is difficult to understand how Congress can even consider adjourning. Events happening from day to day may vitally affect the welfare and the lives of the American people. The duty of Congress is clear. It should remain in session and be available coming campaign. Our duty, however, is here. The action of Congress in remaining in session may easily be the means of keeping the United States out of war. As long as the emergency lasts, regardless of how my political future may be affected, I shall oppose any attempt at adjournment.

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I did not know that we had passed page 113, relating to personal-service corporations. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 113, section 724, to permit me to discuss for a moment the subject of personal-service corporations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent to return to page 113 of the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] recalls, we had considerable difficulty over the definition of personal-service corporations; and a great deal of complaint has come from that particular class of corporations about the way in which we finally drafted the amendment appearing in the bill. The principal complaint is that no corporation may be considered a personal-service corporation unless 80 percent of its stock is owned by the individuals who actually operate the corporation.

My attention has been called to the fact that there are a great many personal-service corporations, such as—if I may give an example—incorporated advertising agencies. Of course, a firm of lawyers may not incorporate, but it will serve as a good example of the situation. Attention has been called to the fact that many times a so-called silent partner puts up the money and demands more than 20 percent of the stock. That particular kind of personal-service corporation could not possibly qualify and get the benefits which we intend to give to personal-service corporations.

I may say that those benefits are these: Such corporations are not within the provisions of this proposed statute, but their income is taxed just the same, because, of course, the income of that class of corporations is largely distributed, and becomes taxable under personal income-tax statements.

The amendment which has been suggested to me is as follows, having identically the same definition as the bill in section 724, but adding this language:

> Whose income is to be ascribed primarily to the activities of shareholders who are regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation, all of whose stock is owned at all times during the taxable year by or for not more than 20 individuals, and whose invested capital for the taxable year is not in excess of $500,000.

If the amendment in that form had been presented to us before the Finance Committee reported the bill, I think it would have been accepted. Since that time I have discussed it with representatives of this class of corporations, and I feel that it is fair. I realize that if those who are in charge of the business of the Senate find, upon a thorough examination of the amendment, that it goes too far or does not go far enough, it may be rejected.

I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that the amendment I suggest does not change the present law at all. It uses the same language, except that it includes within personal-service corporations a corporation whose total number of members or stockholders is not more than 20, and whose capital is not in excess of $500,000; but those actively engaged need not be the owners of 80 percent of the stock.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned I am willing to let the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan go to conference. Different views have been expressed about these personal-service corporations.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I wonder why the Senator limits his amendment to corporations having $500,000 of capital stock or less?

Mr. BROWN. Because when the capital of the corporation is larger than $500,000 regardless of the statement in the statute that the capital must not be a material income-producing factor, it seemed to me—and I was the one who placed that limitation on it—that the capital is a material factor.

Mr. NORRIS. I wonder why the Senator reached that conclusion. To me it would seem that the amendment is intended to apply to cases in which the capital stock, as the amendment says, is not a material factor. If a corporation has a capital stock, let us say, of $490,000, does not the Senator think that is a case, on its face at least, in which the capital stock plays a very important part, and the amendment ought not to apply to it?

Mr. BROWN. Of course, it is necessary to draw the line somewhere. If the maximum were $100,000, I am fearful that it would be a little bit too small, and this particular sum was selected for that reason.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator's amendment is intended to apply to cases in which the capital stock is practically an immaterial factor.

Mr. BROWN. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. I can see some reason for that. It is a personal corporation, but when that kind of a corporation has a capital stock of even $100,000 it shows on its face, it seems to me, that the capital stock is important, if not the most important thing.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator did not hear the entire definition read.

Mr. NORRIS. I heard the entire amendment read.

Mr. BROWN. The first paragraph I did not read. It says:

As used in this subchapter the term "personal-service corporation" means a corporation in which the capital stock is not a material income-producing factor.

Mr. NORRIS. I heard that read.

Mr. BROWN. Therefore, a corporation could have a capital of $10,000 and still not qualify under this definition. Not only must it be a corporation having not in excess of 20 stockholders, and not only must it be a corporation having a capital stock of less than $500,000, but it must also be a corporation in which the capital is not a material income-producing factor.

Mr. NORRIS. That is where I think the contradiction comes in. It seems to me that where a corporation has a capital stock let us say of $495,000, under a provision under which capital stock is supposed not to be a material factor, there is a contradiction in the face of things. That amount of capital stock, it seems to me, would be considered very large for a corporation. Here we are dealing with a corporation where we say, to begin with, that capital stock is not a material thing; it is a personal corporation. It seems to me the amendment contradicts itself.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, these personal corporations are corporations where the personal services, the activities of the members, are the chief factor in the income. What really is the need for such a corporation having $500,000 capital stock? What do they do with the capital stock if it does not have any part to play in their business or profits?

Mr. BROWN. I presume that in large personal corporations such as an advertising agency—and it was the advertising people who discussed the matter with me, among others—there might be considerable capital.

Mr. BARKLEY. What do they do with it if it is not used in the business, and does not play some part in the activity? At the end of the year, when they distribute their earnings, do they declare a dividend on the capital, or is it all taken up in salaries; or how does it operate?

Mr. BROWN. I understand that the first paragraph of the amendment, as well as the committee amendment, takes care of that by insisting that capital must not be a material factor in the production of the income. I do not mind if it is a smaller sum than that. I have no particular interest in the matter other than that it was brought before the Finance Committee, and this seemed to me, after a careful examination of the entire situation, to be about as fair an amendment as could be devised.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I have no interest in it, either. But in dealing with corporations as to which capital stock is not a material factor, because we are dealing with personal corporations, the corporation being controlled entirely by stockholders themselves, if that kind of a corporation deserves different treatment from another, it seems to me that the capital stock is only a nominal consideration. Indeed, there should be no capital stock.

Mr. BROWN. Would the Senator say we should strike out the $500,000 limitation?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so.

Mr. BROWN. That would suit me entirely.

Mr. HARRISON. Would $100,000 be all right?

Mr. NORRIS. Why have any capital stock limitation? I do not see any use of it where the personal services of the stockholders are united, where they are together, and act as one, instead of acting separately. They are not going to use their capital stock if they have any, and if they do, then the corporation loses the attribute of being a personal corporation.

Mr. BROWN. I am satisfied and will modify my amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not a case where personal services are used instead of money, instead of capital?

Mr. BROWN. Where it is the material income-producing factor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Where personal services are the material income-providing factor.

Mr. BROWN. I thought there should be some limitation. I modify my amendment in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I would suggest $100,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 113, line 20, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out section 724 and to insert:

SEC. 724. Personal service corporations. As used in this subchapter the term "personal-service corporation" means a corporation in which the capital is not a material income-producing factor and whose income is to be ascribed primarily to the activities of stockholders who are regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation, all of whose stock is owned at all times by not more than 20 individuals.

At this point it is proposed to strike out the words "and whose invested capital for the taxable year is not in excess of $500,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, in the heading, on page 158, line 1, after the word "Title," to strike out "III" and insert "IV", and in line 3, after the word "Act", to insert "and certain provisions of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936"; so as to make the heading read:

Title IV—Suspension of profit-limiting provisions of the Vinson Act and certain provisions of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 158, after line 4, to insert:

SEC. 401. Suspension of profit-limiting provisions of the Vinson Act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 158, line 7, before the word "The", to strike out "Sec. 301."; in line 15, after the word "into", to strike out "or completed", and in line 22, after the word "effect" and the period, to insert "This section shall also apply to such contracts or subcontracts entered into before the date of the beginning of the contractor's or subcontractor's first taxable year which begins in 1940 and which are not completed before such day"; so as to make the section read:

The provisions of section 3 of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505; 34 U. S. C., sec. 496), as amended, beginning with the first proviso thereof, and section 2 (b) of the act of June 28, 1940 (Public, No. 671, 76th Cong., 3d sess.), shall not apply to contracts or subcontracts for the construction or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or any Army or Navy aircraft, or any portion thereof, which are entered into in any taxable year to which the excess-profits tax provided in subchapter E of chapter 2 of the Internal Revenue Code is applicable or would be applicable if the contractor or subcontractor, as the case may be, were a corporation, and any agreement to pay into the Treasury profits in excess of 10 percent, 12 percent, or 8 percent, as the case may be, of the contract prices of any such contracts or subcontracts shall be without effect. This section shall also apply to such contracts or subcontracts entered into before the date of the beginning of the contractor's or subcontractor's first taxable year which begins in 1940 and which are not completed before such day.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in that connection I ask that an amendment I send to the desk be agreed to. It is merely a clarifying amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 158, line 23, after the word "subcontracts", it is proposed to insert the words "which were", and on line 26, to strike out the word "day" and insert "date."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to revert to page 110. I understand the Senator from Georgia asked that the section on that page go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment at that point has not been agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have an amendment on the desk which I should like to have acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the Senate return to page 110 and to offer his amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 110, line 18, in the committee amendment, after the word "derived", it is proposed to insert "from mining or processing minerals or".

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator has conferred with us, and I think the amendment should go to conference.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 711, "excess-profits net income", by adding the following paragraph as paragraph (a) (1) (F) on page 88 and also as paragraph (b) (1) (H) on page 94:

Deductions allowed in connection with exploration, discovery, prospecting, research, or development of tangible property, patents, formulae, or processes, or any combination of the foregoing.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to that amendment going to conference.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 159, to insert:

SEC. 402. SUSPENSION OF PROFIT-LIMITING PROVISIONS OF THE MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1936, AS TO CERTAIN SUBCONTRACTS

(a) The provisions of section 505 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, shall not apply to any subcontract which would otherwise be within such provisions if such subcontract is entered into in any taxable year of the subcontractor to which subchapter E of chapter 2 of the Internal Revenue Code is applicable and if the principal contractor and the subcontractor between which such subcontract is entered into are not affiliated within the meaning of subsection (b) of this section at the time such subcontract is entered into or at any time thereafter up to and including the date of its completion; and any agreement, pursuant to which the subcontractor is required to pay to the United States Maritime Commission profit in excess of 10 percent of the contract price of any such subcontract or pursuant to which such an agreement is required to be obtained from such subcontractor relative to such subcontract, shall be without effect. This subsection shall apply only if both the principal contractor and the subcontractor are corporations.

(b) For the purposes of this section, two or more corporations shall be deemed to be affiliated (1) if one corporation owns at least 95 percent of the stock of the other or others, or (2) if at least 95 percent of the stock of two or more corporations is owned by the same interests. As used in this subsection, the term "stock" does not include nonvoting stock which is limited and preferred as to dividends.

The next amendment was, in the heading, on page 160, line 4, after the word "Title", to strike out "IV" and insert "V"; so as to read:

Title V—Amendments to Internal Revenue Code.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 160, in line 6, to change the section number from 401 to 501; in line 9, after the word "at", to strike out:

the end thereof the following new subsection.

"(l) Effect on earnings and profits of recognition of gain or loss and of receipt of tax-free distributions: Gain or loss from the sale or other disposition (after February 28, 1913) of property by a corporation shall increase or decrease its earnings and profits (for any period beginning after February 28, 1913) to, but not beyond, the extent to which such gain or loss was (under the law applicable to the year in which such sale or disposition was made) recognized in computing net income or (in the case of loss) would have been so recognized under such law if under such law the basis (including a substituted basis) for determining the loss had been the fair market value on March 1, 1913, if higher than a basis otherwise determined. Where in determining the adjusted basis used in computing such recognized gain or loss, the adjustment to the basis (or, in the case of loss, the fair market value on March 1, 1913, if such value is higher than the basis) is different from the adjustment to such basis proper for the purpose of determining earnings and profits, then the latter adjustment shall be used in determining the increase or decrease above provided."

the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(l) Definition of earnings and profits: The earnings and profits of a corporation consist of the sum of the following:

"(1) Its earnings and profits accumulated after February 28, 1913;

"(2) Its earnings and profits accumulated after March 1, 1913; plus

"(3) Increase in value of its property accrued before March 1, 1913, to the extent provided in subsection (n).

"(m) Effect on earnings and profits of recognition of gain or loss and of receipt of tax-free distributions: The gain or loss realized from the sale or other disposition (after February 28, 1913) of property by a corporation shall, for the purpose of the computation of earnings and profits (for any period beginning after February 28, 1913), of the corporation, be determined by using as the adjusted basis the adjusted basis (under the law applicable to the year in which the sale or other disposition was made) for determining gain. Gain or loss so realized shall increase or decrease the earnings and profits (for any period beginning after February 28, 1913), to, but not beyond, the extent to which such a realized gain or loss was recognized in computing net income under the law applicable to the year in which such sale or disposition was made. Where in determining the adjusted basis used in computing such realized gain or loss the adjustment to the basis differs from the adjustment proper for the purpose of determining earnings or profits, then the latter adjustment shall be used in determining the increase or decrease above provided."

On page 163, after line 2, to insert:

(n) Earnings and profits: Increase in value accrued before March 1, 1913.—If any increase or decrease in the earnings or profits (for any period beginning after February 28, 1913), with respect to any matter would be different had the adjusted basis of the property involved been determined without regard to its March 1, 1913, value, then an increase (properly reflecting such difference) shall be made in that part of the earnings and profits consisting of increase in value of property accrued before March 1, 1913.

On the same page, after line 12, to strike out:

Nothing in this subsection shall affect the extent to which accumulated earnings and profits are increased by reason of increase in value of property accrued before March 1, 1913.

On the same page, after line 18, to strike out:

(c) Under prior acts: The following rules shall be applied, for the purposes of the Revenue Act of 1938 or any prior revenue act as if such rules were a part of each such act when it was enacted, in determining the earnings and profits of a corporation for any period after February 28, 1913: Gain or loss from the sale or other disposition (after February 28, 1913) of property by a corporation shall increase or decrease its earnings and profits (for any period beginning after February 28, 1913) to, but not beyond, the extent to which such gain or loss was (under the law applicable to the year in which such sale or disposition was made) recognized in computing net income, or (in the case of loss) would have been so recognized under such law if under such law the basis (including a substituted basis) for determining the loss had been the fair market value on March 1, 1913, if higher than a basis otherwise determined. Where in determining the adjusted basis used in computing such recognized gain or loss, the adjustment to the basis (or, in the case of loss, the fair market value on March 1, 1913, if such value is higher than the basis) is different from the adjustment to such basis proper for the purpose of determining earnings and profits, then the latter adjustment shall be used in determining the increase or decrease above provided. Where a corporation receives (after February 28, 1913) a distribution from a second corporation which (under the law applicable to the year in which the distribution was made) was not a taxable dividend to the shareholders of the second corporation, the amount of such distribution shall not increase the earnings and profits (for any period beginning after February 28, 1913) of the first corporation in the following cases:

(1) No such increase shall be made in respect of the part of such distribution which (under such law) is directly applied in reduction of the basis of the stock in respect of which the distribution was made.

(2) No such increase shall be made if (under such law) the distribution causes the basis of the stock in respect of which the distribution was made to be allocated between such stock and the property received.

Nothing in this subsection shall affect the extent to which accumulated earnings and profits are increased by reason of increase in value of property accrued before March 1, 1913.

And on page 165, after line 12, to insert:

(c) Under prior acts: For the purposes of the Revenue Act of 1938 or any prior revenue act the amendments made to the Internal Revenue Code by subsection (a) of this section shall be effective as if they were a part of each such revenue act on the date of its enactment. Nothing in this subsection shall affect the tax liability of any taxpayer for any year now pending before, or heretofore determined by, the Board of Tax Appeals, or any court of the United States.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 501. EARNINGS AND PROFITS OF CORPORATIONS

(a) Under Internal Revenue Code: Section 115 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsections:

(l) Definition of earnings and profits: The earnings and profits of a corporation consist of the sum of the following:

(1) Its earnings and profits accumulated after February 28, 1913;

(2) Its earnings and profits accumulated before March 1, 1913; plus

(3) Increase in value of its property accrued before March 1, 1913, to the extent provided in subsection (n).

(m) Effect on earnings and profits of recognition of gain or loss and of receipt of tax-free distributions: The gain or loss realized from the sale or other disposition (after February 28, 1913) of property by a corporation shall, for the purpose of the computation of earnings and profits (for any period beginning after February 28, 1913) of the corporation, be determined by using as the adjusted basis the adjusted basis (under the law applicable to the year in which the sale or other disposition was made) for determining gain. Gain or loss so realized shall increase or decrease the earnings and profits (for any period beginning after February 28, 1913) to, but not beyond, the extent to which such a realized gain or loss was recognized in computing net income under the law applicable to the year in which such sale or disposition was made. Where in determining the adjusted basis used in computing such realized gain or loss the adjustment to the basis differs from the adjustment proper for the purpose of determining earnings or profits, then the latter adjustment shall be used in determining the increase or decrease above provided. Where a corporation receives (after February 28, 1913) a distribution from a second corporation which (under the law applicable to the year in which the distribution was made) was not a taxable dividend to the shareholders of the second corporation, the amount of such distribution shall not increase the earnings and profits (for any period beginning after February 28, 1913) of the first corporation in the following cases:

(1) No such increase shall be made in respect of the part of such distribution which (under such law) is directly applied in reduction of the basis of the stock in respect of which the distribution was made.

(2) No such increase shall be made if (under such law) the distribution causes the basis of the stock in respect of which the distribution was made to be allocated between such stock and the property received.

(n) Earnings and profits—increase in value accrued, before March 1, 1913: If any increase or decrease in the earnings or profits (for any period beginning after February 28, 1913), with respect to any matter would be different had the adjusted basis of the property involved been determined without regard to its March 1, 1913, value, then an increase (properly reflecting such difference) shall be made in that part of the earnings and profits consisting of increase in value of property accrued before March 1, 1913.

(b) Effective date of amendment: The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1938.

(c) Under prior acts: For the purposes of the Revenue Act of 1938 or any prior revenue act the amendments made to the Internal Revenue Code by subsection (a) of this section shall be effective as if they were a part of each such revenue act on the date of its enactment. Nothing in this subsection shall affect the tax liability of any taxpayer for any year now pending before, or heretofore determined by, the Board of Tax Appeals, or any court of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 165, line 21, to change the section number from 402 to 502; and on page 166, line 5, after the word "section", to strike out "723" and insert "724", so as to read:

SEC. 502. Tax of shareholders of personal-service corporations.

The Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting after section 373 the following new supplement:

SUPPLEMENT S—TAX OF SHAREHOLDERS OF PERSONAL-SERVICE CORPORATIONS

SEC. 391. Applicability of supplement.

If a personal-service corporation (as defined in section 724) is exempt under such section for any taxable year from the excess-profits tax imposed by such subchapter, the provisions of this supplement shall be applicable with respect to each shareholder of such corporation who was a shareholder in such corporation on the last day of such taxable year of the corporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 169, line 18, after the word "section", to strike out "723" and insert "724", so as to read:

SEC. 396. Shareholders' tax paid by corporation.

If a personal service corporation is exempt for any taxable year under section 724 from excess-profits tax, it shall, at the time of filing its return, pay to the collector an amount equal to the amount that would be required by section 143 (b) or section 144 to be deducted and withheld by the corporation if any amount required by this supplement to be included in the gross income of the shareholder had been, on the last day of the taxable year of the corporation, paid to the shareholder in cash as a dividend. Such amount shall be collected and paid in the same manner as the amount of tax due in excess of that shown by the taxpayer upon a return in the case of a mathematical error appearing on the face of the return.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the clerk will renumber the sections where required. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CONNALLY obtained the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment of the committee has not been disposed of. That committee amendment as amended was passed over because the Senator from Georgia desired to offer an amendment. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Georgia to offer his amendment?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to offer an amendment for the purpose of keeping open for conference the rather restricted terms and provisions of section 721 on page 109. I offer the amendment for that purpose. I had prepared an amendment which I started to offer as a substitute for this section and the succeeding section, but thinking that perhaps this matter would be effected by the parliamentary situation in conference, I propose an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 24, page 109, it is proposed to add the following:

or (6) any other abnormality of income or capital.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the committee amendment is agreed to. The committee amendment is open to further amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, do I understand that the committee amendments have now been agreed to?

Mr. ADAMS. No, Mr. President; I have an amendment I wish to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment is still open to amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to offer an amendment on page 110. I understood that the committee amendment as a whole was open to amendment. I understood the Chair to say that the language on page 110 was held open so that amendments could be offered to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct, that the committee amendment was held open. The Senator from Colorado desires to offer an amendment to the committee amendment. That is in order.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to a suggested amendment which would put in the bill provisions which I am told are in the present statute. I was going to ask that there be added, after the word "Secretary" in line 8, on page 110, the following:

Provided, That the amount of such abnormal income under subsection (3) of this section shall be attributed equally among the preceding years (not exceeding 5 years) during which such research, development, prospecting, or exploration was being conducted.

In other words, instead of leaving it solely to the discretion of the Secretary, that is a specific provision that the abnormal income shall be divided over the preceding years.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to the amendment going to conference, but I wish to say——

Mr. ADAMS. I accept the warning in advance.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator restricts his amendment to 5 years when he could have provided a period of 10 years.

Mr. ADAMS. I shall be glad to change my amendment from 5 years to 10 years.

Mr. HARRISON. Or 20 years.

Mr. ADAMS. We will say 10 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modified amendment of the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, acting for the clerk, I shall read it myself. After the word "Secretary", in line 8, page 110, I propose to insert the following:

Provided, That the amount of such abnormal income under subsection (3) of this section shall be attributed equally among the preceding years (not exceeding 10 years) during which such research, development, prospecting, or exploration was being conducted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to the committee amendment is agreed to, and the Chair will again announce that the committee amendment, which embraces titles I and II, is open for further amendment. (After a pause.) Without objection, the committee amendment, as amended, is agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY obtained the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Do I understand the Chair to rule that amendments to the committee amendment are not now in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. The Chair has so ruled, and it has been announced for the last half hour.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I know the Chair has been announcing that, but some of us have been claiming the attention of the Chair and have been proposing amendments. I think the opportunity really has not been presented for the Senate to determine——

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator want to offer an amendment?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have sought to have an opportunity to make some inquiry of the chairman of the committee with respect to the effect of the carry-over provisions. It is obvious, as we all know, that this is a very complicated bill, a bill which is difficult to understand, a measure which is written in the language of the tax experts, and not in the ordinary language of laymen or Senators or lawyers. It is difficult for us to follow it all. There is page after page of the bill which I doubt if any Member would find it easy to examine. I do not feel that the opportunity of some of us to examine the bill should be foreclosed merely upon the announcement by the Chair, "Without objection, the door is closed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Wyoming permit the Chair to make a statement? The Chair has called the attention of Senators more than once to this very condition, and just now made the announcement, and waited in order that Senators could be heard. The Chair has no desire to be arbitrary.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, I understand that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If any Senator desires to offer an amendment, the Chair is willing to entertain it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I know perfectly well that the Chair has no desire to be arbitrary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentary situation is as the Chair stated.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But my point is that the announcement of the Chair was made while Members of the body were trying to claim the attention of the Chair.

Mr. CONNALLY. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator from Texas will be good enough to pardon me for a moment, my understanding is that if the Chair wishes to close off debate it becomes necessary to say to the Senate, "Is there any objection?" In this case the statement merely was, "Without objection, the amendment is agreed to."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator object?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I certainly object at this time to the foreclosure of debate and examination of this amendment, because it may be that I shall desire to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In order to save time, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to be reconsidered. We will spend an hour here debating the question whether or not it is still open.

Mr. CONNALLY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Are there any other amendments to the committee amendment pending or lying on the desk?

Mr. KING. I have an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to is reconsidered. The committee amendment as amended is open to amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming whether there is something he wants to offer in the nature of an amendment, or does he simply wish to ask a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know whether I can answer the question or not, but I shall try.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to ask the chairman of the Finance Committee to what extent the bill, as it has been reported, affects the carry-over provisions of the pending law with respect to corporations which are engaged, let us say, in agricultural pursuits—livestock corporations, for example.

Mr. HARRISON. The only part of the bill where the carryover provision is effective is in the provision which applies to the seasonal canning business, the vegetable, fruit, and fish businesses. Quite a strong argument was made before the committee by a representative of those interests. We sought to take care of it through the general relief provisions which we have written into the law, but the experts said the provision could not be drafted quickly to apply in the general relief provisions. Then they said they thought the provision we made would correct the situation, and we have sought to help them through giving them a 1-year carry-over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That deals with what particular industry?

Mr. HARRISON. That deals with the seasonal canning business, and pertains to vegetables, fruits, and fish, and that one exception, a provision covering that industry, was put in the bill. We would much rather have preferred to put it in under the general relief provisions where so many other items are carried.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I ask the Senator whether the bill makes any change in the present law with respect to carryovers? Does the bill as it has been reported by the committee make any change in the present law with respect to carryovers upon normal income?

Mr. HARRISON. It does not.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So that the carry-over provisions of this measure refer exclusively to excess profits?

Mr. HARRISON. Absolutely, and only for 2 years. That pertains only to this one industry.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, it is obvious that if we are bringing to pass an excess-profits tax we are dealing with abnormal profits under abnormal provisions, but I wanted to be sure that there was nothing in the bill which would adversely affect the normal activities of normal businesses which are not likely to gain any excess profits because of the condition in which the country finds itself.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has that assurance.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before offering the amendments which I propose to offer, I wish to invite the attention of the Senate to the effect of the amendments, and to the imperative necessity for such amendments.

The House bill and the committee amendment permit the taxpayer to elect either the average-earnings method or the invested-capital method of computing its taxes for any taxable year. This is not satisfactory, because the election must be exercised on the taxpayer's return, at a time when the taxpayer is not in a position to estimate with reasonable accuracy the consequences of the election.

While taxpayers will undoubtedly elect the method which at the time of the return appears to produce the lesser tax on the basis of the computations which can then be made, future developments may drastically change the result. For example, after the return has been filed changes may be made by the Commissioner, the Board of Tax Appeals, or the courts, in base-period income, taxable-year income, or invested capital, which will make the basis elected by the taxpayer less favorable than the alternative method.

Much injustice and hardship will be obviated if the taxpayer is not foreclosed by a previous election, but is allowed to pay the lesser tax. The proposed amendment will accomplish this result.

I will very frankly say that the bill requires some amendment. One of the experts has said that such an amendment would require considerable eliminations and additions to the bill. I do not agree with him in that respect. I think the three or four amendments which I shall offer would accomplish the result.

I shall read the amendments which I offer to the committee amendment.

On page 95, in the committee amendment, I propose to strike out, beginning with the comma at the end of line 17, through the parenthetical expression ending in line 22, and to insert:

Be an amount computed under section 713 or section 714, whichever results in the lesser tax under this subchapter. (For rule in case of certain reorganizations of corporations not qualified under the preceding sentence, see sec. 741.)

That is the first amendment. The same principle is applied in the next two amendments, which I shall read.

On page 96, in the committee amendment, I propose to strike out beginning with the comma in line 12, through the period in line 14, and to insert:

Be an amount computed under section 713 or section 714, whichever results in the lesser tax under this subchapter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator offering all his proposed amendments as one amendment?

Mr. KING. Yes.

The next amendment, which is a companion to the other two, is on page 124, line 22, in the committee amendment, to strike out section 741 and to insert:

SEC. 741. Computation of credit.

In addition to the corporations whose excess-profits credit may, under section 712 (a), be computed under section 713 or section 714, whichever results in the lesser tax under this subchapter, the excess-profits credit of a taxpayer which is an acquiring corporation which was in existence on the date of the beginning of its base period shall similarly be computed under section 713 or section 714, whichever results in the lesser tax under this subchapter.

The next companion amendment which I offer is on page 125, in the committee amendment, to strike out all after the comma in line 7, through the comma in line 9, and to insert:

Or which is entitled under section 741 to have its excess-profits credit computed under section 713 or section 714, whichever results in the lesser tax under this subchapter.

I have had the proposed amendments examined by an expert, and he states that they all relate to the same subject matter. All they do is to extend the period of election beyond the period of 1 year, so that the taxpayer may choose the lesser tax.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, before these amendments are voted upon, let me say that it is very difficult to follow them as they are read from the floor; but, if I correctly understand them, this is the picture:

The bill starts by giving every corporation in the United States a "heads they win, tails the Treasury loses" choice between the base-period method and the invested-capital method. If I correctly understand the amendments offered by the Senator from Utah, they mean that a corporation does not have to elect; that it may file a return on the 15th of March under whatever method it believes is favorable to it; and that if for any reason at all—through any change, or anything which happens in the next year—it develops that the 1940 liability for excess-profits tax would have been less under the method which it did not elect, it may then claim the privilege of the choice which it did not take and pay the lesser tax.

It seems to me that the amendment would result in delaying the collection of the tax, because corporations might come along 6 months after the 15th of March and say, "We would pay less tax under the choice we did not take, and therefore we are entitled to pay the lesser tax." If the tax should be paid in advance, the corporation would demand a refund. Such amendments would add confusion worse confounded to a bill which is already in such a state of confusion that it will be the worst headache the administrative branch of the Government ever had.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have concluded.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not wish to modify the criticism which the Senator has made against some of the rather inexplicable provisions of the bill. However, the amendments, which I have suggested at the instance of a number of taxpayers, grow out of the fact that when they pay their tax they pay it on the construction or interpretation which has been placed upon the law by the Department. Perhaps a year later, after the tax has been paid, and after the taxpayer has exercised his judgment and followed all the information which he could obtain from the Department, the court will have ruled differently, or the Department will have changed its rulings. The taxpayer pays his tax according to the rulings of the Department today. A year from now the rulings may be different, and he may be entitled to a lesser tax. The only question is whether or not we shall hold open the final settlement beyond the period of a year.

If the taxpayer were at fault, then I should entirely agree with the criticism which the Senator from Wisconsin levels against the amendments. However, if the taxpayer follows the procedure of the Department and pays the tax according to the rule of thumb of that day, and a year or two later the courts reverse the ruling, or the Department changes it, or the Commissioner promulgates a different ruling, and the taxpayer is not at fault, the amendments simply provide that the taxpayer may avail himself of the advantages of the changed rulings, just as he would be subjected to the disadvantages of a new ruling.

I have no interest in the matter, but I can see how many injustices might arise. When we give the taxpayer the election to pay the lesser amount, and he pays it, and then the court overturns the ruling, or the Department changes its ruling, he is faced with the problem of making a different settlement.

Mr. President, I do not care to add anything further. The question is whether or not the taxpayer, after he has done all he can, may avail himself of the provision of the bill which permits him to pay the lesser tax.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that nothing the Senator from Utah has said—with all due deference to him—has changed my view of the effect of the amendments. The returns would be held open for a year beyond the taxable year, and a tremendous number of claims could be made for assessment of the tax on a different basis than the one which the taxpayer elected. It seems to me that the collection of revenue would be delayed, and that great confusion would be added.

Mr. KING. If the taxpayer is at fault, I am sure the Senator's position is correct; but if the taxpayer is not at fault, it seems to me he ought not to be denied the right which the law gives him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, at my suggestion a few moments ago an amendment was made after line 24 on page 109. That amendment was agreed to. I desire to substitute for that amendment an amendment to the same general effect and to insert it at another place in the bill, and then to ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which has already been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment heretofore agreed to is reconsidered; and without objection, it is withdrawn.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the amendment I now send to the desk be inserted at the place indicated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 20, page 111, it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 721½. The Commissioner shall also have authority to make any adjustments which abnormally affect income or capital, and his decision shall be subject to review by the United States Board of Tax Appeals.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I will say in connection with this amendment what I said with respect to the other one. It is intended to supplement the relief provisions of section 721, and, inasmuch as there is a question whether any additional relief could be provided in conference, I have offered this amendment so that there may be open to further consideration this relief section in the event the conferees desire to do so and find it to be advisable.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I understand the purpose of the Senator's amendment and his desire to have it in conference, but it seems to me that having provided a carry-over provision for the mining companies and canners, taken together with the relief section which is already in the bill this amendment would only have the result of making the excess-profits tax which is proposed to be levied by this bill less likely to yield revenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker pro tempore had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which is on the clerk's desk, and I desire to modify the amendment in two particulars before it is read.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I inquire if this is the Senator's bond-tax amendment?

Mr. BROWN. It is.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought I had the floor to offer my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas did have the floor——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yielded to other Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas yielded to several other Senators, and when the last business was finished the Chair did not observe the Senator from Texas requesting recognition, but the Senator from Michigan did so, and the Chair recognized him.

Mr. BROWN. I will endeavor to be as brief as possible, I will say to the Senator from Texas, particularly, if he will vote for my amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will not do that, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to modify the amendment by adding after the name "Mr. CLARK of Missouri" in the caption the name of Mr. BYRD as one of those offering the amendment. I also desire to amend in line 1, after "Title VI," by striking out "tax-exempt securities", and inserting "taxation of public-bond interest".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified as suggested by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, may we dispense with the reading of the amendment? It is 13 pages long, and I think I can readily explain what is in it; or is it necessary that the amendment be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan ask if it is necessary to have the amendment read?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may ask unanimous consent that the reading be dispensed with and that the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BROWN. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment may be dispensed with and that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment offered by Mr. BROWN (for himself, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. BYRD, Mr. LEE, and Mr. MILLER) is as follows:

At the end of the bill insert the following new title:

"TITLE VI—TAXATION OF PUBLIC BOND INTEREST

"SEC. 601. This title may be cited as the 'Public Bond Tax Act of 1940.'

"SEC. 602. Section 22 (b) (4) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended to read as follows:

"'(4) Tax-free interest: To the extent provided in section 116 (b), interest upon obligations issued by (A) a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing; or (B) a corporation organized under act of Congress, if such corporation is an instrumentality of the United States; or (C) the United States or any of its possessions. Every person owning any of the obligations enumerated in clause (A), (B), or (C) shall, in the return required by this chapter, submit a statement showing the number and amount of such obligations owned by him and the income received therefrom, in such form and with such information as the Commissioner may require.'

"SEC. 603. Sections 25 (a) (1) and (2) of the Internal Revenue Code are amended to read as follows:

"'(1) Interest on United States obligations: The amount received as interest upon an obligation of the United States if such interest is included in gross income under section 22, and if under the act authorizing the issue of such obligations, as amended and supplemented (including the amendatory and supplementary provisions of sec. 605 of the Public Bond Tax Act of 1940), such interest is exempt from normal tax.

"'(2) Interest on obligations of instrumentalities of the United States: The amount received as interest upon an obligation of a corporation organized under act of Congress, if (A) such corporation is an instrumentality of the United States; and (B) such interest is included in gross income under section 22; and (C) under the act authorizing the issue of such obligation, as amended and supplemented (including the amendatory and supplementary provisions of sec. 605 of the Public Bond Tax Act of 1940), such interest is exempt from normal tax.'

"SEC. 604. Section 116 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting after subsection (a) a new subsection to read as follows:

"'(b) Tax-free interest: Interest upon obligations issued before February 1, 1941, by a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing; or by a corporation organized under act of Congress, if such corporation is an instrumentality of the United States; or by the United States or any of its possessions. In the case of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917 (other than postal-savings certificates of deposit), and in the case of obligations of a corporation organized under act of Congress the interest shall be exempt only if and to the extent provided in the respective acts authorizing the issue thereof, as amended and supplemented (including the amendatory and supplementary provisions of section 605 of the Public Bond Tax Act of 1940), and shall be excluded from gross income only if and to the extent it is wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this chapter. For the purposes of this subsection:

"'(1) In determining whether an obligation is issued after January 31, 1941, and whether an obligation is issued after the date of enactment of the Public Bond Tax Act of 1940 (hereinafter called "enactment date"), it shall in either case be considered to be issued after such date, if any part of the payment therefor is received by the obligor after such date, or delivery thereof is made by the obligor after such date.

"'(2) Obligations which merely replace lost, mutilated, defaced, or destroyed obligations, or obligations of larger or smaller denominations, and obligations in registered form or with coupons which merely replace obligations with coupons or in registered form, shall be treated as if they were the obligations replaced.

"'(3) (A) If the terms of an obligation issued before February 1, 1941, the maturity of which on enactment date is later than January 31, 1941, are, after enactment date, changed so as to increase the principal amount or interest rate or to extend the maturity, then such obligation shall (as to interest accruing for any period after the date of the change or January 31, 1941, whichever is later) be considered as issued after such later date.

"'(B) In the case of an obligation issued after the enactment date and before February 1, 1941, such obligation shall (as to interest accruing for any period after January 31, 1941) be considered as issued after January 31, 1941, if any part of the proceeds of the issue of which the obligation is a part, or if any obligation of the issue, is devoted to the retirement or refunding of an obligation the maturity of which on enactment date was later than July 31, 1941. For the purposes of this subparagraph, July 31, 1941, shall be considered the maturity, on enactment date, of an obligation the interest on which ceases to run before August 1, 1941, by reason of such obligation being called for redemption in accordance with the terms thereof as they existed on enactment date.

"'(4) If an obligation is issued after January 31, 1941 (hereinafter called "refunding obligation"), and if—

"'(A) the issue of which it is a part (hereinafter called "new issue") is issued for the purpose of refunding one or more obligations (hereinafter called "refunded obligations"); and

"'(B) all refunded obligations have the same exemption expiration date, as defined in subparagraph (J); and

"'(C) no obligations, other than those of the new issue, have been issued for the purpose of refunding any of the refunded obligations; and

"'(D) the aggregate principal amount of the new issue is not in excess of the aggregate principal amount of the refunded obligations; and

"'(E) interest on each of the refunded obligations ceases (by reason of such obligation, being called for redemption, in accordance with the terms thereof as they existed on enactment date, or the date of issue, whichever is later) to run upon a date not more than 7 months after the date upon which interest on the refunding obligation begins to run; and

"'(F) interest on each of the refunded obligations, for the period at the end of which it ceases to run by reason of such call for redemption, is considered as interest on an obligation issued before February 1, 1941; and

"'(G) the refunding obligation, in its terms, states the exemption expiration date of, and identifies, the refunded obligations; and

"'(H) the interest rate on the refunding obligations for any period ending on or before the exemption expiration date of the refunded obligations is not higher than the interest rate which any of the refunded obligations had, or would (if such obligation had not been called for redemption) have had for the corresponding period;

then the refunding obligation shall be considered as issued before February 1, 1941, as to so much of the interest as accrues for any period ending before or on the exemption expiration date of the refunded obligations, and shall be considered as issued after January 31, 1941, as to the remainder of such interest. For the purposes of this paragraph—

"'(I) several obligations shall be considered as one issue, only if each is identical with all the others in maturity, interest rate, terms and conditions, and recitals, but the fact that the denominations differ, or that some are registered and some in coupon form shall be disregarded.

"'(J) "exemption expiration date" means—

"'(i) with respect to a refunded obligation issued before February 1, 1941, the date of maturity which the obligation had on January 31, 1941;

"'(ii) with respect to a refunded obligation issued after January 31, 1941, the date as of which interest thereon would (if the obligation had not been called for redemption) have ceased to be considered as interest on an obligation issued before February 1, 1941.'"

"SEC. 605. Taxation of obligations of United States and its instrumentalities.

"(a) Consent to State and local taxation: The United States hereby consents to the taxation, under an income tax, of interest upon, and gain from the sale or other disposition of, obligations issued after January 31, 1941, by the United States, any Territory or possession or political subdivision thereof, the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, by any duly constituted taxing authority having jurisdiction to tax such interest and gain, if such taxation does not discriminate against such interest or gain because of its source.

"(b) Federal income taxation: Interest upon, and gain from the sale or other disposition of, obligations issued after January 31, 1941, by the United States, any Territory or possession or political subdivision thereof, the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, shall not have any exemption, as such, and loss from the sale or other disposition of such obligations shall not have any special treatment, as such, under Federal income-tax acts now or hereafter enacted.

(c) For the purposes of this section—

(1) In determining whether an obligation is issued after January 31, 1941, and whether an obligation is issued after the date of the enactment of this act (hereinafter called "enactment date"), it shall in either case be considered to be issued after such date, if any part of the payment therefor is received by the obligor after such date, or delivery thereof is made by the obligor after such date.

(2) Obligations which merely replace lost, mutilated, defaced, or destroyed obligations, or obligations of larger or smaller denominations, and obligations in registered form or with coupons which merely replace obligations with coupons or in registered form, shall be treated as if they were the obligations replaced.

(3) (A) If the terms of an obligation issued before February 1, 1941, the maturity of which on enactment date is later than January 31, 1941, are, after enactment date, changed so as to increase the principal amount or interest rate or to extend the maturity, then such obligation shall (as to interest accruing for any period after the date of the change or January 31, 1941, whichever is later) be considered as issued after such later date.

(B) In the case of an obligation issued after enactment date and before February 1, 1941, such obligation shall (as to interest accruing for any period after January 31, 1941) be considered as issued after January 31, 1941, if any part of the proceeds of the issue of which the obligation is a part, or if any obligation of the issue, is devoted to the retirement or refunding of an obligation the maturity of which on enactment date was later than July 31, 1941. For the purposes of this subparagraph, July 31, 1941, shall be considered the maturity, on enactment date, of an obligation the interest on which ceases to run before August 1, 1941, by reason of such obligation being called for redemption in accordance with the terms thereof as they existed on enactment date.

(4) If an obligation is issued after January 31, 1941 (hereinafter called "refunding obligation"), and if—

(A) the issue of which it is a part (hereinafter called "new issue") is issued for the purpose of refunding one or more obligations (hereinafter called "refunded obligations"); and

(B) all refunded obligations have the same exemption expiration date, as defined in subparagraph (J); and

(C) no obligations, other than those of the new issue, have been issued for the purpose of refunding any of the refunded obligations; and

(D) the aggregate principal amount of the new issue is not in excess of the aggregate principal amount of the refunded obligations; and

(E) interest on each of the refunded obligations ceases (by reason of such obligation being called for redemption, in accordance with the terms thereof as they existed on enactment date, or the date of issue, whichever is later), to run upon a date not more than 7 months after the date upon which interest on the refunding obligation begins to run; and

(F) interest on each of the refunded obligations, for the period at the end of which it ceases to run by reason of such call for redemption, is considered as interest on an obligation issued before February 1, 1941; and

(G) the refunding obligation, in its terms, states the exemption expiration date of, and identifies, the refunded obligations; and

(H) the interest rate on the refunding obligations for any period ending on or before the exemption expiration date of the refunded obligations is not higher than the interest rate which any of the refunded obligations had, or would (if such obligation had not been called for redemption) have had, for the corresponding period;

then the refunding obligation shall be considered as issued before February 1, 1941, as to so much of the interest as accrues for any period ending before or on the exemption expiration date of the refunded obligations, and shall be considered as issued after January 31, 1941, as to the remainder of such interest. For the purposes of this paragraph—

(I) several obligations shall be considered as one issue, only if each is identical with all the others in maturity, interest rate, terms and conditions, and recitals, but the fact that the denominations differ, or that some are registered and some in coupon form shall be disregarded;

(J) "exemption expiration date" means—

(i) with respect to a refunded obligation issued before February 1, 1941, the date of maturity which the obligation had on January 31, 1941;

(ii) with respect to a refunded obligation issued after January 31, 1941, the date as of which interest thereon would (if the obligation had not been called for redemption) have ceased to be considered as interest on an obligation issued before February 1, 1941.

(d) The provisions of this section shall, with respect to any obligation, be considered as amendatory of, and supplementary to, the respective acts or parts of acts authorizing the issue of such obligation as amended and supplemented.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, this is a very important matter, and I should like to have a quorum call if the Senator will yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BROWN. I should prefer the Senator not do that because I shall make as brief a statement as I can and I am hopeful the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. LEE. Very well.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, this amendment is based upon the message of the President of the United States which was submitted to Congress on April 25, 1938. Shortly after that message was received a special committee was designated by the Senate to investigate the subject of the exemption of municipal and State bond interest and Federal bond interest from the provisions of the income-tax laws both of the United States and of the several States. The President in his message urged that that exemption be eliminated once and for all.

The committee held hearings the following February and March. The hearings were extensive. We heard from representatives of the Treasury Department; we heard from many distinguished economists, professors of political economy of the large universities and many colleges of the Nation, and other citizens. The hearings cover over 700 pages. After a full hearing of those who advocated the adoption of the policy which I am advocating here today, we heard from the opposition. I think 40 or more State attorneys general or their representatives appeared. Professor Lutz, of Princeton University, was employed by the representatives of the State to appear before the committee and advocate the position taken by the various States and municipalities. Other citizens appeared.

Your committee reported to the Senate on the subject of a public-salary tax, and, as Senators know, there was written into the tax laws of the United States a complete elimination of any form of exemption for public salaries, both those received from the States and municipal governments and those received from the United States itself. Also, as Senators know, we completely eliminated any exemption of the salaries of Federal judges, so that the present occupant of the chair, the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], will have to pay an income tax just as the others of us do when he ascends the bench in the eastern district of Washington.

Your committee, Mr. President, filed a preliminary report on the question now involved 2 days ago. I did not file the final report because the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who dissents from the views of the majority of the committee, desired to look over the final report before it was filed. However, the substance of the report, without our conclusions, is contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of day before yesterday. Members of the committee consisting of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and myself, forming the majority, believe that there should be no more tax-exempt bonds. The contrary view is held by the junior senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] and the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. President, I desire briefly, without going into detail, to outline what this amendment proposes to do. I may say that the amendment has the approval of the Treasury Department; I think it is safe to say that it has the approval of the administration. It was drafted by the experts of the Treasury Department, the experts of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, and the experts in the legislative counsel's office.

The amendment would do three things: First, it would prevent any further issue of tax-exempt bonds by the Federal Government. It would prevent any future issue of tax-exempt bonds by any State government or any subdivision of the State governments including municipalities, school districts, and so forth. It would prevent any further issue of tax-exempt bonds on the part of any Federal governmental agency or on the part of any other governmental corporation. There would be no more Federal tax-exempt State or municipal bonds issued if this amendment were written into the law. All would be subject to Federal income taxation.

Second, the amendment would permit full income taxation, on the same basis as other bonds are taxed, by all the States of the Union. In other words, the plan, like the Public Salary Tax Act, is reciprocal in its nature. The Federal Government could tax the income of State bonds and the State governments could tax the income from Federal bonds.

Third, the amendment would permit the refunding of any present outstanding bonds when it is desirable from the standpoint of the municipality, the State, or the bond-issuing authority to do so in order to get a lower rate of interest or better terms, provided the maturity dates of the bonds are not extended by the new issue. That is the only exception made. It was felt that that was in the interest of public economy, and was necessary as a matter of fair treatment of the municipalities and the States involved.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much revenue is estimated to come from an amendment of this sort?

Mr. BROWN. The question is a difficult one to answer. If we had no tax exemptions, and had had none for 25 years last past, let us say, we should now be receiving somewhere between two hundred and four hundred million dollars per year in taxes as a Federal Government. The Treasury finds it almost impossible to estimate what the State governments would have been receiving from that source. The Senator from Tennessee realizes that the full effect of this amendment will not be felt for many, many years, because there is agreement on the part of all my committee and on the part of all the experts that no attempt should be made to tax presently outstanding bond issues except insofar as they are now taxable and no such tax is proposed here. The Treasury estimates that when the full effect is felt, and we have no outstanding tax-exempt bonds, the annual yield to the Treasury will be close to $400,000,000 if there are outstanding the same number of bonds that are now outstanding. To be fair, it should be stated that there should be deducted from that amount the probable additional cost to the Federal Government and to the State governments by way of a probable higher interest rate than would otherwise be charged.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says there are already outstanding many billions of dollars of Federal obligations, and he provides for their refunding. The Federal Government will not be able to pay off those bonds in any considerable amount except over a long period of years. Most of them will have to be refunded.

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. When we come to refund them, however, does it not inevitably follow that we shall have to refund them at a higher interest rate than we would have to pay but for this amendment?

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator is correct in his statement; but the net gain in taxes to the Treasury will be very much greater than the loss due to the higher interest rate.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is a matter of speculation, of course; is it not?

Mr. BROWN. I do not think it is a matter of speculation.

Mr. CONNALLY. When Mr. Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury and was urging this very thing in the form of a constitutional amendment to tax State issues of bonds, he testified in the printed hearings in the House many years ago that if we should tax such securities the increased annual interest rate would be anywhere from one-half of 1 percent per annum to 1 percent per annum. The difficulty about the matter is that the tax being an indeterminate amount—not being certain, but varying according to the wish of the Congress—the bond buyer has to figure not merely what he is paying at the moment but what he may have to pay in time of emergency or war or any other unusual demand upon the Treasury. Consequently, he figures his interest rate to take care not merely of the present tax rate but of any possible increase in the tax rate, and the poor little taxpayers in the States will pay that increased interest rate, and the Federal Government, if it gets any tax, will get the benefit of the tax. The reciprocal advantage of taxing Federal bonds will not help the agricultural and nonindustrial States very much, because nearly all the Federal bonds which will be taxed by the States will be in New York or Philadelphia or Boston or Chicago.

I thank the Senator for permitting me to interrupt him.

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator from Texas that the increase in the interest rate is estimated by the Treasury Department at from one-quarter of 1 percent to one-half of 1 percent.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the annual increase; and if the bond issue were out for 40 years, and the increase were one-half of 1 percent, a very large amount of principal outlay would be paid in that period.

Mr. BROWN. Of course, the tax which the State gets and the tax which the Federal Government gets are also annual and will come back.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Michigan will yield to me to answer that point with a case which has been worked out upon the basis of the testimony of Mr. Hanes, who at that time was in the Treasury Department.

The Government is losing millions in revenue because of these tax exemptions. By taxing incomes which are now exempt, the Government will gain much more in revenues than it will lose on account of increased costs, but, of course, those who favor tax exemption argue that if we do not exempt the bonds from taxation, we must pay higher interest rates in order to sell them and that this increased cost offsets the gain in revenue.

But that is not true, because only those with large incomes are able to purchase bonds, and these large incomes are subject to heavy surtaxes which would return much more in revenues that the additional interest would cost. Mr. Hanes, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, reported that it would not be necessary to increase the interest rate more than one-half of 1 percent at the most and perhaps as little as one-fourth of 1 percent.

Therefore, I repeat, the Government now loses much more in revenue that it gains in lower interest rates.

Of course, the savings in revenue would differ according to the tax laws of the different States, and also according to the amount of the income of the purchaser; but let us take a specific example.

I ask the attention of the Senator from Texas to what I am about to say.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. I am listening, and I also heard him when he testified before the committee.

Mr. ADAMS. While the Senator is stopping for a moment, may I answer his mathematics?

Mr. LEE. The Senator cannot answer a point until it is made.

Mr. ADAMS. I thought the Senator had made it. I beg his pardon.

Mr. LEE. I will give a specific case.

As stated before, the saving in revenue differs according to the taxes of each State. I took the case of Oklahoma, because I was familiar with conditions in that State.

Suppose a school district in Oklahoma issues $1,000,000 worth of bonds bearing 3-percent interest, and suppose the entire issue is purchased by a man having an income of $500,000. If the bonds are tax exempt, the Government loses each year in income taxes $21,197.77; whereas, if the bonds were taxable, the increased cost in interest charges would average only $3,750 a year, according to the estimates of the Treasury Department. The difference between $21,197.77, which would be the loss in revenue if the bonds were tax exempt, and $3,750, which would be the increased cost if the bonds were not tax exempt, is $17,447.77. In other words, the net loss in revenue on that $1,000,000 issue of tax-exempt bonds is $17,447.77 each year. Then suppose these bonds were issued for 20 years. The total amount of net loss in revenue on that $1,000,000 issue of tax-exempt bonds would be $348,955.40.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BROWN. I do.

Mr. ADAMS. I merely desire to call attention to a part of the statistics mentioned by the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from Michigan; that is, that this amendment might increase by one-half of 1 percent the rate which the Government would have to pay.

Mr. BROWN. From one-quarter of 1 percent to one-half of 1 percent.

Mr. ADAMS. From one-quarter to one-half. I think one-half is nearer correct. The Government is now borrowing money on its short-time paper for less than 1 percent; that is, it is putting out a large part of its short-time paper—not its bonds—at less than 1 percent. It is putting out its bonds at, roughly, 2 percent. The result is that an increase of one-half of 1 percent on the short-time paper would be a 50-percent increase in the Government's interest payments. Upon the Government's bonds it would be a 25-percent increase in interest payments. We are now paying interest of over a billion dollars a year, running up toward a billion and a quarter dollars. If 25 percent is added to that amount and 50 percent on some of it, we shall have an increase in the interest payments of the Federal Government running up to anywhere from $250,000,000 to $400,000,000.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator realizes that the present money market is probably not normal; that the present interest rates are much lower than they ordinarily would be. This estimate was given before the committee 2 years ago. If the estimate were given on the basis of the present-day rates it would be much less, in my judgment, than as stated here.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. LEE. I disagree with the able Senator from Colorado on his figures, because to a man with a large income the tax-exempt privilege is worth very much more than the interest. For example—and these figures were taken from the statement of the former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Hanes—to a man with an income of $500,000 a tax-exempt bond bearing 3-percent interest is worth more than a non-tax-exempt bond bearing 10-percent interest; whereas to a man with an income of $5,000 the tax-exempt privilege is worth only one-tenth of 1 percent.

Mr. ADAMS. Has the Senator made his point, so that I may ask him a question?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. Are not the taxpayers now compelled to pay surtaxes on their interest on Government bonds?

Mr. BROWN. On some of them.

Mr. LEE. Yes; on some of the bonds.

Mr. ADAMS. In other words, the Senator's argument is based on different rates on different persons, while as to the bonds on which they pay surtaxes it does not matter whether the taxpayer be rich or poor.

Mr. LEE. Of course, the Senator knows that the persons who buy Government bonds in any amount at all are those whose incomes are in the higher brackets, so that the tax-exemption privilege is worth more than the interest.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I desire to get on. Does the Senator from Colorado desire to ask another question?

Mr. ADAMS. Merely to make one statement of fact as to those who own Government bonds. There are $18,000,000,000 of Government bonds outstanding, representing one-third of the Government obligations, which are held by the banks of the country. They represent the investments of the deposits in the banks, and the deposits in the banks come in the main from people of small incomes. That is demonstrated by the fact that according to the statistics from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation 98 percent of the accounts of the banks are for amounts less than $5,000, because they are insured. So that it is through the banks that the small investor buys Government bonds.

Mr. BROWN. The exemption laws are such that very little change will be made in regard to the investments of banks. The big change will come in the class of holders where the great bulk of these bonds are held. The chart before me shows that approximately $20,000,000,000 out of a total of perhaps $65,000,000,000 of all tax-exempt securities are held by individuals and, as the Senator from Oklahoma points out, that is where the great evil in this situation lies.

I will take just a few more minutes to finish this subject, and then I hope we will be able to vote.

The advantage of tax exemption to a person with a large income, compared with one with a small income, may be seen by comparing the position of a married man with an income from other sources of $500,000, and a married man with an income of $5,000. I want the Senator from Colorado to hear this. To the man with a net income of $500,000 a 3 percent fully tax-exempt security affords the same income that a corporation bond bearing 10.7 percent interest would afford, if he could get it, which he cannot. That situation is one which appeals to me as being exceedingly unfair.

I shall not extend this argument, but I do say that the existence of tax-exempt securities, Federal, State, and municipal, enables many wealthy people of the country to escape taxation to a very large extent. Only 13 percent of the tax money raised in the United States for all purposes by the Federal Government, State governments, and all their subdivisions is based upon a progressive principle. Eighty-seven percent of our taxes are in the form of consumption taxes, real-estate taxes, and other taxes of that character, in connection with which the income of the taxpayer's ability to pay is not taken into consideration. The present proposal is the first constructive step to be taken since the adoption of the income-tax law principle which will eliminate or tend to eliminate that unfair situation.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I merely wanted, if the Senator will make it a little clearer, to find out how he reaches the conclusion that a tax-exempt income of 3 percent is the equivalent of a 10-percent return on a corporate bond, that is, the reasoning and the mathematics of it, because I was somewhat startled at the statement.

Mr. BROWN. I will read the testimony before our committee.

Mr. ADAMS. I would rather have the opinion of the Senator than any testimony.

Mr. BROWN. It results in this way in the calculation of the net return which the income-tax payer gets for himself: The rich man with an income of $500,000 a year, owning a 3-percent tax-exempt bond, is better off, because of the income-tax exemption, than he would be if he had a corporation bond which bore 10.71 percent interest. That is the advantage which comes from the possession of a tax-exempt security by a man in the high income-tax brackets as against the man with an income of $5,000, who, of course, is not subject to the higher tax brackets.

Mr. President, I ask that at this point in my remarks, to save the time of the Senate, the general statement which I now send to the desk be printed in the same size type as the remarks I have been making. It is an explanation of the bill, sentence by sentence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GENERAL STATEMENT

Mr. BROWN. This amendment adds a new title VI to the bill dealing with tax-exempt securities. In general, it first amends the Internal Revenue Code so that the income derived from future issues of Federal and State obligations will be taxable in the same manner and to the same extent as other income is taxable under Federal income-tax laws; second, permits the States to tax the income derived from future issues of Federal obligations in the same manner and to the same extent as other income is taxable under the State income-tax law; and third, permits future refunding of outstanding obligations by granting a tax-exemption to the refunding obligations which are issued hereafter similar to the tax exemption now enjoyed by such refunded obligations.

DETAILED EXPLANATION

Section 601 of the amendment contains the short title, "Public Bond Tax Act of 1940."

Section 602 of the amendment amends section 22 (b) (4) of the Internal Revenue Code—relating to exclusions from gross income—to provide that the interest upon obligations issued by a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, or a corporation organized under act of Congress if such a corporation is an instrumentality of the United States, or the United States or any of its possessions, shall be excluded from the computation of gross income but only to the extent provided for in section 116 (b) of such code. The practical result of this amendment, when read in conjunction with the amendment made by section 604, is to include in the computation of gross income interest on such obligations which are issued after January 31, 1941, and by such inclusion to make such interest taxable.

Section 603 of the amendment amends section 25 (a) (1) and (2) of the Internal Revenue Code to provide that interest on United States obligations and on obligations of instrumentalities of the United States which are issued after January 31, 1941, shall not be allowed as a credit against net income for purposes of the normal tax.

Section 604 of the amendment amends section 116 of the Internal Revenue Code by inserting a new subsection to provide that tax-free interest upon the above-mentioned obligations shall include only interest upon such obligations that were issued prior to February 1, 1941. Interest upon such obligations which are issued after January 31, 1941, with the exceptions hereafter noted, will be included in gross income and subject to tax. Assuming that this bill becomes law this month, a period of something over 4 months is allowed in which obligations may be issued the interest on which will be tax-free.

Subparagraph (1) of such section provides that an obligation is to be considered as issued after January 31, 1941, and after the date of enactment of this act, if any part of the payment therefor is received by the obligor after such date or delivery thereof is made by the obligor after such date.

In other words, if either payment or delivery is made after such dates issuance of the obligation shall be deemed to have occurred after such date.

Subparagraph (2) provides for the replacing of lost, mutilated, defaced, or destroyed obligations, or obligations of larger or smaller denomination, and obligations in registered form or with coupons which merely replace obligations with coupons or in registered form, and that such replacing obligations are to be treated as if they were obligations replaced. In other words, continuing the tax exemption that was enjoyed by the lost or mutilated obligations.

Subparagraph (3) (A) of such section provides that if the terms of an obligation issued before February 1, 1941, the maturity of which on the date of enactment of this act is later than January 31, 1941, are, after such enactment date, changed so as to increase the principal amount or interest rate or to extend the maturity, then such obligation shall—as to interest accruing for any period after the date of the change or January 31, 1941, whichever is later—be considered as issued after such later date. This subparagraph is inserted to prevent the refunding of obligations prior to February 1, 1941, and thereby securing a greater tax exemption than was enjoyed by the refunded obligations.

Subparagraph (3) (B) permits bona fide refunding obligations occurring between the date of enactment of this act and February 1, 1941. It continues the tax exemption of refunded obligations where the refunding obligation is issued between such enactment date and February 1, 1941, and the maturity of the refunded obligation is not later than July 31, 1941. For example, if a municipality has called its bonds on December 1, 1939—such bonds having a maturity date of July 30, 1941—the municipality will be authorized under this subparagraph to issue refunding obligations for such matured obligations and such refunding obligations will be tax exempt as if they were an original issue prior to February 1, 1941. If the maturity date of such refunded obligations is later than July 31, 1941, the refunding obligations (as to interest accruing for any period after January 31, 1941) shall be considered as issued after January 31, 1941, and shall be taxable.

Subparagraph (4) of such section applies to refunding obligations issued after January 31, 1941. The interest on such refunding obligations will be tax exempt if the following conditions are met:

First. All refunded obligations have the same exemption expiration date, as defined in subparagraph (J) of this section.

Second. The refunding obligations are the only ones that have been issued for the purpose of refunding any of the refunded obligations and the aggregate principal amount of the refunding issue is not in excess of the aggregate principal amount of the refunded obligations.

Third. Interest on each of the refunded obligations ceases to run upon a date not more than 7 months after the date upon which interest on the refunding obligation begins to run. This relief provision allowing a 7-month period is an arbitrary figure, but which is believed long enough to permit bona fide refunding operations since under the usual terms of such obligations interest ceases to run at the end of 6 months after they are called for redemption.

Fourth. The refunding obligation, in its terms, states the exemption, expiration date of, and identifies, the refunded obligations. This provision is intended to give the Treasury and the purchaser of such refunding obligation a check on its exemption expiration date.

Fifth. The interest rate on the refunding obligations for any period ending on or before the exemption expiration date of the refunded obligations is not higher than the interest rate which any of the refunded obligations had for the corresponding period.

If all of the above conditions are met by a refunding obligation issued after January 31, 1941, such refunding obligation shall be considered as issued before February 1, 1941, as to so much of the interest as accrues for any period ending before or on the exemption expiration date of the refunded obligation, and the interest therefrom shall be tax exempt for such period but such obligation shall be considered as issued after January 31, 1941, as to the remainder of such interest accruing after such exemption expiration date and the interest accruing after such date shall be taxable.

The above provisions of the amendment also permit the issuance of tax-exempt refunding obligations for refunding obligations issued after January 31, 1941. For example, obligations which were issued in 1930 with a maturity date of 1970 could be refunded in 1945 and the interest from such refunding obligations would continue to be tax exempt up to 1970. If, in 1950, to take advantage of lower interest rates it was decided to refund the 1945 refunding obligations, new 1950 refunding obligations could be issued therefor and the interest from such new refunding obligations would continue to be tax exempt until 1970 which was the maturity date of the original obligations. Interest on such refunding obligations which accrued after 1970 would be taxable.

Section 605 of the amendment permits the taxation, under an income tax, of interest upon, and gain from the sale or other disposition of, Federal obligations issued after January 31, 1941, by any duly constituted taxing authority having jurisdiction to tax such interest and gain, if such taxation does not discriminate against such interest or gain because of its source.

Subsection (b) of such section provides that interest upon, and gain from the sale or other disposition of, such obligations shall not have any exemption, as such, and loss from the sale or other disposition of such obligations shall not have any special treatment, as such, under Federal income-tax acts now or hereafter enacted.

Subsection (c) of such section provides for the same relief and limitations, with respect to the taxation by the States of interest from such Federal obligations issued after January 31, 1941, as is provided in section 604 of this amendment with respect to Federal taxation on the interest derived from obligations mentioned in such section.

Subsection (d) of such section provides that the provisions of Federal laws authorizing the issuance of such obligations shall be considered as amended and supplemented by the provisions of this section.

Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senate that the constitutional question involved is one which could call for a great deal of discussion. It is my judgment that the recent decisions of the Supreme Court in the Public Salary Tax Act cases indicate clearly that if the amendment shall be adopted and the bill passed, and the matter shall be taken to the courts of the United States, there is little doubt in my opinion that they will uphold the power of Congress to lay a tax upon any form of income from bonds issued by State governments or municipalities. There has never been any doubt about the power of the Government to tax the income from its own bonds.

I have here what I consider to be a fairly thorough analysis of the constitutional side of the question, but I know the chairman of the Committee on Finance is anxious to have the tax bill disposed of, and unless the constitutionality shall be challenged by Senators on the floor I do not intend to go into that question. If the constitutionality is challenged, I will answer. I dislike to take the time of the Senate to discuss the legal questions unless the constitutionality is assaulted.

I may say that it is the view of a majority of our committee that Congress may pass such legislation, and that there will be no successful challenge by any taxpayer in the Supreme Court of the United States on constitutional grounds.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have no desire or purpose to prolong the discussion, but as a member of the special committee which had under consideration the proposed legislation, I very heartily endorse the admirable presentation made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], and take this occasion to say that I favor most heartily the taxation of securities which are now tax exempt.

I wish to take this occasion to make some comment with respect to the pending tax bill. I desire to call attention to what seems to me to be the utter inadequacy of our financial program to meet the demands of the crisis now confronting the country. The pending bill is the second new tax bill of this year. It will produce for the next year approximately $300,000,000. The first tax bill, known as the national-defense tax, will yield $700,000,000, making the estimated receipts from all new taxes adopted since the beginning of the present crisis, $1,000,000,000. The total tax receipts from all sources, incuding the new taxes, for the coming year are estimated to be $6,600,000,000.

At this session of Congress we have either appropriated or authorized for national defense the sum of approximately $16,000,000,000. In addition, $7,000,000,000 has been appropriated for the regular expenses of government and for Departments not connected with national defense.

Another substantial additional obligation has also been incurred by the Government in giving new authority to various Government corporations to issue new bonds guaranteed in full by the Federal Government. Such expenditures made by various Government corporations are not included either in the Budget or the direct public indebtedness.

An appropriation bill is still pending for $1,700,000,000 for the financing of the law calling for universal military training and for other purposes.

It is possible and probable that other appropriations will be made before the present fiscal year expires on July 1, 1941. I think it is therefore reasonable to assume that this session of Congress will directly obligate the Federal Government, either by appropriations or authorizations, to the amount of at least $25,000,000,000, and this is exclusive of obligations issued by the Government corporations, and guaranteed by the United States Treasury. All of this will not be expended in the current year, but the authorization continues valid. It is impossible to estimate at this time how much of such obligations will be expended in the current fiscal year. This will depend, of course, upon the speed with which the appropriations and authorizations for national defense are actually expended.

If the war crisis increases in intensity, as now appears likely, and our defense program is still further speeded up, it is conservative, I think, to estimate that the cash expenditures during the current fiscal year will exceed $15,000,000,000, and against this, including proceeds of the pending bill, the tax revenue will be approximately $6,600,000,000, leaving a deficit of at least eight billions and perhaps more, by far the largest in peacetime history, and approaching the deficit in the first year of the last World War.

Notwithstanding the imperative need of spending colossal sums for national defense, no effort has been made, either by Congress or the administration, to reduce nondefense spending, to eliminate waste and extravagance now existing in governmental expenditures. In fact, many of the nondefense departments have actually increased their expenditures for the current year above last year. The Senate rendered inoperative and defeated an amendment nearly unanimously reported by the Senate Finance Committee, and offered by me, to reduce nondefense spending to the extent of 10 percent, and to divert the funds thus saved to national defense. This would have saved approximately $500,000,000 annually. It should be recalled too that the present relief expenditures will be exhausted on March 1, and a new appropriation then will be necessary.

The Government of the United States has only three ways to finance the great expenditures now confronting us. The first and most logical is to reduce to the utmost degree nondefense spending not essential to our defense program and eliminate extravagance. This was rejected. The second is to increase taxation. After weeks of study the net result is that only $1,000,000,000 in new taxes will be derived by tax legislation passed by the Congress. It is very significant that even with the increases in taxation, the total revenue of the Federal Government will not be sufficient to pay for purely nondefense spending—that is to say, after every item of national defense is eliminated by the Federal Government, such nondefense expenditures will be approximately $7,000,000,000, while the revenue with increased taxation will be $6,600,000,000, leaving a shortage of nearly one-half billion dollars in the payment of the ordinary and strictly peacetime expenditures of our Government. This means that every dollar of national-defense spending is being added to the public debt, notwithstanding the fact that the public and the taxpayers have been informed that the emergency taxation enacted at the present session of Congress was for the purpose of financing national defense. This startling picture of the inadequacy of our financial program should deeply concern every thoughtful person in America. No sensible person can blind himself to the fact that for many years to come this Nation is facing colossal expenditures for national defense. Many of such expenditures, such as maintenance of the greatly increased Army and Navy, will be constant and recurring from year to year. The war equipment purchased now may be soon out of date, requiring new expenditures for such equipment.

As I see it, the imperative need confronting our country is to adopt a financial preparedness program which will be adequate to pay, at least in part, for our defense expenditures, and prevent the inevitable bankruptcy which will follow if the present haphazard and loose fiscal policies are continued.

I will support the amendment offered by the special committee on the taxation of tax-exempt securities, headed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], and of which I am a member. I have long believed that all future issues of hitherto tax-exempt securities should bear a proportionate share of the public burden of taxation. This is no time to continue to exempt from taxation any substantial class of our citizens when others are being called upon to make supreme sacrifices for the national security.

I introduced 7 years ago an amendment to the Constitution providing for the taxation of tax-exempt salaries and tax-exempt securities. Tax-exempt salaries have already been taxed.

The pending amendment provides for the taxation of future issues of hitherto tax-exempt securities, and this should be promptly enacted. It will equalize the taxation burden and prevent the exemption from taxation of those who are favored by the ownership of tax-exempt securities, and at the same time will add substantially as the years go on to the revenue of the Government. The total of all tax-exempt securities, either completely or partially exempt from Federal taxation, amounts to upward of $66,000,000,000.

Realizing as I do the inadequacy of the pending tax bill, I will cast my vote for it. We should know, however, that this is simply another patch added to the crazy quilt of Federal taxation. It will yield only enough next year to pay the cost of three battleships.

I am voting, Mr. President, for this legislation because I feel that the need of additional revenue is imperative. I, of course, desire to see this revenue raised without unnecessary hardship on the taxpayers. The sooner, however, the Congress and the country realize that a businesslike and sensible revision of the tax system must be effected, the better prepared we will be to prevent a collapse of our financial system, which is inevitable unless our fiscal policies are reformed and the operation of the Government placed on a sounder business basis.

I wish to pay my tribute and express my appreciation to the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee [Mr. HARRISON] for his patience and ability in conducting the hearings and in the consideration of this measure. The bill, as imperfect as it is, may have been much worse except for his wise and efficient leadership.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate by discussing the amendment at any length. I expect there will probably be no yea-and-nay vote on it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Texas that perhaps he is in error in his assumption that there will be no yea-and-nay vote on the amendment if its adoption shall be insisted on.

Mr. CONNALLY. Perhaps it is only my speculation that there will not be a yea-and-nay vote. In any event, I wish the RECORD to show that I am opposed to the amendment offered by my distinguished and esteemed friend the junior Senator from Michigan. In the first place, the Federal Government now has and has always had the constitutional power to tax any of its own securities. The Treasury Department, so the Senator from Michigan says, favors this measure. Yet the Treasury Department, on each occasion when it issues bonds, asks the Congress to allow it to issue the bonds tax-free, except with respect to surtaxes.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator will recall that Mr. Morgenthau came before the Finance Committee and stated that none of the bonds issued to finance the defense program would be tax exempt; that they would be taxable.

Mr. CONNALLY. So far as he is concerned; yes; but the Congress will have the final determination.

Mr. BROWN. He is the officer to determine it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; that is true; but here we are, facing an emergency, and the first thing we do is to tax our own credit and make it more difficult to borrow money, and everyone, even the Senator from Michigan, admits that we will have to pay a higher rate of interest.

However, what I rose to say is that I shall not vote for any bill which gives the Federal Government power to tax State, county, and municipal bonds. The Senator from Oklahoma presented a classic case from the testimony of Mr. Hanes in which he showed that a little school district in Oklahoma which issued a certain amount of bonds, would have to pay only $3,000 additional interest annually. It is said that, while the school district would have to pay that additional amount, it could tax Federal bonds.

The taxpayers of the little local school district will be hard pressed and hard put to meet expenditures for their school district. How many Federal bonds will be found in that school district for them to tax in order to recoup the $3,000 they would have to pay because of increased interest?

The Senator from Oklahoma himself said that no one but the rich—men with $500,000 incomes—will buy these bonds. How many $500,000 incomes will there be in his little country school district, which would have to pay $3,000 more each year in increased interest rates and perhaps not get back a cent?

Mr. President, I do not conceive that the Congress has the constitutional power to tax the States, to tax their credit, or to tax their subdivisions, counties, or municipalities. Therefore I am bitterly opposed to that portion of the amendment which seeks to levy taxes upon the securities and evidences of credit of States and municipalities and counties.

I could make and have heretofore made rather extensive arguments on the constitutional aspects of the bill, but I shall not undertake to do that at this time. It is not only unconstitutional, but it is the most unsound theory that has been evolved in politics for many years. If the Senator will bear with me for one more moment, I shall be through. Years ago, when Mr. Andrew W. Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury, he urged Congress to enact a constitutional amendment to tax Federal, State, and county bonds. Mr. Mellon testified in a hearing held by a House committee that to tax them would raise the interest rate from one-half of 1 percent to probably 1 percent annually. He also testified as to the income which the Federal Government would receive. In the discussion of that measure in the House of Representatives I took pains to go back and get the Government records during the World War, with respect to the issuance of Federal obligations, and what did they reveal? They revealed that we issued the first war bonds in 1917. They were 3½-percent tax-free bonds. They were free of all Federal taxes. Later on we issued 4¼-percent bonds and 4½-percent bonds and 4¾-percent bonds which were subject to surtax.

I went back and found out how much interest the Government had paid on the issues carrying the high rates. The reason why they had to carry the high rates was that they were subject to surtaxes. I found that the Federal Government had paid out in increased interest rates, over 3½ percent, more than $100,000,000 annually.

How much tax did the Government get back? I had the Treasury give me the figures as to the amount of tax realized; and the Government got back $25,000,000. It cost the Federal Government $100,000,000 in increased interest rates, and it got back $25,000,000.

What is the further answer to this question? It is said that tax-exempt bonds are owned by men of very large incomes. Most of the Federal bonds now outstanding are subject to surtax rates, and we already capture this income in the hands of the large taxpayer in the higher brackets with higher rates in the higher brackets.

Where are these bonds owned? The bulk of the bonds are not owned by persons in the higher brackets. As the Senator from Colorado pointed out, they are owned by insurance companies, banks, fiduciaries, trust companies, and foundations. Do those institutions pay any surtax? They do not. They pay a flat corporation tax; and by putting surtaxes on the bonds we shall not realize a single cent of increased revenue from those sources. Yet in the meantime we shall have increased the interest rate, because if the ordinary taxpayer buys any bonds at all he will require an increase in the interest rate. So we shall not get the revenue we think we shall get. On the other hand, we shall add to the interest rate not only of the Federal Government but of every State, every county, and every municipality in the Nation.

It is said, "We will levy on State bonds, but we will grant reciprocity. We will let the States tax Federal bonds." Where are the Federal bonds? Are they down in the little school district in Oklahoma? They are in Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, and Boston. The States in which those cities are located will receive the benefits of whatever reciprocity there is in the bill. The undeveloped regions and the agricultural sections of the Nation which have not already built their schoolhouses, their roads, and their courthouses will be penalized. The older-settled communities will receive the benefit of the taxes, and the undeveloped sections of the country will pay an increased interest rate, with scarcely any return at all.

Mr. President, I shall not elaborate these views. I have held them for years. I know it is unpopular to say that one is opposed to doing away with tax-exempt securities. That is a very fine political shibboleth for those who do not understand the question. Mr. Alexander Hamilton—I do not ordinarily quote Mr. Alexander Hamilton—in his famous report on manufactures gave the best answer, and the fundamental answer, to this question. Mr. Alexander Hamilton said that no nation can afford to tax its own securities, its own power to raise money, and its own power to finance itself in time of war, or in any other great emergency or crisis. When we tax the income from the Government's own securities we are taxing the Government itself, except that we shall never get back in taxes as much as we pay out in increased interest rates. Let me tell the Senate why.

The amount of the tax is indeterminate. We do not know what it will be. It will be what Congress says it will be, or what the States say it will be. If the man who is contemplating the purchase of a bond knows that the tax is to be 10 cents, he can figure accordingly, and add the 10 cents. However, if he knows that it will bear a tax of 10 cents this year, but that next year it may bear a tax of 25 cents, inevitably in his calculations he will add a margin of safety to take care of the possibility that the rates may be increased. The result is that the interest rate is vastly increased above any possible return in the form of taxes.

Mr. President, I apologize to the Senate; but those are my views in rough outline. I wish I had the time and the opportunity to elaborate them. I should like to quote from court decisions. I should like to go back and quote from some of the hearings which have been held on the bill.

I believe that the amendment is unsound; and, believing that it is unsound, I must vote against it.

Mr. LEE obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I am deterred from saying what I was about to say, so we shall not be able to finish consideration of the bill tonight, which I had hoped we could do. There is some opposition to the course which I was about to take in the interest of expediting the legislation.

I was about to say that we all realize the importance of getting this legislation on the statute books. The House has not presented this amendment to us. I have no idea how the House conferees would stand on the bill if the amendment should be agreed to, but I had thought that the best piece of strategy, if it should meet with the approval of the Senate, would be to permit the amendment to go to conference. I am perfectly willing to do so, but if other Senators desire to call for a yea-and-nay vote, they have a right to do so, of course. May we have a voice vote on this question?

Mr. ADAMS. No.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator would not be willing to have the amendment go to conference?

Mr. ADAMS. No. I wish to make a few observations when the Senator from Oklahoma shall have concluded.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I think that is all I can say for the present. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, if a farmer does not have enough money to pay the ad valorem tax on his farm for 1 year, 2 years, 3 years, or 4 years, his farm is taken away from him. But a man holding enough tax-exempt bonds might have an income of $500,000 a year, and he would not be required to pay one thin dime of tax. To my mind that is not quite fair. I have always looked upon exemption as a special privilege to a special class. Who benefits by exemption from taxation on a bond? Does a man with an income of $5,000 benefit? Whoever heard of a man with only $5,000 being able to own any bonds? Perhaps he owns a few baby bonds, or savings stamps, but the exemption privilege means nothing to him. Exemption means a special privilege to a special group. To a man with an income of $500,000, the tax-exempt privilege on a 3-percent bond is worth more than 7-percent interest on the bond, according to Mr. Hanes, former Under Secretary of the Treasury.

Reference has been made to the little school district in Oklahoma. On a bond issue of $1,000,000, running for 20 years, the Government would recover $385,955.40 more than it would lose in increased interest rates.

In my State, if a man has an income of $5,000, he must pay an income tax of $146.22 if the income is from some other source than tax-exempt bonds. Suppose he is a storekeeper and he makes $5,000 a year. He must pay a total income tax of $146.22. But if he has $5,000 income from tax-exempt securities he does not pay a thin dime. Is that right? Is it fair? Is not that a special privilege?

Why is tax exemption worth so much to a man with an income of $500,000? It is because any additional income he receives is thrust in the upper brackets, which puts him in the surtax brackets. The surtax is so heavy that he would rather have a tax-exempt bond at 3-percent interest than a taxable bond at 10-percent interest.

How much is the exemption privilege worth? To a man with an income of $5,000 it is worth one-tenth of 1 percent, and no more, says Mr. Hanes. So we have a two-price system, in a sense. For the rich man we have the equivalent of a 10-percent bond. For the poor man we have the equivalent of a 3-percent bond.

Exemption means special privilege to a special class, and I am "agin" it.

A married man living in Oklahoma, if he has an income of $10,000 from renting apartment houses, after paying the ad valorem taxes, after paying the paving taxes, pays an income tax of $737.85; but if he has an income of $10,000 derived from tax-exempt bonds he pays not a thin dime in income taxes. Is that right? There are some men in Oklahoma, courageous, daring, fellows who will take a chance sometimes to lose and sometimes to gain in the oil game. I refer to the oil men of Oklahoma. If a married man engaged in the oil business, after he pays all his property taxes, has an income of $50,000 derived from the oil business, he pays an income tax of $11,132.41; but if he has a $50,000 income derived from tax-exempt securities he does not pay a thin dime. Is that right? Is that fair?

The Federal Government is losing literally millions of dollars of revenue because of this bond exemption. Today we have altogether in tax-exempt securities in the United States, on which the Government is not realizing the full tax that it could, a total of between sixty billion and sixty-six billion dollars of wealth. According to the economists, we have in this country only $350,000,000,000 of wealth. Take from that sum from $60,000,000,000 to $66,000,000,000 of wealth which the Government cannot reach, which belongs to the richest class, who ought to be paying the most on a graduated income-tax basis, and we can understand why it is necessary to put an extra heavy burden on the poor man.

Not only that, Mr. President, but this tax-exemption privilege is throttling business in two ways. First, it is an incentive for capital to stay in the banks, which are now literally bursting with money. It cannot be forced into circulation because it is not taxed in the banks; it is earning an income and happily sleeping there, no matter how many businesses want to start. Suppose a man desires to start a business and wants some capital. He has to go out on the bond market in competition with tax-exempt securities; he would have to sell securities that are taxable, which would make an additional burden on business, expansion, and operation. Therefore, it is unfair, it is economically unsound.

I have seen more than one home owner lose his home because it was taxed from under him when he did not have an income. The home was not furnishing an income, and he lost it because he could not pay the taxes on it. I have seen others drawing income merely by clipping coupons; the only labor they do in a year is merely clipping coupons from tax-exempt securities.

Mr. President, it is not only unfair and unjust to continue this system, but it is economically unsound.

Alexander Hamilton may have said that the Government should not tax its own securities, but Alexander Hamilton also said of the people, "You cannot trust them." Members of the party which claims descent from him, great financiers, are being quoted. Let me quote another great financier of that great party, Andrew Mellon. I do not believe that in financial ability even Alexander Hamilton could hold a candle to Andrew Mellon; and yet Andrew Mellon advocated stopping the tax-exempt privilege.

President Roosevelt sent a message to the Congress on April 25, 1938, and asked us to pass a law to stop the tax-exempt privilege. Other Presidents have advocated it, but this President wants to do something about it. So he sent a message to Congress asking us to pass legislation stopping the issuance of tax-exempt securities. This same body has voted against extending any further the tax-exemption privilege to Federal bonds. The proposal carried here by one majority. We had it up for several years, and finally the Finance Committee appointed a special committee, headed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], and, after holding hearings, they brought in a bill, which is now in the form of an amendment, a well-prepared bill, which does not involve any violation of contracts, for a man who now has a tax-exempt bond and who bought it with the understanding that it was tax-exempt would continue to enjoy that privilege during the lifetime of the bond. That would be no violation of the contract; but when that bond matured and another bond was issued in its place, then it would be issued with the fair and full notice that the income from it would be taxable.

What about the people of this country?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the Senator does not want to leave the impression that the Senate has not adopted an amendment substantially similar to this which would tax not only the income from Federal bonds but would also tax the income from State bonds just as this amendment proposes to do?

The Senator referred to an amendment which related to Federal bonds. I want the Senate to know and the RECORD to show that an amendment substantially similar to this has heretofore been adopted by the Senate.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator for that contribution. This body and the other body have also passed a bill taxing State employees' income and granting the privilege to the States to tax the income of Federal employees. That is a part of the program recommended by President Roosevelt in his message of April 25, 1938.

The people have spoken on this subject when they adopted the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution. What did the sixteenth amendment, upon which the people of the United States passed, say? That amendment gave Congress the power—I quote:

To lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived.

Can the English language make it any plainer than that—

To lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived.

Yet by judicial interpretation it was ruled that that did not mean what it said; that it did not mean "from whatever source derived." Therefore it is necessary for us to act upon the question again.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to make a comment there. The Supreme Court of the United States has never passed upon the question of tax-exempt bonds since the sixteenth amendment was adopted. It was urged in one of the opinions by one of the judges of the Supreme Court that the phrase in the sixteenth amendment "from whatever source derived" permitted the taxation of salaries of a Federal judge. A majority of the Court held in that case that that phrase did not permit the taxation of the salary of a Federal judge. That decision has been completely overturned, as the Senator from Oklahoma knows. I should not want the impression left that the Supreme Court had ever passed upon the power of Congress to tax the interest upon a State or a municipal bond under the sixteenth amendment, for Congress has never passed such a law since the sixteenth amendment became a part of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator, and I agree that the decision was not exactly on that point, but it certainly did raise a barrier. In his message of April 25, President Roosevelt said:

This seemingly obvious construction of the sixteenth amendment, however, was not followed in judicial decisions by the courts. Instead, a policy of reciprocal tax immunity was read into the sixteenth amendment. This resulted in exempting the income from Federal bonds from State taxation and exempting the income from State bonds from Federal taxation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that in the old case of McCulloch against Maryland, which is pretty close to this question, the court held that the State could not tax the instrumentalities of the Federal Government.

Mr. BROWN. The decision in McCulloch against Maryland was quite a few decades before the adoption of the sixteenth amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is very true, but the principle that was announced has always been considered as sound unless one can contort the language of the sixteenth amendment "from whatever source derived" to overthrow that doctrine. I do not think anybody who voted on the sixteenth amendment ever dreamed that it would be so construed.

Mr. BROWN. I disagree with the Senator on that proposition. I think the contortion of the language was entirely upon the other side, the side of those who take the position the Senator from Texas takes.

Mr. LEE. Let me quote a little further from President Roosevelt in his message to Congress of April 25, 1938:

Whatever advantages this reciprocal immunity may have had in the early days of this Nation have long ago disappeared. Today it has created a vast reservoir of tax-exempt securities in the hands of the very persons who equitably should not be relieved of taxes on their income. This reservoir now constitutes a serious menace to the fiscal systems of both the States and the Nation because for years both the Federal Government and the States have come to rely increasingly upon graduated income taxes for their revenues.

Both the States and the Nation are deprived of revenues which could be raised from those best able to supply them. Neither the Federal Government nor the States receive any adequate, compensating advantage for the reciprocal tax immunity accorded to income derived from their respective obligations and offices.

Later in the speech the President said:

Tax exemptions through the ownership of Government securities of many kinds—Federal State, and local—have operated against the fair or effective collection of progressive surtaxes. Indeed, I think it is fair to say that these exemptions have violated the spirit of the tax law itself by actually giving a greater advantage to those with large incomes than to those with small incomes.

Later in the speech the President said:

I, therefore, recommend to the Congress that effective action be promptly taken to terminate these tax exemptions for the future. The legislation should confer the same powers on the States with respect to the taxation of Federal bonds hereafter issued as is granted to the Federal Government with respect to State and municipal bonds hereafter issued.

On the 25th of March of this year the Supreme Court handed down a decision requiring an employee of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to pay a State income tax on his salary, although his salary was paid by the Federal Government. This decision removes tax exemption on the salaries of State and Federal employees. Therefore, part of the President's objective has been accomplished by judicial decision. Thus, the injustice and inequity of tax exemption on State and Federal salaries has been removed. I hail that decision with hearty approval. However, we have won only a partial victory in our efforts to distribute the tax burden fairly and justly according to ability to pay.

The next and more important objective is to remove tax exemption of incomes derived from Government bonds.

The theory of some is that if every person who derives his income from interest on State bonds is required to pay an income tax on that income, just the same as any other person must pay, such a levy would be a tax upon the State itself. That is, of course, the old stock argument of those who benefit by such exemptions.

On that point the quarrel is with the Supreme Court. I quote from the recent decision of the Supreme Court, referred to above, in which Mr. Justice Stone said:

The theory, which once won a qualified approval, that a tax on income is legally or economically a tax on its source, is no longer tenable.

Although that case decided the question of income tax with respect to salaries, the fundamental principle of taxation seems to apply with equal force to the question of taxing income derived from Government bonds.

I quote more fully from the opinion of Mr. Justice Stone on the point that taxation of income is not taxation on its source:

The present tax is a nondiscriminatory tax on income applied to salaries at a specified rate. It is not in form or substance a tax upon the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or its property or income, nor is it paid by the corporation or the Government from their funds. It is laid upon income which becomes the property of the taxpayer when received as compensation for his services; and the tax laid upon the privilege of receiving it is paid from his private funds and not from the funds of the Government, either directly or indirectly. The theory, which once won a qualified approval, that a tax on income is legally or economically a tax on its source, is no longer tenable.

Continuing that thought, Mr. Justice Stone said later in the opinion:

So much of the burden of a nondiscriminatory general tax upon the incomes of employees of a government, State or National, as may be passed on economically to that government, through the effect of the tax on the price level of labor or materials, is but the normal incident of the organization within the same territory of two governments, each possessing the taxing power. The burden, so far as can be said to exist or to affect the Government in any indirect or incidental way, is one which the Constitution presupposes, and hence it cannot rightly be deemed to be within an implied restriction upon the taxing power of the National and State Governments. * * *

This would seem to indicate that the Supreme Court is ready to interpret the sixteenth amendment to mean that Congress has power to lay and collect a tax on a person's income even though it is derived from State and local bonds. Therefore, for that reason and for the other reasons stated, I am supporting this amendment, which I believe has been carefully drawn. I believe it will effect the purpose we want to accomplish. I believe it will meet the constitutional requirements. I believe it will meet with the approval of economists who have supported it. I am sure it will meet with the approval of the people who endorsed the sixteenth amendment, believing that they were passing an amendment having that effect. I am sure it will give us more revenue with which to meet the requirements of a heavy national-defense program; and I am sure it is right, it is fair, and it is just.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it seems to me that an amendment of this kind, involving the fundamental relationships of the Federal and the State Governments, upon which there is great divergence of opinion, ought not to be offered to this emergency or excess-profits tax bill. It is perfectly proper legislation to be offered upon its own merits, but it is not properly a part of the pending bill. It comes in here without opportunity for careful study or for thorough discussion. As a matter of fact, the tax bill itself is a sufficiently complicated and complex problem to be submitted to the Senate without adding this question, upon which there is a fundamental divergence of view.

The committee which studied the subject matter of this amendment devoted many months to a careful study; and that committee, made up of some of the ablest Members of this body, differed four on one side and two on the other. So it seems definitely that when the able Senators upon that committee, after months of study, cannot agree, they ought not to come in here in the last moments of the consideration of this bill and present an amendment which refers back to and amends various sections of the law and ask us to accept it, to lay down a rule as between the taxing authorities of the Federal Government and the State authorities, without our giving to the subject the same consideration which the members of the committee gave to it. If the committee had brought in a unanimous report, the situation would be somewhat different.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that the full Finance Committee has never reported this amendment. It has been considered by a subcommittee of the Finance Committee of which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] is chairman; but the Finance Committee of the Senate has never favorably reported this amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Was the committee which considered the matter a subcommittee of the Finance Committee?

Mr. CONNALLY. It was a special committee.

Mr. ADAMS. It was a special committee, because I understand that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who are not on the Finance Committee, are those who disagreed with the majority report.

Mr. CONNALLY. I accept that correction; but I knew that the chairman of the committee was the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], who is a member of the Finance Committee, and he has from time to time reported progress to the Finance Committee; and I had an idea that the special committee was part of the Finance Committee. The Finance Committee itself has never favorably reported this amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Let me make clear the record in that respect. The committee was a special committee designated by the Senate to investigate and report upon this general subject. The membership of the committee was confined to three members of the Finance Committee and three members of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ADAMS. The committee is a very able one; and, as I say, if this able committee had brought in a unanimous report I should have been quite willing to subordinate my own judgment to that of the committee; but in view of the difference among the members of the committee after study, it seems to me that we ought not to be asked, without careful consideration, to accept the views of the majority of the committee.

There has been dragged across the stage here, as usual, the rich man. He has been set up as the horrible example, and it has been contended that we should pass our tax laws with a view to their effect upon him.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly; I will yield at any point.

Mr. BROWN. I never have been one who pilloried the rich man before the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. I am not referring to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I, for one, desire to say that I do not in the slightest degree blame a wealthy man for taking advantage of any provisions in the tax laws which may be helpful to him in reducing his income tax.

He has a right to do it; we give him that privilege; and it is assumed in the passage of the law that it is right and proper that it should be done. But we are engaged here with a matter of general policy, and I think it is entirely proper to bring in an example of what a wealthy man who pays an income tax in the higher brackets may do, and to point out that it is unfortunate from a social viewpoint that a wealthy man is permitted to do those things. It is entirely proper that he should do them as long as it is the law, but my argument is that the law should not be such as to permit him to take that advantage.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the point I was trying to make was that we are not drafting the tax laws because of their effect on some particular citizen, fortunate or unfortunate; we are drafting the tax laws for the benefit of the United States of America. The question is, What effect do they have on the United States and what effect do they have upon the individual States which we represent?

I come from a workingman's town. My neighbors are made up of people who work in the steel mills and on the railroads, who are interested in the pay check which comes every 2 weeks or every month. They are depositors in savings banks in small amounts. They are not purchasers of Government bonds except as their little deposits in the banks accumulate for purchases. I am interested in these neighbors of mine, and I want to say a word as to what effect this proposed legislation will have upon these men, who are out of work a good deal of the time. The steel mill in my town sometimes is shut down for several months. We have high taxes in my community. Twelve thousand of these workmen owning homes are upon the tax rolls of the city. They are paying the school taxes, city taxes, county taxes, State taxes. What does this mean? I am concerned about the bonds issued by these poor men in my community. I am interested in the effect of the proposed legislation upon them.

What does it mean? If we enact legislation taking away the tax-exempt privilege from the school bonds, from the city bonds, from the county bonds, from the State bonds, it means, in the first place, that the bonds will sell at a lower price than that for which they sell today. It means that the bonds will have to bear a higher rate of interest. It means that upon the homes of the workmen in my community the taxes will be increased. That is what it means.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. It always has seemed to me to be a distorted view of this question to pick out some man of wealth and say that because he is able to buy these bonds, therefore the law should be changed. Of course, someone has to buy them. When a school district issues bonds to raise money with which to build schoolhouses, or a county issues bonds to build a courthouse or to build roads, someone with money has to buy them, otherwise the bonds will not be sold and money raised with which to build the courthouse or the roads or the schoolhouse.

In looking at the question, it is easy to put some wealthy man on one side and the tax-exempt feature on the other and say that that condition should not exist. It always has occurred to me that this thing is a process of taking money out of one pocket and putting it in the other, the difficulty being that we are likely to take more out of one pocket than we put into the other.

There is no doubt in my mind that if the tax-exempt feature is removed from local bonds, they will bear a higher rate of interest. That is inevitable, because the reason why they bear a low rate of interest is that the income is not taxable.

After all, the people form the Government, all these bonds are their bonds, and all the taxes collected are their taxes, money belonging to the same people; and I have always found difficulty in convincing myself that the people who issue the bonds and who collect the taxes on them, if the law is to be changed, will not lose more money in the increased interest they will have to pay than they will gain in the way of taxes, because a large number of people buying these bonds will presuppose that the rate of interest, whatever is exacted, will be high enough to cover any flexibility or fluctuation in the rate of interest or the rate of taxation which may exist from time to time. I wonder if I am wrong about that.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the Senator has put his finger right on what I say is the vital issue; that is, it is the welfare of the country generally, of the people generally, that we should consider. If it so happened that some one man or some dozen men profited from it, but that in profiting they benefited tens of thousands of school districts and counties, I think I could tolerate the fact that someone got an advantage which we are reluctant to have him obtain.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield there, I have heard the argument advanced that a law should be passed in order to discourage the issue of these bonds locally. It may be that local communities have overbonded themselves. I know my home city has issued bonds up to the limit of the State law, and no doubt many other communities have done the same thing. It may be that they made a mistake in doing that. But if it is desirable to reduce the ability of the people locally to issue bonds in order to bring about some public improvement, it should be done by a law restricting them, and not by taxing what they are able to sell to the public in the form of their obligations. That is the way I have felt about the matter, and I am unable now to convince myself to the contrary. I realize it is a question upon which legitimate argument may be made on both sides, but I have stated the way it has always appeared to me, and I cannot escape that conclusion.

In considering the question it seems that we cannot decide it on the fact that off yonder somewhere a millionaire who has bought, legitimately and legally under our laws and Constitution, the bonds which have been issued shall have taken away from him the right to have something he has in the way of tax-exempt public securities, but whether we are to penalize our own people, millions of them, who are infinitely more numerous than the fellows off yonder who are rich.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I would say first to the Senator from Kentucky, in answer to the factual argument he presents, that he and the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Texas overlook the fact that we are subjecting to the income-tax laws of the States the income from Federal bonds. When the little taxpayer in the Senator's city of Pueblo pays his taxes to the tax collector, it does not make much difference to him how the items in the tax bill are made up; he is interested in the total tax. In other words, the lower the State taxes the better it is for him, no matter if his local tax may conceivably be a little higher. I do not know whether or not Colorado has an income tax.

Mr. ADAMS. It has.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know whether or not Kentucky has an income tax.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has.

Mr. BROWN. The Senators' States are more fortunate than is Michigan. Michigan does not have an income tax, and this will not do my State as much good as it will the States which have an income tax. My point is that we are subjecting $50,000,000,000 of Federal bonds to State and local income taxation, and we are subjecting only $18,000,000,000 of State, municipal, and local bonds to Federal taxation.

It seems to me that in the matter of general results States would gain considerably more than the Federal Government would gain—and 32 of the States have income tax laws—when all the States enact income tax legislation. The taxpayer in the Senator's home town would be the gainer rather than the loser by this type of legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Admitting that to be true, it still does not really touch the fundamental question which has bothered me all along about the wisdom of this policy. It is true we have subjected certain Federal bonds to taxation so far as income is concerned, but even when we did that, I will say to the Senator from Michigan, I was never quite satisfied in my own mind that we were doing the right thing, because they were all public bonds, they belonged to the people, they were the people's obligations, and it amounts in effect to my issuing a note to the Senator for the purchase of a house and then taxing him on the note and therefore taxing myself.

Mr. CONNALLY and Mr. HARRISON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield first to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. A moment ago the Senator, under the influence of the arguments of the Senators around him, said that we were not anxious to give the rich man he spoke of an advantage. Is it true that he necessarily gets an advantage? The Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from Michigan said that if a man could buy a 10-percent corporation bond or could buy a 3-percent tax-exempt Government bond, he would get just as much out of the 3-percent bond as he would get out of the 10-percent bond, if he were in the higher brackets. He would have to have an income so that the Government would get 70 percent of his income in order to get the advantage.

If he has a choice between a 10-percent corporation bond and a 3-percent Government bond and he takes the 3-percent bond, has he any advantage? Is he not exactly where he started with the 10-percent bond?

Mr. ADAMS. It is not going to be long, at the rate at which the Government is increasing its debt, before we will be hunting for people to buy our bonds. If we are going to make the bonds subject to local taxes, as we have done, we will have that much more trouble.

One other thing I should like to say before I yield; that is, as to the matter of rates. Referring again to my community, there are no Federal bonds held in my poor community which the community taxes. Our local bonds are taxed; and if they get into the hands of a corporation, the 22-percent rate imposed by this bill is added, and the corporation charges it back when it buys our bonds. We have no opportunity to recover any of it, because the workman, the man on the railroad, in the steel works, the school teacher, the clerk, does not own Federal bonds. We get none of the money back. We would pay more school taxes and more city taxes. We would lose by this provision. It seems to me that in view of all these circumstances we ought not to seek to crowd this controversial matter at this time on the pending bill.

I think the constitutional phase of it should be gone into. Some day I should like to discuss it. I have the feeling that had the people understood the interpretation which would be placed on the sixteenth amendment, it would not have been adopted. But assuming we have the constitutional right to do it, yet I think we ought not to do it. I think the local municipality should be protected from Federal taxation. On the whole, I think the Federal Government should be protected from local taxation, because such taxes are subject to abuse; they are subject to conflict and contention.

Mr. HARRISON. I was going to suggest in the interest of our getting together and trying to expedite the matter——

Mr. ADAMS. With that prelude, of course, I will say there is no one more desirous of getting on good-naturedly than I, except the Senator from Mississippi, and I always yield to him in that respect.

Mr. HARRISON. The action of the Senator from Colorado has been wonderful. His cooperation has been fine.

Mr. ADAMS. I said what I did before I knew what the Senator from Mississippi was going to say.

Mr. HARRISON. If the bill goes over until next week others may think differently, but, in my opinion, we will consume all week discussing it. It will result in delaying the enactment of the bill another week. If we can iron out our differences now we can pass the bill tonight.

What I was going to suggest was that the bill go to conference. I doubt whether we can obtain a quorum now. I will say to the Senator that if I should be named as a member of the conference committee on the part of the Senate——

Mr. ADAMS. I think the Senator can accomplish what we seek to accomplish if he is a member of the conference committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I give the Senator assurance if I should be appointed a conferee, that before this matter is adopted in conference I will come back to the Senate floor with it and get a straight vote on the question, after full discussion of it, so we may obtain the sentiment of the Senate by having a yea-and-nay vote on the question.

Mr. ADAMS. I think that is an admirable Saturday afternoon suggestion. It is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know that there is any particular advantage in having the amendment adopted under those circumstances. Do I understand that the Senator would come back and ask for further instructions before he agreed, in the event the House conferees refused to accept the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. If the House conferees should indicate that they would accept the amendment or anything like it, then before we would agree we would come back to the Senate and carry on the prolonged discussion which has been spoken of, and get the sentiment of the Senate. It is a matter which should call for considerable discussion on the part of the Senate. I am perfectly willing to carry the matter to conference in the interest of obtaining action on what are, in my opinion, the more important questions involved in this legislation.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I, of course, realize the situation. The House Ways and Means Committee has not considered this proposition. It is my judgment that if the bond-tax proposal—this amendment—were submitted to the House of Representatives, it would be adopted by the House. It was my hope if the Senate adopted the amendment, that some arrangements could be made by which there could be submitted to the House of Representatives the question of whether or not they would concur in the amendment.

The Senator knows that I have aided him for the past year and a half in preventing the adoption of this kind of an amendment. I talked against the amendment when it was offered by the Senator from Oklahoma, and when it was offered, I think, by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], on the theory that the Ways and Means Committee ought to have an opportunity to study the matter, go into it thoroughly, and adopt some such kind of a bill, or definitely reject it.

The Senator knows that the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee and other influential members of that committee, who will probably be conferees, have repeatedly stated that they would take up the proposal. I was told by the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee that he was quite satisfied with the hearing we had in the Senate committee, and that he thought they could determine the matter over there without extended hearings. That was substantially 18 months ago. He did not indicate what they would do, other than that it would be considered. We have had the session previous to this session and now we are near the end of this session, without consideration of this important measure, which is favored by the President—favored by the Secretary of the Treasury—he told the Senate Finance Committee that he favored this proposition in a recent hearing upon the $5,000,000,000 debt-limitation proposition, I remind the Senator—and, I believe, favored by the people of the country, who are anxious that the Congress should act upon this proposition.

So it seems to me we ought to have this amendment presented to the conference without giving this sugar pill to those who are in favor of this measure, and then withholding it, as the Senator from Mississippi proposes to do, unless he comes back here and gets new direction to stand by our proposal. The Senator from Mississippi is not offering me much.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, Senators appreciate what we started out to do in this tax bill touching amortization and suspension of the Vinson-Trammell Act. Those were the main points in it. They were urged by Mr. Knudsen and other gentlemen of the National Defense Council, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the President of the United States.

Now here we are at the end of the matter. The amendment the Senator from Michigan has offered is a very important amendment, but it does not really relate to this particular question. Of course, he is accurate in his whole statement, as he is always accurate in any statement he makes. I think he has performed a great public service as chairman of the special committee of the Senate which has worked long and diligently on the matter. I thank him personally very much for what he has done. But the question is one concerning which Senators differ, concerning which Representatives differ, concerning which the people in the country at large differ.

Mr. President, I know that if the bill goes over until Monday, because of this matter being up in the air, that from the best people in the world I will receive millions of telegrams against the proposal. Well, I want to avoid that. In that respect I am like every other Senator. I had thought we should let this matter go to conference, and before we agree in conference on this question we will bring it back to the Senate and have the debate which the Senator desires to have on such a very important question.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me further?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. What is the difference between doing what the Senator now proposes to do and rejecting the amendment?

Mr. ADAMS. It would not be in conference at all if it were rejected.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think it will be in conference if we adopt the suggestion made by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. The House conferees may accept it, and then we would say, "We are duty bound to go back to the Senate and get the expression of the Senate again on the matter." It may not be a very good plan, but I am trying to get the tax bill out of the way, and that is the only way I know of doing it; so therefore I made this suggestion.

Mr. BROWN. I would be delighted to have the Senate adopt the amendment, but I do not feel, in justice to the several coauthors of this amendment, some of whom I have put off and put off and put off, that I ought to accept a proposition of that kind. I am not optimistic as to the result in conference; but I think the Senate ought definitely to adopt the amendment. If the Senator from Mississippi and his coconferees shall be unable to persuade the House conferees to accept the amendment, of course I shall be content, and will feel that everything has been done that I could do.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator desire to have a quorum present to vote on the amendment?

Mr. BROWN. I am perfectly willing to take a vote as things now stand.

Mr. HARRISON. Then let us have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator desire to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think we could obtain a quorum. If we cannot settle the matter tonight, I shall submit a unanimous-consent request for limitation of debate on the amendment and then ask for a recess until Monday.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have discussed with the Senator from Mississippi the advisability of obtaining a unanimous-consent agreement for limitation of debate on the bill and on all amendments if the bill must go over until Monday. I do not wish to make the request if there is any prospect of arriving at the arrangement which the Senator from Mississippi has suggested and which the Senator from Michigan seems willing to accept, that the amendment go in the bill and go to conference in the manner which has been suggested.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I cannot hear what is going on. I understood the Senator from Michigan to say that he wants this amendment treated in the same manner as any other amendment in the bill which is agreed to. I hope that is his position. I am at a disadvantage, because, despite all the attention I try to give to the debate, it is impossible for me to hear all that is said.

As I understood the statement of the Senator from Michigan, it was to the effect that he does not want some arrangement whereby this particular amendment will be chloroformed after all the other amendments shall have been agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I do not think the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin is entirely serious. The thing about which the Senator from Michigan seems to be apprehensive is that the Senate might not agree to the amendment if the matter were brought back.

The only suggestion was that the amendment, being a vital amendment, go to conference, and that before it shall become a part of the conference report it shall come back and be passed upon by the Senate. The only difference is as to whether it shall be passed upon Monday or this afternoon. It seems to me that Senators should have the same confidence in the Senate when the matter is referred back to it as they have today.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This bill has been under more pressure than any important piece of legislation in all my legislative experience. If the suggestion made by the genial Senator from Mississippi is carried out, what will happen will be this: The conferees will agree on the entire conference report with the exception of this amendment, and come back with the amendment in disagreement; and the Senator knows that under those circumstances, with the fever which will then pervade the Chamber, there will be little opportunity for the matter to be considered on its merits. If that is the only way we can obtain action tonight, I hope the Senator from Michigan will insist on the matter going over until Monday, so that we may obtain a yea-and-nay vote on the question and find out how the Senate stands on the issue.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Wisconsin ever had any difficulty in being heard or obtaining consideration. I am one of those who listened and were persuaded by his arguments and voted for his amendment today. We happened to be in the minority. We are frequently in the minority.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is really unnecessary to have any understanding that before the amendment goes into the bill it will be brought back, because the same result can be accomplished without any such understanding in advance. If the amendment should go into the bill, and the bill should go to conference, and the House conferees should refuse to agree to it, the Senate conferees could come back to the Senate with the amendment and ask for the advice of the Senate as to their course. The Senate then could either further insist on the amendment or instruct its conferees to yield. So the question would really come back on its merits in that way, without any advance agreement.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. If we should adopt the amendment, as suggested by the Senator from Mississippi, and after the conferees get together the House conferees should say, "Yes; that is fine. We like that amendment," then the Senate conferees would have to come back to the Senate and obtain authority to agree to an amendment which we should already have adopted.

Mr. ADAMS. We should not have adopted it. That is not the idea.

Mr. BROWN. It is proposed that it be adopted. I think the situation is illogical. I believe we should vote on the amendment in the usual way.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senate will not agree to the amendment and we cannot dispose of it tonight, I think we ought to try to obtain a limitation of debate on the bill and all amendments if it must go over until Monday, because it is important that we dispose of this legislation. The Committee on Finance must take up another matter as soon as this bill is disposed of. I refer to the sugar legislation, in which Senators are interested. The committee cannot very well do so until this bill is disposed of.

I wish to submit a unanimous-consent request in a rather contingent form. I ask unanimous consent that if the bill shall not be disposed of today, on the resumption of its consideration on Monday no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes on the bill or any amendment thereto.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I must object.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan. I do not want to see any agreement entered into concerning the disposition of the amendment in conference. It should be disposed of on the floor of the Senate in the regular way. I am opposed to any agreement which does not include an immediate recess. I am willing to agree to a unanimous-consent arrangement limiting debate provided we shall take a recess not later than 5 o'clock this evening.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma has already objected to my request. Will the Senator from Oklahoma agree to a 30-minute limitation? That would give each Senator an hour on the bill and any amendment.

Mr. LEE. I agree.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can I trade with the Senator and make it 25 minutes? [Laughter.]

Mr. LEE. Let us hold it at 30 minutes.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that the constitutionality of the amendment has been questioned by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and I understand it will be questioned by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. I should not want to be limited to any greater extent than that suggested by the Senator from Kentucky. I think I could dispose of my part of the argument within an hour.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will permit me, I shall modify my request. I ask unanimous consent that during the further consideration of the bill after today no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the bill or any amendment thereto.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to couple with that proposed agreement——

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not like to make a condition. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that it is my purpose and hope that we shall take a recess very soon. I do not like to be clubbed into a recess in order to obtain a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. McNARY. It is not a question of clubbing. It is a question of determining what we are to do for the remainder of the day. If the Senator will tell me that he will move a recess——

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senate shall agree to the amendment, and if it is agreeable to the Senator from Mississippi, it is my purpose to move that the Senate take a recess at the very earliest possible second today.

Mr. McNARY. Without taking any further action on the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, let me make one more attempt to get this matter out of the way. Let me ask the Senator from Michigan a question. If we accept the amendment and let it go to conference, and can obtain a vote in some way on the question on Monday or Tuesday, expressing the attitude of the Senate, letting that sentiment prevail with the Senate conferees and leaving them free to act, taking into consideration the action of the Senate on a record vote on the amendment, will that be satisfactory?

Mr. BROWN. I do not see how that is any different from what the Senator previously proposed.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not think it was, but I thought it might appeal to the Senator. [Laughter.] So far as the bill is concerned, I will say to the Senator from Oregon that if there is no way for us to get together on this question tonight, and we must work on the bill tomorrow instead of attending church——

Mr. McNARY. I do not want the Senator to accept an amendment to which I have an objection. I shall not permit that. I shall suggest the absence of a quorum and ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator will not permit us to go to church? [Laughter.]

Mr. McNARY. I do not want the able Senator from Mississippi to accept the amendment and take it to conference. Suppose the House conferees should agree with the Senate conferees; then we should have the amendment in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I am trying to save time and useless discussion on an important question. In my opinion the amendment has no business in this particular bill.

Mr. McNARY. That is my opinion.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may be, then, that we should save time by voting on it on Monday on its merits.

Mr. President, did my request receive approval?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I assume that the Senator's request is directed chiefly to the pending amendment. I have another amendment. Under the proposed agreement, if I should see fit to speak on the pending amendment, would I be cut off on the other amendment?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no; the limitation is 30 minutes on the bill and 30 minutes on each amendment, which would include all amendments.

Mr. CONNALLY. And 45 minutes if I wanted so to divide it? Could it be so divided that I could speak 45 minutes on this amendment and 45 minutes on the other amendment?

Mr. BARKLEY. Under that arrangement the Senator could speak for 30 minutes on this amendment and then could speak for an hour on his own amendment, because he would have 30 minutes on the bill and 30 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I might want to cut the half-hour in two, and speak 45 minutes on one amendment and 45 minutes on the other. I will say to the Senator, however, that I do not intend to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 30-minute limitation is on each amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. On each amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado still has the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. I assume that we are about to recess.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have spoken to the chairman of the committee on this subject. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted, so that I may offer an amendment to it and let it go to conference.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is impossible to hear what is going on. What is the request of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. PITTMAN. My request was for unanimous consent to reconsider the action on the committee amendment so that I may offer an amendment to it and have it go to conference. It was supposed to be a part of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest that the matter go over until Monday. Will not the Senator from Nevada be here on Monday?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let it go over until Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not objecting. I want the Senator from Nevada to have an opportunity to present his amendment; but many Senators have left the Chamber.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is quite satisfactory. I will state that the amendment is pro forma in its nature to such an extent that I thought the reading of it would be sufficient; but I am perfectly satisfied to let it go over.

Mr. KING. I call for the regular order.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Jesse H. Jones, of Texas, to be Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Marion Speed Boyd, of Tennessee, to be district judge for the western district of Tennessee, vice John D. Martin, Sr. (elevated to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the calendar is called—there is not much of it—I desire to state that the Committee on Commerce today favorably reported the nomination of Mr. Jesse H. Jones to be Secretary of Commerce. In view of the fact that the position is vacant, and Mr. Jones desires to assume it, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, under the circumstances, and in view of the statement made by the able Senator from Kentucky, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be read.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Jesse H. Jones, of Texas, to be Secretary of Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I now ask that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Arnold Wilson Cowen to be regional director of the Farm Security Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, September 16, 1940, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate September 14 (legislative day of August 5), 1940

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Jesse H. Jones to be Secretary of Commerce.

FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Arnold Wilson Cowen, to be regional director, Farm Security Administration.

POSTMASTERS

OREGON

Charles A. Purcell, Troutdale.

TEXAS

Sam L. Henderson, Linden.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1940

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. William Andrew Keese, pastor, Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father, we seek Thy wisdom before we begin our daily task. Cleanse us, we pray Thee, from all unworthy motives. Purify our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit. Lift up our eyes to behold the wide borders of Thy kingdom, and deliver us from petty purposes or selfish schemes. Maintain in us our sense of high trusteeship for the people of this Nation, and grant us both the understanding and the will to discharge it honorably. Clothe all our people with a noble patriotism, and suffer us never to forget the ancient lesson that righteousness alone exalteth a nation. Send us faithfully about our appointed work, seeking peace, loving justice, walking humbly before Thee, but resolute always to preserve and protect our heritage of freedom. In Christ's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had ordered that the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4164) entitled "An act to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training," be recommitted to said committee.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two editorials from the Gaelic-American, of New York, one on the subject, Senator Lundeen's Death a National Loss, and the other on the subject, Effort to Make United States a British Colony.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLAYPOOL and Mr. CUMMINGS asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement on our form of government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by Mr. W. A. Richards, of the Sovereign Pocahontas Coal Co., Bluefield, W. Va., at the annual meeting of the section on mineral oil of the American Bar Association, at Philadelphia, Pa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next after the conclusion of the business for the day and any other special orders that may be entered, I may address the House for 35 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

WASHINGTON AIRPORT

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of agitation about airports, and I understand there will be more. At this time my purpose is to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Gravelly Point Airport, which is just being completed, will cost around $15,000,000. The joint commission appointed to study airports in the vicinity of Washington a couple of years ago headed by Senator KING, on the 9th of July 1937 suggested an airport at Gravelly Point costing $4,746,000.

With the P. W. A. and the W. P. A. they have fooled away three times as much as it should cost, and on top of that they have not employed any relief labor to amount to anything at all. This is the way we are doing business these days. It is just a relief racket.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The Gravelly Point Airport is a very expansive and expensive airport adjacent to the Nation's Capital. Has any provision been made for aviation defense, such as underground, camouflaged, and hidden runways and hangars, or is it all right out in the open waiting for any enemy to bomb and wipe it out overnight?

Mr. TABER. They have an agricultural experiment station spread around about it to be a hazard to aviation and airplanes landing there. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, some days before the Republican Convention, about 40 Republican Members who have been familiar with Mr. Willkie's background, philosophy, and way of thinking, strenuously protested against his nomination, but, notwithstanding their protests, Wall Street and the big power interests nominated him. Today, it is apparent that those who opposed him certainly used good judgment, especially in view of what transpired in Chicago yesterday. I actually sympathize with the Republican Party. The party certainly realizes its error. It has erred grievously, but all we can do is extend our condolences. No person representing a major political party should be permitted to address the citizenry with such effrontery as Willkie was guilty of in his speech to the stockyard workers in Chicago yesterday by using such language as "youse guys" and "to hell with Chicago," to which I am sure that the people of Chicago will respond in no uncertain terms on the first Tuesday in November.

The Washington Times-Herald states that the burly Hoosier wound up with his vocal cords torn to raw shreds in his denunciations. It further goes on to say that "Willkie, the political flop in his morning parade to the stockyards, was the conquering hero of the Chicago Loop." Yes; La Salle Street, the little Wall Street of Chicago.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] endeavors to excuse the candidate by saying that he was speaking under difficulties because of the stockyards odor. While I appreciate that the Hoosier from New York's Riverside Drive, the Hopsons and the Insulls, are not accustomed to such atmosphere, I really regret that he feels he can overcome his anti-labor record by using the language and expressions utterly unfitting and unbecoming to a Presidential nominee. That a candidate of a once great political party should stoop so low is to be deplored, and will undoubtedly be resented as it unquestionably reflects upon the intelligence of the American workers.

As to his remarks with reference to jailing certain individuals, it is unfortunate that the Department of Justice did not check on the records of some of his convention backers because I am quite sure that if it did so Mr. Willkie would have lost quite a number of votes.

I also desire to remind Mr. Willkie, the Republican public utilities candidate for the Presidency, that a number of his former associates in the public-utility field were recently jailed in St. Louis, where they might help to while away the "time" of Mr. Moe Annenberg, who was in attendance at the Philadelphia convention, and reported to have been "assisting" in the nomination of Wendell Willkie.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—SOCIAL GAINS (H. DOC. NO. 951)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

The social gains of recent years, including insurance and other benefit rights, must be preserved unimpaired. The National Guard legislation, which I recently approved, contained provisions evidencing this policy in connection with benefit rights of workers who are called into active service, and a similar provision is contained in pending selective-service legislation.

I recommend to the Congress early consideration of the problems thus recognized and enactment of the necessary legislation incident to preserving insurance protection under the Social Security Act, the Railroad Retirement Act, and the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and to facilitate State action under the Federal-State unemployment-insurance program.

The agencies administering the Federal acts have been considering the needed technical changes to meet these problems and are now ready to furnish recommendations to the Congress in this connection.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 14, 1940.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a letter from K. K. Kawakami.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, may I call the attention of the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. SABATH], who just spoke, to the fact that Willkie was laboring under some difficulties yesterday. He could not tell the difference between the smell from the stockyards and the smell from the corrupt political Kelly-Nash machine of Chicago. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. SABATH] that he read Psalm 76, verse 10, which says:

> The wrath of man shall praise thee.

The gentleman from Chicago is admirable in small doses. Wendell Willkie was at his best yesterday in the stronghold of the enemy. He did a very fine job. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is grieved because of Wendell Willkie's attack on the New Deal, let me call his attention to a recent article by Westbrook Pegler. Here is what Mr. Pegler had to say about Mr. Roosevelt:

> Mr. Roosevelt is stubborn, reckless, and improvident, and I will agree, too, that he is one who is playing politics with the fate or safety of the Nation, but we can't get him out of there until the first of next year at the earliest and are stuck with him during a period that simply cannot be allowed to run out with a record of nothing, or nothing much, done.
> He will assign some inexperienced henchmen to run the armament business and some wet-eyed spellbinder to procure the weapons for the Infantry, according to his mischievous custom of flouting the pride and patriotism of men who know such jobs and want to serve the country. But we will just have to make do, whatever he does and hope to God that, in spite of everything, we will have something to show for our time, which is limited.
> The money isn't important. When this adventure, whatever it may be, is concluded, money won't mean what it means today.

[Applause.]

AUTHORIZING THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY TO ACQUIRE CERTAIN LANDS IN NATIONAL CITY, CALIF.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2991) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States certain lands in the city of National City, Calif., and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill and permits the Navy to accept 96.42 acres of land from National City, Calif., to be used at the Naval base at San Diego, Calif., with certain easements and limitations that are already outstanding against this land. However, these easements will have no effect whatsoever on the use of the land by the Navy Department. This land is given to the Government through the Navy Department for its use, and there will be no expense whatsoever on the Government, which will enjoy the benefit of the rental of the easements on this property.

Mr. MICHENER. Is this a Senate bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; this is a Senate bill, unanimously reported to the House by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized on behalf of the United States to accept from the city of National City, Calif., without cost to the United States, all right, title, and interest of the said city in and to the following-described area of tide and submerged lands:

All lands situated on the National City side of the San Diego Bay, lying between the line of the mean high tide line and the pierhead line in said bay, as the same has been or may hereafter be established by the Federal Government, and between the prolongation into the Bay of San Diego, to the pierhead line of the boundary line between the city of National City and the city of San Diego and a prolongation into the Bay of San Diego to the pierhead line of the southerly line of the street commonly known as Seventh Street, containing approximately ninety-six and forty-two one-hundredths acres of tidelands, and more particularly described as all or any portion or portions of those tidelands, situated in the city of National City, San Diego County, State of California, commencing at a concrete monument on the northerly line of National City, designated as U. S. C. & G. S. point numbered 49; thence south seventy-one degrees forty-three minutes fifteen seconds west along said northerly line a distance of seventy-two and one-tenth feet to a concrete monument on the mean high tide line of San Diego Bay, the true point of beginning; thence south forty-eight degrees sixteen minutes east two hundred and sixty-seven and fifty-eight one-hundredths feet; thence south seventy-three degrees fifty-four minutes east one hundred and seventy-nine and four-tenths feet; thence south forty-nine degrees fifty-three minutes thirty-four seconds east two hundred and sixty-one and ninety-five one-hundredths feet; thence south sixty-four degrees five minutes forty-four seconds east four hundred and four and ninety-five one-hundredths feet; thence south forty-nine degrees two minutes fourteen seconds east one hundred and forty-nine and sixty-four one-hundredths feet; thence south sixty-two degrees forty-one minutes fifty-three seconds east two hundred and fifty-one and eighty-one one-hundredths feet; thence south thirty-six degrees thirty-nine minutes eight seconds east two hundred and six and twenty-nine one-hundredths feet; thence south thirty-seven degrees forty-eight minutes forty-one seconds east one thousand and ninety-five and six-tenths feet; thence south sixty-three degrees three minutes fifty-nine seconds west two thousand and ninety-four and two-tenths feet to the bulkhead line of San Diego Bay; thence north twenty-six degrees fifty-six minutes one second west along said bulkhead line two thousand seven hundred and twenty-two and two-tenths feet to an intersection with the westerly prolongation of the northerly line of National City; thence north seventy-one degrees forty-three minutes fifteen seconds east along said northerly line one thousand and eighty-six and sixty-seven one-hundredths feet to the point of beginning, excepting and reserving therefrom a roadway approximately one hundred feet in width along the easterly side.

SEC. 2. The Secretary is authorized to accept title to the above-described tract from the city of National City, Calif., upon the following conditions recited in the city of National City, Calif., Resolution No. 2024:

That the conveyance shall be subject to any and all existing leases on the aforesaid property or tidelands.

That the city of National City may reserve perpetual easements for laying and maintaining sewers and drains across any and all of the above-described land wherever necessary and convenient.

That the above-described tract shall be used for military purposes of the United States and particularly for the purpose of establishing and maintaining thereon piers, landings, buildings, and structures to be used by the United States Navy.

SEC. 3. The acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy of the transfer or quitclaim by the city of National City of any of the lands herein mentioned shall not be construed as a relinquishment by the United States of its claim of title or interest in said land in any manner arising.

SEC. 4. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO ACT OF JUNE 23, 1938 (52 STAT. 944)

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, for the immediate conscription of the bill (H. R. 10295) to amend the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this bill is presented by the distinguished and ranking minority member of the committee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS]. It is unanimously reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and it is recommended by the Navy Department. I have received the following letter from the Secretary of the Navy under date of September 13 endorsing this bill:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington September 13, 1940.

The CHAIRMAN,
Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Reference is made to your letter of August 7, 1940, requesting the views and recommendation of the Navy Department on the bill (H. R. 10295) to amend the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944).

The purpose of the bill H. R. 10295 is to amend and clarify certain portions of the act of June 23, 1938, "To regulate the distribution, promotion, and retirement of officers of the line of the Navy, and for other purposes." The bill contains the noncontroversial features of the bill H. R. 4929, which the President vetoed May 3, 1940.

The bill would remove the present requirement of physical qualification as a prerequisite to eligibility for consideration for selection and would restore the procedure in effect prior to the 1938 act, of having selection boards consider the medical as well as the service records of officers under consideration. In the opinion of the Navy Department, this is of vital importance and should be done.

The bill would also permit officers adjudged fitted to retire with the retired pay of the grade to which promoted. This feature is considered equitable and desirable by the Navy Department.

In addition, the bill clarifies sundry questions which have arisen in the administration of the 1938 act. The bill, if enacted, would result in an immediate increased cost of $10,188 per annum. It is impracticable to estimate the amount of the further increased cost in the future.

The Navy Department recommends the enactment of the bill H. R. 10295.

The Navy Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there would be no objection to the submission of this report.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES FORRESTAL, Acting.

This bill seeks to correct certain injustices in connection with the selection law. For instance, instead of having a board of nine admirals pass upon the records of all these officers, it permits a board of three admirals and six captains to pass on the commanders, lieutenant commanders, and officers of lower grade.

The next feature deals with the question of medical records. The bill permits the selection board to have before it the entire medical record of each one of the officers under consideration. Under the law today, when the selection board takes up an officer's case it does not have the medical record. This bill permits the medical record to be considered as one of the matters before the selection board.

The next item requires a vote of two-thirds of the members of the board before the officer can be passed over. I believe this is the main feature of the bill.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HESS. Was this bill a part of another bill that was previously passed?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes. This bill was a part of a bill that was vetoed by the President on May 3, 1940. These were the provisions that were recommended by the Navy Department in that bill. In the bill which was vetoed on May 3 there were other matters which the Department did not recommend. The President vetoed the bill on the ground that certain matters the House and the Senate had put in the bill were not recommended by the Navy Department. This is departmental legislation to correct certain injustices in connection with the selection bill, all to the benefit of the officers.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. The matters in the vetoed bill are not in this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The matters to which the veto was directed are not in this bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944), is hereby amended as follows:

Section 5, strike out subsection (a) and substitute the following: "(a) The board for the recommendation of line officers for promotion to the grades of rear admiral and captain shall consist of nine rear admirals on the active list of the line of the Navy, not restricted by law to the performance of shore duty only. The board for the recommendation of line officers for promotion to the grade of commander shall consist of three rear admirals and six captains on the active list of the line of the Navy, not restricted by law to the performance of shore duty only. These boards shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy and convened at least once each year and at such times as the Secretary of the Navy may direct."

Section 7, in subsections (a) and (b), strike out "or who is not physically qualified."

Section 8, in subsection (a), strike out "other than medical."

Section 9, strike out subsection (f) and substitute the following: "(f) All reports or recommendations of a line selection board under any provision of law shall require the concurrence of at least two-thirds of the members."

Section 11, in subsection (b), at the end of the second proviso insert "with retired pay computed as provided in section 12 (b) of this act."

Section 12, subsection (f), in line 5 change "from" to "to," and in line 6, after "promoted", insert "computed as provided in subsection (b) of this section."

Section 12, strike out subsection (k) and substitute the following: "(k) Lieutenant commanders and lieutenants with date of rank as such prior to June 23, 1938, and lieutenants (junior grade) who on that date were carried as additional numbers in grade by reason of not having been recommended for promotion, shall, at their own request, in lieu of honorable discharge as provided in subsection (c) of this section, be retired on June 30 of the fiscal year in which they fail of selection as best fitted the second time or on June 30 of the fiscal year in which they complete the period of service designated in the act of March 3, 1931, as amended (U. S. C., title 34, Supp. III, secs. 286a and 2861), whichever date shall be later with retired pay computed as provided in subsection (b) of this section: Provided, That any officer retained on the active list pursuant to this subsection shall be ineligible for consideration for promotion by subsequent selection boards: Provided further, That lieutenants who served in the Navy or Naval Reserve Force prior to November 12, 1918, and who shall have completed not less than 21 years of service, and who subsequent to June 23, 1938, have been or shall hereafter be retired under any provision of law, shall be advanced to the grade of lieutenant commander on the retired list effective from date of retirement with the retired pay of that grade."

Section 14, in line 9 of subsection (a), after "grade", insert "with probationary appointments."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMPENSATION OF GUARDS AT NAVY YARDS AND STATIONS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10405) to provide for adjusting the compensation of persons employed as masters-at-arms and guards at navy yards and stations, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this bill changes the civil-service status of guards who are employed at the navy yards and at the Naval Academy. It raises the pay of these guards approximately $128,800 over the period of time from when they enter the service up to the maximum payment. In the navy yard we have what are called guards, and their entrance salary is $1,200 a year. This bill raises the entrance salary to $1,600. In the report you will see how each one of these grades has been raised.

The Navy Department and the Committee on Naval Affairs felt that in view of the absolute necessity of having the closest supervision over these naval establishments it was necessary that the entrance salary be increased so that the personnel could be a somewhat superior personnel than that which comes in now under the civil service. In other words, the duty of these guards is to protect the Navy property and to keep down great accidents such as occurred a few days ago in New Jersey. It is highly important in the national-defense program that the highest type of men be employed in this guard service. We cannot obtain the type necessary at the rate fixed by the Civil Service Commission, therefore we are increasing the rates over a period of time.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. As a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I may say that our committee considered the reclassification of all departmental guards in the Nation's Capital.

I just wonder if the guards who are to have their entrance salary raised under the gentleman's bill will be appointed from the same civil-service list and have the same qualifications as the rest of the departmental guards who have the $1,260 entrance salary.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; that is a different civil-service classification.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Are you establishing a new classification under this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; we are not establishing a new classification. We take our guards from what is called CU–8, and that is where they come from all through the service for the navy yards and the Naval Academy. Their entrance salary is $1,200. This bill increases it, and increases it through the different grades.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I understand that this bill, as the gentleman states, increases the entrance pay.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. But if you are going to take the men from the $1,260 entrance pay eligible list, you are going to have the same experience and classification of guards which you would have without raising the pay.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. They come in as CU–3 under the civil-service classification, from $1,200 to $1,500. This bill proposes to raise them to CU–5, from $1,500 to $1,860.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. What the committee is doing, as I understand, is changing the classifications for these positions and reclassifying them, putting them in a different classification.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right.

Mr. RAMSPECK. It does not affect their being under civil service?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not a bit in the world. Every one of them is absolutely under civil service. No one can be employed unless he is qualified under the civil-service rules. The committee felt that in view of the importance of having the closest supervision it is necessary that we raise these standards so we can probably get more competent and efficient guards than are now employed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of July 3, 1930 (46 Stat. 1005; U. S. C., title 5, sec. 678), be amended by adding the following proviso: "Provided further, That positions in the master-at-arms and the guard groups carried under group IV (b) in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees under the Naval Establishment shall be allocated to grades 5 to 10 in the custodial service in the Classification Act of 1923, as amended."

SEC. 2. Uniforms and equipment necessary for the performance of the duties of masters-at-arms and guards carried under group IV (b) in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees shall be furnished without cost to such employees. Such uniforms and equipment so furnished shall remain the property of the United States.

SEC. 3. Nothing in this act shall be construed to cause the reduction of the compensation of any person employed in the master-at-arms and guard groups carried under group IV (b) in the Schedule of Wages for the Field Service of the Navy Department on the date of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect immediately upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing in the Appendix a list of all the bills that have been passed by the Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, relating to naval matters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF WASHINGTON

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 10361) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the ranking minority member of the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], is on his way here from his office, and I wonder if the gentleman would not wait a few minutes until the gentleman has an opportunity to be here.

Mr. STEAGALL. I shall be very glad to wait for the gentleman if the gentleman from Massachusetts desires it, but I may say that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] is heartily for the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand that, but I think the gentleman might like to say so.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request for the present.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

THOMAS JEFFERSON AND CONSCRIPTION

Mr. SHANNON. "Newspapers, mischief makers—that first of all human contrivances for generating war."—Thomas Jefferson.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the newspaper of Jefferson's day is being followed perfectly in this great movement to bring on war by producing an un-American system, the conscription of human beings for war purposes, running truly to newspaper form.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I am interested in what Thomas Jefferson said, as read by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON] concerning the newspapers.

In the early history of this Republic when George Washington was President of the United States, one of the greatest offenders of journalistic decency in all the United States was Thomas Jefferson. He was responsible for some of the worst things that have ever been said of Washington and had the President had a thinner skin he would have sued Thomas Jefferson and the editor of his paper for libel. There was never anything like it. Never in all the history of this country has there ever been such a "blitzkrieg" against any man as there was against George Washington, and Thomas Jefferson was the leader in that "blitzkrieg."

No other President was so maligned as the first one to sit in the seat of the Executive. The hired hands of Jefferson, Philip Freneau and Benjamin Franklin Bache, went the limit of execration. The President himself turned once to say "they were outrages on common decency."

In McMaster's history of the American people is a paragraph on Jefferson:

> Why did he (Jefferson) hire Philip Freneau to vilify the Government, traduce the administration, and misrepresent the best acts of Washington?

Freneau was kept in a government clerical position by Jefferson while this journalistic scavenger and columnist of his day was writing of Washington.

I refer the gentleman from Missouri to the fact that only when his own medicine was being dished out to him did Jefferson speak.

Fortunately the kind of newspapers of those days have long since passed from the scene.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the circumstances the Chair thinks that would be a proper request.

The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, a very sad thing happened a few days ago in the explosion in New Jersey and most unfortunate to the many people who were killed. I see by the press that immediately the Dies committee is making an investigation. I do not know what they are going to investigate. They let the cow out of the barn and it is too late now. Then I find a resolution by another colleague and he is going to investigate. I do not know what. All you can investigate now would be the cinders.

I have seen a number of statements by Members of Congress and by the public generally. The Congress and the country should have followed my plea made to you a year ago and 2 years ago. I told you exactly what might possibly happen if you allowed Nazi camps in close proximity to a powder factory. I have designated the Hercules Powder Co. in the RECORD at least a half dozen times. I have pleaded with this Congress to find some way to wipe out the Nazi camp near this company, and I have every reason to believe that this fire and this explosion did not happen through any miracle. Is it not queer that we, in a democracy and at a time like this, hesitate to do something for our own good?

At least a half a dozen times I have called attention in the RECORD to the danger of this Nazi camp within the area of that powder company. Why did the Dies committee not call upon the membership of every one of the bundsters in that camp, over 2,000? Why did they not find out where they worked and what they did, and how many of them were aliens? All we saw in the statements of the Dies committee were press releases and what they are going to do and when they are going to do it, but nothing has been done. In 2 years there was not one single recommendation made to the Congress constructively, to tighten up the conditions that I have called attention to during the last 7 years. I propose to have something to say on that question some time next week, and I hope to mention at least 50 groups in this country and 400 so-called "fifth columnists" that the Dies committee and its investigators seem to have been unable to find, and they are spread all around the country.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. FULMER. Does the gentleman know that it is already agreed to extend the investigation of the Dies committee with $50,000, and in the meantime, up to this good hour, nothing has been done about what we absolutely know is going on all over this country?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is 100-percent correct.

Mr. FULMER. Do you not think the Congress, instead of carrying on investigations, should do something to stop that?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Absolutely. I say that $50,000 is just wasted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF WASHINGTON

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 10361) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10361) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, restore the matter stricken out by the Senate amendment, and on page 2, line 12, of the House engrossed bill, after the word "nationals" insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no such loans shall be made in violation of international law as interpreted by the Department of State, or of the Act of April 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 574), or of the Neutrality Act of 1939."; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10361) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House bill added a new paragraph to section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, under which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to supply funds in an amount not exceeding $500,000,000 outstanding at any one time to the Export-Import Bank of Washington to enable such bank to make loans to any governments, their central banks, or other acceptable banking institutions and, when guaranteed by any such government, central bank, or acceptable banking institution, to a political subdivision, agency, or national of any such government, notwithstanding any other provisions of law insofar as they might restrict or prohibit loans or other extensions of credit to, or other transactions with, the governments of the countries of the Western Hemisphere or their agencies or nationals This authority was for the purpose of assisting in the development of the resources, the stabilization of the economies and the orderly marketing of the products of countries of the Western Hemisphere. The Export-Import Bank was to exercise the powers and authority granted to it upon the written request of the Federal Loan Administrator with the approval of the President and subject to such conditions and limitations as might be set forth in such request or approval. The loans were to be made and administered in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the bank might determine. The House bill also provided for increasing the borrowing power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by $1,500,000,000. It also extended the life of the Export-Import Bank of Washington as an agency of the United States from June 30, 1941 to January 22, 1947, increased its lending authority from $200,000,000 to $700,000,000, and eliminated the existing limitation of section 9 of the act of January 31, 1935, as amended, on the aggregate amount of loans which can be outstanding to any one country.

The Senate amendment contained similar provisions with respect to the Export-Import Bank of Washington, but these were provided for by way of amendment to section 9 of the act of January 31, 1935, instead of by amending section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended. The Senate also added a proviso that no loans made by the bank under the added authority granted to it should be made in violation of international law as interpreted by the Department of State, or in violation of the act of April 13, 1934 (known as the Johnson Act), or of the Neutrality Act of 1939. The Senate amendment did not contain, however, the extension of the borrowing power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by $1,500,000,000.

The conference agreement retains the provisions of the House bill with the single exception that there was added the provision of the Senate amendment that the loans made by the Export-Import Bank were not to be in violation of international law as interpreted by the Department of State, or of the Johnson Act, or of the Neutrality Act of 1939.

HENRY B. STEAGALL,
CLYDE WILLIAMS,
BRENT SPENCE,
JESSE P. WOLCOTT,
ROBERT LUCE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], the ranking minority member of the committee, who opposed the bill on the floor of the House, was one of the conferees and agrees to this conference report and has signed it?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is quite true. The report was unanimously agreed to.

I will say to the gentleman, there are really only two differences between the House bill and the Senate bill. One is that the Senate bill contained a provision to the effect that no loans might be made under the bill in contravention of the neutrality law or the Johnson Act. The House recedes and agrees to the Senate provision. The other difference was on a provision with respect to enlarging the borrowing powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Under the Senate bill the borrowing power would have been limited to $500,000,000, which is the amount contemplated that might possibly be loaned to countries of the Western Hemisphere. The House bill provided for an increased borrowing authority for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the amount of $1,500,000,000, in order that the Corporation might have ample funds with which to finance the purchase of materials and other activities which they were directed to perform under recent legislation. The Senate recedes and concurs in the House provision with respect to enlarging the borrowing powers of the Corporation.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This bill proposes to take $500,000,000 out of our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury. I have sent for and could not obtain a copy of the conference report which we are asked to adopt and put the bill on final passage. The Members of Congress are asked to pass this conference report and take $500,000,000 out of our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury and hand it to the Central and South American debt-defaulting dictatorship countries so that they can raise more cotton and corn, beef and other agricultural products and produce industrial products in competition with those of the United States, and at this very moment we cannot get a printed copy of the conference report on the bill. Does the gentleman believe that is a proper and sound legislative procedure?

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman lodges an objection to a provision in the report on which the House voted affirmatively after ample debate. The conferees have brought back to the House a provision which sustains the action of the House. On the other provision as to which the House conferees yielded our action follows the vote of the minority in the House.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Should the House now vote to adopt this conference report it votes to take $500,000,000 from our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury and hand it to South and Central American debt-defaulting dictatorship countries so that they can produce more industrial and agricultural products in competition with those of the United States. We are aked to vote this $500,000,000 without even having a printed copy of the conference report available. I do not propose to do so. This $500,000,000 raid on our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury in order to play Santa Claus in a big way to international bankers and people in foreign lands is another gross betrayal of our country and our countrymen by our New Deal brethren who are great liberals when it comes to spending other people's money. Borrowed public money, if you please, which as to principal and interest will have to be repaid in tax dollars produced in the sweat and toil of this and several generations still unborn. I intend to obtain a record roll call vote on this $500,000,000 raid on the Treasury of the United States—should I be able to do so under the parliamentary situation—in order that the taxpayers of the United States can put their fingers on who is who when this raid is made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were ayes 87 and noes 41.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman withhold that until the Chair can receive a message from the Senate?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I will withhold it, but I object to the vote.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4164) entitled "An act to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training."

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF WASHINGTON

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present. The Chair will count. Evidently a quorum is not present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 218, nays 139, not voting 72, as follows:

DEFICIENCY BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] to make an announcement.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the whip notice called for the deficiency bill's being brought up Monday. My understanding is that it will not be brought up until Wednesday. Is this the way the Speaker understands it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was entirely responsible for the whip notice going out as it did, because the Chair was informed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] that the committee would be ready on Monday; but since the action of committee on yesterday the bill will not, of course, come up until Wednesday.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky.

SELECTIVE TRAINING AND SERVICE ACT OF 1940

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training, and call it up for immediate consideration.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

"The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That (a) the Congress hereby declares that it is imperative to increase and train the personnel of the armed forces of the United States.

"(b) The Congress further declares that in a free society the obligations and privileges of military training and service should be shared generally in accordance with a fair and just system of selective compulsory military training and service.

"(c) The Congress further declares, in accordance with our traditional military policy as expressed in the National Defense Act of 1916, as amended, that it is essential that the strength and organization of the National Guard, as an integral part of the first-line defenses of this Nation, be at all times maintained and assured. To this end, it is the intent of the Congress that whenever the Congress shall determine that troops are needed for the national security in excess of those of the Regular Army and those in active training and service under section 3 (b), the National Guard of the United States, or such part thereof as may be necessary, shall be ordered to active Federal service and continued therein so long as such necessity exists.

"SEC. 2. Except as otherwise provided in this Act, it shall be the duty of every male citizen of the United States, and of every male alien residing in the United States, who, on the day or days fixed for the first or any subsequent registration, is between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-six, to present himself for and submit to registration at such time or times and place or places, and in such manner and in such age group or groups, as shall be determined by rules and regulations prescribed hereunder.

"SEC. 3. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, every male citizen of the United States, and every male alien residing in the United States who has declared his intention to become such a citizen, between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-six at the time fixed for his registration, shall be liable for training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States. The President is authorized from time to time, whether or not a state of war exists, to select and induct into the land and naval forces of the United States for training and service, in the manner provided in this Act, such number of men as in his judgment is required for such forces in the national interest: Provided, That within the limits of the quota determined under section 4 (b) for the subdivision in which he resides, any person, regardless of race or color, between the ages of eighteen and thirty-six, shall be afforded an opportunity to volunteer for induction into the land or naval forces of the United States for the training and service prescribed in subsection (b), but no person who so volunteers shall be inducted for such training and service so long as he is deferred after classification: Provided further, That no man shall be inducted for training and service under this Act unless and until he is acceptable to the land or naval forces for such training and service and his physical and mental fitness for such training and service has been satisfactorily determined: Provided further, That no men shall be inducted for such training and service until adequate provision shall have been made for such shelter, sanitary facilities, water supplies, heating and lighting arrangements, medical care, and hospital accommodations, for such men, as may be determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, to be essential to public and personal health: Provided further, That except in time of war there shall not be in active training or service in the land forces of the United States at any one time under subsection (b) more than nine hundred thousand men inducted under the provisions of this Act. The men inducted into the land or naval forces for training and service under this Act shall be assigned to camps or units of such forces.

"(b) Each man inducted under the provisions of subsection (a) shall serve for a training and service period of twelve consecutive months, unless sooner discharged, except that whenever the Congress has declared that the national interest is imperiled, such twelve-month period may be extended by the President to such time as may be necessary in the interests of national defense.

"(c) Each such man, after the completion of his period of training and service under subsection (b), shall be transferred to a reserve component of the land or naval forces of the United States; and until he attains the age of forty-five, or until the expiration of a period of ten years after such transfer, or until he is discharged from such reserve component, whichever occurs first, he shall be deemed to be a member of such reserve component and shall be subject to such additional training and service as may now or hereafter be prescribed by law: Provided, That any man who completes at least twelve months' training and service in the land forces under subsection (b), and who thereafter serves satisfactorily in the Regular Army or in the active National Guard for a period of at least two years, shall, in time of peace, be relieved from any liability to serve in any reserve component of the land or Naval forces of the United States and from further liability for the training and service under subsection (b), but nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent any such man, while in a reserve component of such forces, from being ordered or called to active duty in such forces.

"(d) With respect to the men inducted for training and service under this Act there shall be paid, allowed, and extended the same pay, allowances, pensions, disability and death compensation, and other benefits as are provided by law in the case of other enlisted men of like grades and length of service of that component of the land or naval forces to which they are assigned, and after transfer to a reserve component of the land or naval forces as provided in subsection (c) there shall be paid, allowed, and extended with respect to them the same benefits as are provided by law in like cases with respect to other members of such reserve component. Men in such training and service and men who have been so transferred to reserve components shall have an opportunity to qualify for promotion.

"(e) Persons inducted into the land forces of the United States under this Act shall not be employed beyond the limits of the Western Hemisphere except in the Territories and possessions of the United States, including the Philippine Islands.

"(f) Nothing contained in this or any other Act shall be construed as forbidding the payment of compensation by any person, firm, or corporation to persons inducted into the land or naval forces of the United States for training and service under this Act, or to members of the reserve components of such forces now or hereafter on any type of active duty, who, prior to their induction or commencement of active duty, were receiving compensation from such person, firm, or corporation.

"SEC. 4. (a) The selection of men for training and service under section 3 (other than those who are voluntarily inducted pursuant to this Act) shall be made in an impartial manner, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, from the men who are liable for such training and service and who at the time of selection are registered and classified but not deferred or exempted: Provided, That in the selection and training of men under this Act, and in the interpretation and execution of the provisions of this Act, there shall be no discrimination against any person on account of race or color.

"(b) Quotas of men to be inducted for training and service under this Act shall be determined for each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia, and for subdivisions thereof, on the basis of the actual number of men in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and the subdivisions thereof, who are liable for such training and service but who are not deferred after classification, except that credits shall be given in fixing such quotas for residents of such subdivisions who are in the land and naval forces of the United States on the date fixed for determining such quotas. After such quotas are fixed, credits shall be given in filling such quotas for residents of such subdivisions who subsequently become members of such forces. Until the actual numbers necessary for determining the quotas are known, the quotas may be based on estimates, and subsequent adjustments therein shall be made when such actual numbers are known. All computations under this subsection shall be made in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe.

"SEC. 5. (a) Commissioned officers, warrant officers, pay clerks, and enlisted men of the Regular Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Public Health Service, the federally recognized active National Guard, the Officers' Reserve Corps, the Regular Army Reserve, the Enlisted Reserve Corps, the Naval Reserve, and the Marine Corps Reserve; cadets, United States Military Academy; midshipmen, United States Naval Academy; cadets, United States Coast Guard Academy; men who have been accepted for admittance (commencing with the academic year next succeeding such acceptance) to the United States Military Academy as cadets, to the United States Naval Academy as midshipmen, or to the United States Coast Guard Academy as cadets, but only during the continuance of such acceptance; cadets of the advanced course, senior division, Reserve Officers' Training Corps or Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps; and diplomatic representatives, technical attachés of foreign embassies and legations, consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, and consular agents of foreign countries, residing in the United States, who are not citizens of the United States, and who have not declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, shall not be required to be registered under section 2 and shall be relieved from liability for training and service under section 3 (b).

"(b) In time of peace, the following persons shall be relieved from liability to serve in any reserve component of the land or naval forces of the United States and from liability for training and service under section 3 (b)—

"(1) Any man who shall have satisfactorily served for at least three consecutive years in the Regular Army before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for registration under section 2.

"(2) Any man who as a member of the active National Guard shall have satisfactorily served for at least one year in active Federal service in the Army of the United States, and subsequent thereto for at least two consecutive years in the Regular Army or in the active National Guard, before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for registration under section 2.

"(3) Any man who is in the active National Guard at the time fixed for registration under section 2, and who shall have satisfactorily served therein for at least six consecutive years, before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for such registration.

"(4) Any man who is in the Officers Reserve Corps on the eligible list at the time fixed for registration under section 2, and who shall have satisfactorily served therein on the eligible list for at least six consecutive years, before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for such registration: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the persons enumerated in this subsection, while in reserve components of the land or naval forces of the United States, from being ordered or called to active duty in such forces.

"(c) (1) The Vice President of the United States, the Governors of the several States and Territories, members of the legislative bodies of the United States and of the several States and Territories, judges of the courts of record of the United States and of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, shall, while holding such offices, be deferred from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States.

"(2) The President is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States, of any person holding an office (other than an office described in paragraph (1) of this subsection) under the United States or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, whose continued service in such office is found in accordance with section 10 (a) (2) to be necessary to the maintenance of the public health, safety, or interest.

"(d) Regular or duly ordained ministers of religion and students who are preparing for the ministry in theological or divinity schools recognized as such for more than one year prior to the date of enactment of this Act, shall be exempt from training and service (but not from registration) under this Act.

"(e) The President is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States of those men whose employment in industry, agriculture, or other occupations or employment, or whose activity in other endeavors, is found in accordance with section 10 (a) (2) to be necessary to the maintenance of the national health, safety, or interest. The President is also authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from training and service under this Act in the land and naval forces of the United States (1) of those men in a status with respect to persons dependent upon them for support which renders their deferment advisable, and (2) of those men found to be physically, mentally, or morally deficient or defective. No deferment from such training and service shall be made in the case of any individual except upon the basis of the status of such individual, and no such deferment shall be made of individuals by occupational groups or of groups of individuals in any plant or institution.

"(f) Any person who, during the year 1940, entered upon attendance for the academic year 1940–1941—

"(1) at any college or university which grants a degree in arts or science, to pursue a course of instruction satisfactory completion of which is prescribed by such college or university as a prerequisite to either of such degrees; or

"(2) at any university described in paragraph (1), to pursue a course of instruction to the pursuit of which a degree in arts or science is prescribed by such university as a prerequisite;

and who, while pursuing such course of instruction at such college or university, is selected for training and service under this Act prior to the end of such academic year, or prior to July 1, 1941, whichever occurs first, shall, upon his request, be deferred from induction into the land or naval forces for such training and service until the end of such academic year, but in no event later than July 1, 1941.

"(g) Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to require any person to be subject to combatant training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States who, by reason of religious training and belief, is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form. Any such person claiming such exemption from combatant training and service because of such conscientious objections whose claim is sustained by the local board shall, if he is inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act, be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or shall, if he is found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, in lieu of such induction, be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. Any such person claiming such exemption from combatant training and service because of such conscientious objections shall, if such claim is not sustained by the local board, be entitled to an appeal to the appropriate appeal board provided for in section 10 (a) (2). Upon the filing of such appeal with the appeal board, the appeal board shall forthwith refer the matter to the Department of Justice for inquiry and hearing by the Department or the proper agency thereof. After appropriate inquiry by such agency, a hearing shall be held by the Department of Justice with respect to the character and good faith of the objections of the person concerned, and such person shall be notified of the time and place of such hearing. The Department shall, after such hearing, if the objections are found to be sustained, recommend to the appeal board (1) that if the objector is inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act, he shall be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or (2) that if the objector is found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, he shall in lieu of such induction be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. If after such hearing the Department finds that his objections are not sustained, it shall recommend to the appeal board that such objections be not sustained. The appeal board shall give consideration to but shall not be bound to follow the recommendation of the Department of Justice together with the record on appeal from the local board in making its decision. Each person whose claim for exemption from combatant training and service because of conscientious objections is sustained shall be listed by the local board on a register of conscientious objectors.

"(h) No exception from registration, or exemption or deferment from training and service, under this Act, shall continue after the cause therefor ceases to exist.

"SEC. 6. The President shall have authority to induct into the land and naval forces of the United States under this Act no greater number of men than the Congress shall hereafter make specific appropriation for from time to time.

"SEC. 7. No bounty shall be paid to induce any person to enlist in or be inducted into the land or naval forces of the United States: Provided, That the clothing or enlistment allowances authorized by law shall not be regarded as bounties within the meaning of this section. No person liable for service in such forces shall be permitted or allowed to furnish a substitute for such service; no substitute as such shall be received, enlisted, enrolled, or inducted into the land or naval forces of the United States; and no person liable for training and service in such forces under section 3 shall be permitted to escape such training and service or be discharged therefrom prior to the expiration of his period of such training and service by the payment of money or any other valuable thing whatsoever as consideration for his release from such training and service or liability therefor.

"SEC. 8. (a) Any person inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act for training and service, who, in the judgment of those in authority over him, satisfactorily completes his period of training and service under section 3 (b) shall be entitled to a certificate to that effect upon the completion of such period of training and service, which shall include a record of any special proficiency or merit attained. In addition, each such person who is inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act for training and service shall be given a physical examination at the beginning of such training and service and a medical statement showing any physical defects noted upon such examination; and upon the completion of his period of training and service under section 3 (b), each such person shall be given another physical examination and shall be given a medical statement showing any injuries, illnesses or disabilities suffered by him during such period of training and service.

"(b) In the case of any such person who, in order to perform such training and service, has left or leaves a position, other than a temporary position, in the employ of any employer and who (1) receives such certificate, (2) is still qualified to perform the duties of such position, and (3) makes application for reemployment within forty days after he is relieved from such training and service—

"(A) if such position was in the employ of the United States Government, its Territories or possessions, or the District of Columbia, such person shall be restored to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay;

"(B) if such position was in the employ of a private employer, such employer shall restore such person to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay unless the employer's circumstances have so changed as to make it impossible or unreasonable to do so;

"(C) if such position was in the employ of any State or political subdivision thereof, it is hereby declared to be the sense of the Congress that such person should be restored to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay.

"(c) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (A) or (B) of subsection (b) shall be considered as having been on furlough or leave of absence during his period of training and service in the land or naval forces, shall be so restored without loss of seniority, shall be entitled to participate in insurance or other benefits offered by the employer pursuant to established rules and practices relating to employees on furlough or leave of absence in effect with the employer at the time such person was inducted into such forces, and shall not be discharged from such position without cause within one year after such restoration.

"(d) Section 3 (c) of the joint resolution entitled 'Joint Resolution to strengthen the common defense and to authorize the President to order members and units of reserve components and retired personnel of the Regular Army into active military service', approved August 27, 1940, is amended to read as follows:

"'(c) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (A) or (B) of subsection (b) shall be considered as having been on furlough or leave of absence during his period of active military service, shall be so restored without loss of seniority, shall be entitled to participate in insurance or other benefits offered by the employer pursuant to established rules and practices relating to employees on furlough or leave of absence in effect with the employer at the time such person was ordered into such service, and shall not be discharged from such position without cause within one year after such restoration.'

"(e) In case any private employer fails or refuses to comply with the provisions of subsection (b) or subsection (c), the district court of the United States for the district in which such private employer maintains a place of business shall have power, upon the filing of a motion, petition, or other appropriate pleading by the person entitled to the benefits of such provisions, to specifically require such employer to comply with such provisions, and, as an incident thereto, to compensate such person for any loss of wages or benefits suffered by reason of such employer's unlawful action. The court shall order a speedy hearing in any such case and shall advance it on the calendar. Upon application to the United States district attorney or comparable official for the district in which such private employer maintains a place of business, by any person claiming to be entitled to the benefits of such provisions, such United States district attorney or official, if reasonably satisfied that the person so applying is entitled to such benefits, shall appear and act as attorney for such person in the amicable adjustment of the claim or in the filing of any motion, petition, or other appropriate pleading and the prosecution thereof to specifically require such employer to comply with such provisions: Provided, That no fees or court costs shall be taxed against the person so applying for such benefits.

"(f) Section 3 (d) of the joint resolution entitled 'Joint Resolution to strengthen the common defense and to authorize the President to order members and units of reserve components and retired personnel of the Regular Army into active military service', approved August 27, 1940, is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence the following: ', and, as an incident thereto, to compensate such person for any loss of wages or benefits suffered by reason of such employer's unlawful action'.

"(g) The Director of Selective Service herein provided for shall establish a Personnel Division with adequate facilities to render aid in the replacement in their former positions of, or in securing positions for, members of the reserve components of the land and naval forces of the United States who have satisfactorily completed any period of active duty, and persons who have satisfactorily completed any period of their training and service under this Act.

"(h) Any person inducted into the land or naval forces for training and service under this Act shall, during the period of such training and service, be permitted to vote in person or by absentee ballot in any general, special, or primary election occurring in the State of which he is a resident, whether he is within or outside of such State at the time of such election, if under the laws of such State he is entitled so to vote in such election; but nothing in this subsection shall be construed to require granting to any such person a leave of absence for longer than one day in order to permit him to vote in person in any such election.

"(i) It is the expressed policy of the Congress that whenever a vacancy is caused in the employment rolls of any business or industry by reason of induction into the service of the United States of an employee pursuant to the provisions of this Act such vacancy shall not be filled by any person who is a member of the Communist Party or the German-American Bund.

"SEC. 9. The President is empowered, through the head of the War Department or the Navy Department of the Government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place an order with any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry for such product or material as may be required, and which is of the nature and kind usually produced or capable of being produced by such individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry.

"Compliance with all such orders for products or material shall be obligatory on any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof and shall take precedence over all other orders and contracts theretofore placed with such individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, and any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof owning or operating any plant equipped for the manufacture of arms or ammunition or parts of ammunition, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy, and any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof owning or operating any manufacturing plant, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall be capable of being readily transformed into a plant for the manufacture of arms or ammunition, or parts thereof, or other necessary supplies or equipment, who shall refuse to give to the United States such preference in the matter of the execution of orders, or who shall refuse to manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of arms or ammunition, or the parts thereof, or any necessary supplies or equipment, as ordered by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, or who shall refuse to furnish such arms, ammunition, or parts of ammunition, or other supplies or equipment, at a reasonable price as determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, then, and in either such case, the President, through the head of the War or Navy Departments of the Government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, is hereby authorized to take immediate possession of any such plant or plants, and through the appropriate branch, bureau, or department of the Army or Navy to manufacture therein such product or material as may be required, and any individual, firm, company, association, or corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, or the responsible head or heads thereof, failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than three years and a fine not exceeding $50,000.

"The compensation to be paid to any individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry for its products or material, or as rental for use of any manufacturing plant while used by the United States, shall be fair and just: Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to render inapplicable existing State or Federal laws concerning the health, safety, security, and employment standards of the employees in such plant.

"The first and second provisos in section 8 (b) of the Act entitled 'An Act to expedite national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 28, 1940 (Public Act Numbered 671, Seventy-sixth Congress), are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 10. (a) The President is authorized—

"(1) to prescribe the necessary rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this Act;

"(2) to create and establish a Selective Service System, and shall provide for the classification of registrants and of persons who volunteer for induction under this Act on the basis of availability for training and service, and shall establish within the Selective Service System civilian local boards and such other civilian agencies, including appeal boards and agencies of appeal, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act. There shall be created one or more local boards in each county or political subdivision corresponding thereto of each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia. Each local board shall consist of three or more members to be appointed by the President, from recommendations made by the respective Governors or comparable executive officials. No member of any such local board shall be a member of the land or naval forces of the United States, but each member of any such local board shall be a civilian who is a citizen of the United States residing in the county or political subdivision corresponding thereto in which such local board has jurisdiction under rules and regulations prescribed by the President. Such local boards, under rules and regulations prescribed by the President, shall have power within their respective jurisdictions to hear and determine, subject to the right of appeal to the appeal boards herein authorized, all questions or claims with respect to inclusion for, or exemption or deferment from, training and service under this Act of all individuals within the jurisdiction of such local boards. The decisions of such local boards shall be final except where an appeal is authorized in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe. Appeal boards and agencies of appeal within the Selective Service System shall be composed of civilians who are citizens of the United States. No person who is an officer, member, agent, or employee of the Selective Service System, or of any such local or appeal board or other agency, shall be excepted from registration, or deferred from training and service, as provided for in this Act, by reason of his status as such officer, member, agent or employee;

"(3) to appoint by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and fix the compensation at a rate not in excess of $10,000 per annum, of a Director of Selective Service who shall be directly responsible to him and to appoint and fix the compensation of such other officers, agents, and employees as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act: Provided, That any officer on the active or retired list of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, or of any reserve component thereof or any officer or employee of any department or agency of the United States who may be assigned or detailed to any office or position to carry out the provisions of this Act (except to offices or positions on local boards, appeal boards, or agencies of appeal established or created pursuant to section 10 (a) (2)) may serve in and perform the functions of such office or position without loss of or prejudice to his status as such officer in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard or reserve component thereof, or as such officer or employee in any department or agency of the United States: Provided further, That any person so appointed, assigned or detailed to a position the compensation in respect of which is at a rate in excess of $5,000 per annum shall be appointed, assigned or detailed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided further, That the President may appoint necessary clerical and stenographic employees for local boards and fix their compensation without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and without regard to the provisions of civil-service laws.

"(4) to utilize the services of any or all departments and any and all officers or agents of the United States and to accept the services of all officers and agents of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and subdivisions thereof in the execution of this Act; and

"(5) to purchase such printing, binding, and blankbook work from public, commercial, or private printing establishments or binderies upon orders placed by the Public Printer or upon waivers issued in accordance with section 12 of the Printing Act approved January 12, 1895, as amended by the Act of July 8, 1935 (49 Stat. 475), and to obtain by purchase, loan, or gift such equipment and supplies for the Selective Service System as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, with or without advertising or formal contract; and

"(6) to prescribe eligibility, rules, and regulations governing the parole for service in the land or naval forces, or for any other special service established pursuant to this Act, of any person convicted of a violation of any of the provisions of this Act.

"(b) The President is further authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to delegate and provide for the delegation of any authority vested in him under this Act to such officers, agents, or persons as he may designate or appoint for such purpose or as may be designated or appointed for such purpose pursuant to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

"(c) In the administration of this Act voluntarily services may be accepted. Correspondence necessary in the execution of this Act may be carried in official penalty envelopes.

"(d) The Chief of Finance, United States Army, is hereby designated, empowered, and directed to act as the fiscal, disbursing, and accounting agent of the Director of Selective Service in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

"SEC. 11. Any person charged as herein provided with the duty of carrying out any of the provisions of this Act, or the rules or regulations made or directions given thereunder, who shall knowingly fail or neglect to perform such duty, and any person charged with such duty, or having and exercising any authority under said Act, rules, regulations, or directions who shall knowingly make, or be a party to the making, of any false, improper, or incorrect registration, classification, physical or mental examination, deferment, induction, enrollment, or muster, and any person who shall knowingly make, or be a party to the making of, any false statement or certificate as to the fitness or unfitness or liability or nonliability of himself or any other person for service under the provisions of this Act, or rules, regulations, or directions made pursuant thereto, or who otherwise evades registration or service in the land or naval forces or any of the requirements of this Act, or who knowingly counsels, aids, or abets another to evade registration or service in the land or naval forces or any of the requirements of this Act, or of said rules, regulations, or directions, or who in any manner shall knowingly fail or neglect to perform any duty required of him under or in the execution of this Act, or rules or regulations made pursuant to this Act, or any person or persons who shall knowingly hinder or interfere in any way by force or violence with the administration of this Act or the rules or regulations made pursuant thereto, or conspire to do so, shall, upon conviction in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not more than five years or a fine of not more than $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, or if subject to military or naval law may be tried by court martial, and, on conviction, shall suffer such punishment as a court martial may direct. No person shall be tried by any military or naval court martial in any case arising under this Act unless such person has been actually inducted for the training and service prescribed under this Act or unless he is subject to trial by court martial under laws in force prior to the enactment of this Act. Precedence shall be given by courts to the trial of cases arising under this Act.

"SEC. 12. (a) The monthly base pay of enlisted men of the Army and the Marine Corps shall be as follows: Enlisted men of the first grade, $126; enlisted men of the second grade, $84; enlisted men of the third grade, $72; enlisted men of the fourth grade, $60; enlisted men of the fifth grade, $54; enlisted men of the sixth grade, $36; enlisted men of the seventh grade, $30; except that the monthly base pay of enlisted men with less than four months' service during their first enlistment period and of enlisted men of the seventh grade whose inefficiency or other unfitness has been determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, shall be $21. The pay for specialists' ratings, which shall be in addition to monthly base pay, shall be as follows: First class, $30; second class, $25; third class, $20; fourth class, $15; fifth class, $6; sixth class, $3. Enlisted men of the Army and the Marine Corps shall receive, as a permanent addition to their pay, an increase of 10 per centum of their base pay and pay for specialists' ratings upon completion of the first four years of service, and an additional increase of 5 per centum of such base pay and pay for specialists' ratings for each four years of service thereafter, but the total of such increases shall not exceed 25 per centum. Enlisted men of the Navy shall be entitled to receive at least the same pay and allowances as are provided for enlisted men in similar grades in the Army and Marine Corps.

"(b) The pay for specialists' rating received by an enlisted man of the Army or the Marine Corps at the time of his retirement shall be included in the computation of his retired pay.

"(c) The pay of enlisted men of the sixth grade of the National Guard for each armory drill period, and for each day of participation in exercises under sections 94, 97, and 99 of the National Defense Act, shall be $1.20.

"(d) No back pay or allowances shall accrue by reason of this Act for any period prior to October 1, 1940.

"(e) Nothing in this Act shall operate to reduce the pay now being received by any retired enlisted man.

"(f) The provisions of this section shall be effective on and after October 1, 1940. Thereafter all laws and parts of laws insofar as the same are inconsistent herewith or in conflict with the provisions hereof are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 13. (a) The benefits of the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act, approved March 8, 1918, are hereby extended to all persons inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act, and to all members of any reserve component of such forces now or hereafter on active duty for a period of more than one month; and, except as hereinafter provided, the provisions of such Act of March 8, 1918, shall be effective for such purposes.

"(b) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) the following provisions of such Act of March 8, 1918, shall be inoperative: Section 100; paragraphs (1), (2), and (5) of section 101; article 4; article 5; paragraph (2) of section 601; and section 603;

"(2) the term 'persons in military service', when used in such Act of March 8, 1918, shall be deemed to mean persons inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act and all members of any reserve component of such forces now or hereafter on active duty for a period of more than one month;

"(3) the term 'period of military service', when used in such Act of March 8, 1918, when applicable with respect to any such person, shall be deemed to mean the period beginning with the date of enactment of this Act, or the date on which such person is inducted into such forces under this Act for any period of training and service or is ordered to such active duty, whichever is the later, and ending sixty days after the date on which such period of training and service or active duty terminates.

"(4) The term 'date of approval of this Act', when used in such Act of March 8, 1918, shall be deemed to mean the date of enactment of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940.

"(c) Article III of such Act of March 8, 1918, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"'SEC. 303. Nothing contained in section 301 shall prevent the termination or cancellation of a contract referred to in such section, nor the repossession or retention of property purchased or received under such contract, pursuant to a mutual agreement of the parties thereto, or their assignees, if such agreement is executed in writing subsequent to the making of such contract and during the period of military service of the person concerned.'

"SEC. 14. (a) Every person shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of this Act upon publication by the President of a proclamation or other public notice fixing a time for any registration under section 2.

"(b) If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"(c) Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to repeal, amend, or suspend the laws now in force authorizing voluntary enlistment or reenlistment in the land and naval forces of the United States, including the reserve components thereof.

"SEC. 15. When used in this Act—

"(a) The term 'between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-six' shall refer to men who have attained the twenty-first anniversary of the day of their birth and who have not attained the thirty-sixth anniversary of the day of their birth; and other terms designating different age groups shall be construed in a similar manner.

"(b) The term 'United States', when used in a geographical sense, shall be deemed to mean the several States, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico.

"(c) The term 'dependent' when used with respect to a person registered under the provisions of this Act includes only an individual (1) who is dependent in fact on such person for support in a reasonable manner, and (2) whose support in such a manner depends on income earned by such person in a business, occupation, or employment.

"(d) The terms 'land or naval forces' and 'land and naval forces' shall be deemed to include aviation units of such forces.

"(e) The term 'district court of the United States' shall be deemed to include the courts of the United States for the Territories and the possessions of the United States.

"SEC. 16. (a) Except as provided in this Act, all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this Act are hereby suspended to the extent of such conflict for the period in which this Act shall be in force.

"(b) All the provisions of this Act, except the provisions of sections 3 (c), 3 (d), 8 (g), and 12, shall become inoperative and cease to apply on and after May 15, 1945, except as to offenses committed prior to such date, unless this Act is continued in effect by the Congress.

"(c) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

"SEC. 17. This Act shall take effect immediately.

"SEC. 18. This Act may be cited as the 'Selective Training and Service Act of 1940'."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Age limits

The Senate bill required the registration of every male citizen, and every male alien residing in the United States or its possessions who had declared his intention to become a citizen, between the ages of 21 and 31 at the time fixed for his registration. Under the Senate bill the phrase "between the ages of 21 and 31" was defined to refer to men who had attained the twenty-first anniversary of the day of their birth and had not attained the thirty-first anniversary of the day of their birth. The Senate bill also provided that persons between the ages of 18 and 35, regardless of race or color, should be afforded an opportunity to be voluntarily inducted into the land or naval forces (including aviation units) for the training and service described in the bill. After a man had completed his period of training and service, the Senate bill provided that he should be transferred to a reserve component of the land or naval forces until the provisions of the bill became inoperative, or until the expiration of 10 years or until he was discharged from such reserve component, whichever event occurred first.

The House amendment required registration of those between the ages of 21 and 45, which was defined as referring to men who had reached the twenty-first anniversary of the day of their birth and had not reached the forty-fifth anniversary. Persons between the ages of 18 and 35 were to be afforded an opportunity to volunteer to be inducted into the land or naval forces for the training and service prescribed in the amendment. After the period of training and service had been completed, the House amendment provided that the person so completing such training and service should be transferred to a reserve component of the land or naval forces until the expiration of 10 years, or until he attained the age of 45, or until he was discharged, whichever occurred first.

The conference agreement provides that all male citizens, and all male aliens residing in the United States who have declared their intention to become citizens, between the ages of 21 and 36 shall present themselves for registration and submit to registration at such time or times and place or places and in such manner and in such age groups as shall be determined by rules and regulations prescribed by the President. Every such person who is between such ages at the time fixed for his registration and who is not excepted from registration by other provisions of the conference agreement is made liable for training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States. Any person, regardless of race or color, between the ages of 18 and 36, is to be afforded an opportunity to volunteer for induction, but no person who so volunteers is to be inducted so long as he is deferred after classification. No person is to be inducted unless he is acceptable to the land or naval forces. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the House amendment relating to a person's service in a reserve component of the land or naval forces until the age of 45 is reached, or until 10 years after the transfer to such reserve component, or until he is discharged, whichever occurs first. Under the conference agreement, the phrase "between the ages of 21 and 36" is defined as referring to those who have attained the twenty-first anniversary of the day of their birth and who have not attained the thirty-sixth anniversary of such day. The conference agreement defines "land forces" and "naval forces" to include aviation units thereof.

Postponement of induction for 60 days

The House amendment authorized the President to issue, as soon as possible after the enactment of the bill, a call for volunteers between the ages of 18 and 35, and another such call at any time after January 1, 1941, and to induct into the land or naval forces for training and service as many of the men who volunteer as did not exceed the number of men for whom the call was issued. If upon the expiration of 60 days after the issuance of either of such calls the President found that the number of qualified men who had volunteered was less than the number for whom the call was issued, he was authorized to select and induct into the land or naval forces such number of qualified men selected through the Selective Service System as when added to the number who had volunteered would equal the number for whom he issued the call. Until the expiration of 60 days from the date of the issuance by the President of the second call no man was to be inducted into the land or naval forces under any other provision of the bill, except that registration, classification, and selection under such other provisions could take place. There was no similar provision in the Senate bill.

The conference agreement omits this provision of the House amendment.

Provision authorizing the taking over of private manufacturing facilities

The Senate bill provided that whenever the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy determined that any existing manufacturing plant or facility was necessary for the national defense and was unable to arrive at any agreement with the owner for its use or operation by the War Department or the Navy Department, the Secretary, under the direction of the President, was authorized to institute condemnation proceedings with respect to such plant or facility and to acquire it under the Act of February 26, 1931. Upon the filing of a declaration of taking in accordance with the provisions of such act, the Secretary was authorized to take immediate possession of the plant or facility and operate it either by Government personnel or by contract with private firms pending the determination of the issue. Nothing in this provision was to be deemed to render inapplicable existing State or Federal laws concerning the health, safety, security, and employment standards of the employees in the plant or facility.

Under the House amendment, the President was empowered through the head of the War Department or the Navy Department, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place orders for any product or material that might be required and which could be produced by the company concerned. Compliance with the order was made obligatory. Upon the refusal of the company to comply with the order, the President, through the head of the War or Navy Department, was authorized to take immediate possession of the plant, to manufacture therein the product or material required. Failure to comply with the provisions was made subject to imprisonment for not more than 3 years and to a fine of not exceeding $50,000. The compensation to be paid for the products and material or as rental for the use of the plant or facility while used by the United States, was required to be fair and just. Nothing in the provision was to be deemed to render inapplicable existing State or Federal laws concerning the health, safety, security, and employment standards of the employees in the plant. The House amendment also repealed the first and second provisos of the act of June 28, 1940, entitled "An act to expedite the national defense, and for other purposes."

The conference agreement contains the provisions of the House amendment.

Conscientious objectors

The Senate bill provided that nothing therein contained was to be construed as requiring any person to be subject to combatant training or service who by reason of religious training or belief is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form. All persons claiming such exemption because of such conscientious objections were to be listed on a Register of Conscientious Objectors at the time of their classification by a local board, and their names at once referred by the local board to the Department of Justice for inquiry and hearing. After appropriate inquiry by the appropriate agency of the Department of Justice, a hearing was to be held by the Department of Justice in the case of each such person with respect to the character and good faith of his objections. If the objections were found by the Department to be sustained, it was to recommend that (1) the objector be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or (2) if the objector was found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service that he be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. If after the hearing the objections were found not to be sustained, the objector and the local board were to be immediately notified, the name of the objector was then to be removed from the Register of Conscientious Objectors, and the objector was thereafter to be liable for the training and service provided for in the bill. If within 5 days after the date of the findings by the Department of Justice, the objector or the local board gave notice to the other of disagreement with the findings, the local board was to refer the matter for final determination to an appropriate appeal board.

Under the House amendment the character and good faith of the objection of a conscientious objector were to be determined by the local board, subject to the right of appeal by the objector to an appropriate appeal board.

Under the conference agreement, if the objections are not sustained by the local board in the first instance, the objector is given the right to appeal to the appropriate appeal board. Upon the filing of such appeal, the appeal board is directed forthwith to refer the matter to the Department of Justice for an inquiry and hearing. After appropriate inquiry by the proper agency of the Department of Justice, a hearing is to be held by the Department with respect to the character and good faith of the objections. If the Department finds the objections to be sustained, it is to recommend to the appeal board (1) that the objector, if he is inducted under the act, be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or (2) if it is found that he is conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, in lieu of such induction that he be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. In making its decision the appeal board is to consider the record on appeal from the local board, together with the recommendations, which it is not bound to follow, by the Department of Justice. All persons whose claims for exemption under this provision because of conscientious objection are sustained are to be listed by the local board on a Register of Conscientious Objectors.

Limitation on number of men to be inducted

The Senate bill provided that there should not be in active training or service in the land forces of the United States at any one time in time of peace more than 900,000 men inducted under the provisions of the bill.

The House amendment provided that except in time of war there should not be in active training or service in the land and naval forces of the United States at any one time more than a million men inducted under the bill.

The conference agreement provides that except in time of war there shall not be in active training or service in the land forces of the United States at any one time for the 12-month training and service period more than 900,000 men inducted under the bill.

Deferments of public officers

The Senate bill provided that the Vice President of the United States, the governors of the several States and Territories, members of the legislative bodies of the United States and of the several States and Territories, judges of the courts of the United States and of the several States and Territories and of the District of Columbia, and other executive officers of the United States and of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, whose continued service in the executive office held by them was found necessary to the maintenance of the public health, safety, or interest, should, while holding such offices, be deferred from training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States.

The House amendment provided that the Vice President of the United States, and the officers, legislative, executive, and judicial, except judges of inferior courts not of record, of the United States, and of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, while holding such official position shall be deferred (which deferred classification might be waived) from training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States.

The conference agreement provides that the Vice President of the United States, the governors of the several States and Territories, members of the legislative bodies of the United States and of the several States and Territories, judges of the courts of record of the United States and of the several States and Territories and of the District of Columbia, shall be deferred from training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States. The President is authorized by the conference agreement under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to defer training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States of any person holding any office (other than an office described above) under the United States, or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, whose continued service in such office is found, in accordance with section 10 (a) (2) (relating to local boards), to be necessary to the public health, safety, or interest.

Postponement of induction of certain students

The House amendment provided that in the case of students at certain colleges and universities who during the year 1940 entered upon attendance for the academic year 1940–41, the induction of such student was at his request to be deferred until the end of such academic year but in no event later than July 1, 1941.

The conference agreement contains this provision of the House amendment.

Selective service system

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment provided for the creation of a selective service system. The Senate bill provided that the Director of Selective Service should receive compensation at a rate not in excess of $10,000 per annum. Under the House amendment the Director's compensation was to be fixed by the President. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate bill in this respect. The conference agreement also provides that officers on the active or retired list of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, or in reserve components thereof, and officers and employees of any department or agency of the United States, who may be assigned or detailed to any office or position to carry out the provisions of the Act, may serve and perform the functions of such office or position without loss or prejudice to their status as such officers or employees. Thus Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard officers, or officers of Reserve components thereof, so detailed or assigned will continue to receive the same pay, allowances, and benefits (including promotional and longevity rights and privileges) and all other rights and privileges that they have at the time of such detail or assignment and that they would continue to receive had they not been so detailed or assigned. The conference agreement also provides that any person appointed, assigned, or detailed to a position in the Selective Service System the compensation in respect of which is at a rate in excess of $5,000 per annum shall be appointed, assigned, or detailed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. A similar provision was contained in the Senate bill. Clerical and stenographic employees for local boards may, under the conference agreement, be appointed and compensated without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923 as amended.

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment provided that the members of the local boards and the boards and agencies of appeal must be civilians and not connected with the Military Establishment. The provisions of the House amendment in this respect are contained in the conference agreement, and it is further provided that under no circumstances can Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard officers, either on the active or retired list, be assigned or detailed to a position of member of any such board or agency.

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment directed the Director of Selective Service to establish a personnel division with adequate facilities to render aid in the replacement in their former positions of persons who satisfactorily completed their training and service under the act, and to aid them in finding employment elsewhere if such replacement in their former positions was impossible or unreasonable. Under the Senate bill the same service was to be extended to members of the Reserve components. The conference agreement provides that the Director shall establish a personnel division with adequate facilities to render aid in the replacement in their former positions of, or in securing positions for, members of the Reserve components of the land and naval forces who have satisfactorily completed any period of active duty, and persons who have satisfactorily completed their training and service under the Act.

Jurisdiction of courts martial

The Senate bill provided that persons subject to the bill who fail to report for duty as ordered should be tried exclusively in the district courts of the United States and not by military and naval courts martial, unless such persons had actually been inducted for the training and service prescribed in the bill or unless they were subject to trial by court marial under laws in force prior to the enactment of the bill. The House amendment in such cases gave the courts martial and the district courts concurrent jurisdiction, and made failure of persons to report for duty subject to the laws and regulations concerning that branch of the land and naval forces to which they were assigned from the date they were required by the terms of the order to obey the same, even though they had not actually been inducted.

The conference agreement contains the provisions of the Senate bill in this respect.

Physical examinations

The Senate bill provided that each person inducted under the bill was to be given a physical examination at the beginning of his training and service, together with a medical statement showing any physical defects noted on such examination. Upon the completion of the period of training and service, he was to be given another physical examination, together with a medical statement showing any injuries, illnesses, or disabilities suffered by him during the period of his training and service.

The House amendment provided that the induction of a person into the land or naval forces of the United States should not be deemed to be complete until his physical and mental fitness for military or naval service should have been satisfactorily determined.

The conference agreement contains provisions similar both to the provisions of the Senate bill, as well as the provisions of the House amendment.

Authority to accept compensation from private employers

The House amendment provided that nothing contained therein or in any other act was to be construed as forbidding the payment of compensation by any person, firm, or corporation to persons inducted into the land or naval forces under the provisions of the bill, or to members of the reserve component thereof now on or hereafter placed on any type of active duty, which persons and members were, prior to their induction for active duty, receiving compensation from such person, firm, or corporation. There was no similar provision in the Senate bill.

The conference agreement contains provisions similar to the House amendment in this respect with the omission of a provision contained in the House amendment limiting its application to persons below the grade of captain.

Persons discharged from private employment within 30 days prior to enactment of act—presumption as to cause of discharge

The Senate bill provided that any person who had been required to leave a position in the employ of a private employer, other than a temporary position, within 30 days prior to the enactment of the bill should be deemed prima facie to have left such position in order to perform the service required under the bill. This provision had the effect of requiring reinstatement by the employer after the completion of the employee's period of training and service. There was no similar provision in the House amendment.

The conference agreement omits this provision of the Senate bill.

No discrimination on account of race or color

The House amendment provided that in the selection and training of men as well as in the interpretation and execution of the provisions of the act there was to be no discrimination against any person on account of race, creed, or color. The Senate bill contained no similar provision of general application.

The conference agreement provides that in the selection and training of men as well as in the interpretation and execution of the provisions of the act, there shall be no discrimination against any person on account of race or color.

Employment of Communists and members of the German-American Bund

The House amendment provided that it was the policy of Congress that whenever a vacancy was caused in the employment rolls in business or industry by reason of induction into the service of the United States of an employee pursuant to the provisions of the act, such vacancy should not be filled by any person who was not a citizen of the United States or who was a member of the Communist Party or the German-American Bund. The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The conference agreement contains the provisions of the House amendment in this respect except that the provisions relating to persons not citizens of the United States is omitted.

Parole of persons convicted of violations of act

The Senate bill authorized the President to prescribe eligibility, rules, and regulations governing the parole for service in the land or naval forces, or in any other special service established pursuant to the act, of any person convicted of a violation of any provision of the act. There was no similar provision contained in the House amendment.

The conference agreement contains the provisions of the Senate bill in this respect.

Extension of Vinson-Trammell Act to Army and Navy ordnance

The Senate bill provided that the Vinson-Trammell Act should be applicable with respect to contracts hereafter entered into for weapons, munitions, or other military equipment procured by the Ordnance Department of the Army, and by the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy, to the same extent and in the same manner as such provisions are applicable to contracts for aircraft. The House amendment contained no similar provision. The conference agreement omits this provision of the Senate bill.

Increase in base pay of Army

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment increased the base pay of enlisted men of the Army during the period during which the bill is to be in effect. The Senate provision was also made applicable to the Marine Corps. The conference agreement also makes this increase applicable to the Marine Corps, and provides that enlisted men of the Navy shall be entitled to receive at least the same pay and allowances as provided for enlisted men in similar grades in the Army. Under the conference agreement, the increase in base pay provided for is to be effective on October 1, 1940, and is to be permanent.

Amendment to Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act of March 8, 1918

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment made certain provisions of the Soldiers and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of March 8, 1918, applicable with respect to the persons inducted for the training and service under the bill. The House amendment in addition amended that act by providing that nothing in section 301 thereof (relating to installment contracts) should prevent the termination or cancelation of a contract, or the repossession of property purchased under the contract, by mutual agreement of the parties thereto or their assignees. The conference agreement contains a similar provision, but requires that the agreement for termination, cancelation, or repossession be executed in writing subsequent to the making of the original contract and during the period of military service of the person concerned.

Definition of dependent

The House amendment defined "dependent" of a person registered under the bill to include only an individual (1) who is dependent in fact on such person for support in a reasonable manner, and (2) whose support in such a manner depends on income earned by such person in a business, occupation, or employment. The Senate bill did not contain any comparable provision.

The conference agreement contains the provisions of the House amendment in this respect.

Protection of voting rights

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment provided that persons inducted should during their period of training and service be permitted to vote by absentee ballot in the State of which they are residents, if under the laws of such State they are entitled to vote in such election. The conference agreement provides that any person inducted for training and service under the Act shall, during the period of such training and service, be permitted to vote in person or by absentee ballot in any general, special, or primary election occurring in the State of which he is a resident, whether he is within or outside of such State at the time of the election, if under the laws of the State he is entitled so to vote at such election. It is further provided that nothing in this provision should be construed to require granting to any such person a leave of absence for longer than 1 day in order to permit him to vote in person at any such election.

Exemptions from registration

The Senate bill provided, in addition to those excepted from registration under both the Senate bill and the House amendment, that commissioned officers, warrant officers, pay clerks, and enlisted men of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Public Health Service should be excepted from registration. The conference agreement also provides for this exemption.

Adequate housing, etc., for persons inducted

The House amendment provided that induction should not be effected until adequate provision had been made for proper housing of the men selected for training and service. The term "housing" was defined to include such sanitary facilities, adequate water supplies, heating and lighting systems, medical care and hospital accommodations, as are in general accepted by the United States Public Health Service as essential to public and personal health. The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The conference agreement contains provisions similar to those contained in the House amendment but leaves the determination to the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be.

Expiration date

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment provided that the act was to become inoperative and cease to apply on and after May 15, 1945, unless continued in effect by Congress. The House amendment excepted from this provision the provisions relating to service in the reserve components of the land and naval forces. The conference agreement also excepts from the expiration provision the provisions providing for the extension of pensions, disability allowances, etc., to men inducted for training and service under the act, and the provisions increasing the Army and Marine Corps base pay. The conference agreement also excepts from the expiration provisions the provisions creating a personnel division in the Selective Service System to aid persons who have performed their training and service under the act, or who are members of reserve components who have performed their active service, to secure employment.

ANDREW J. MAY,
R. E. THOMASON,
DOW W. HARTER,
W. G. ANDREWS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take up the time of the House in any lengthy discussion of any of the provisions of the bill as reported by the conferees, but I desire to say that the report is unanimous. The House conferees won the major portion of the questions involved.

By action of the Senate late yesterday evening the question of conscription of private industry was rereferred to the conferees, who adopted in toto the identical language of the original Smith amendment, which was the provision adopted by the House.

The controversial Fish amendment was eliminated from the report entirely and from the legislation. The Senate was adamant on this question and the House yielded.

A number of minor changes are involved in the report involving the technical language necessary to give it proper construction, and on all of these things the conferees agreed, the House conferees being yielded to in most instances.

We have guarded every provision of the bill as best we could.

A number of the members of the House Military Affairs Committee very familiar with the whole legislation are present and would like to discuss it, but out of courtesy and respect for the tired and waiting membership of the House of Representatives these gentlemen have consented to yield their time and will not ask for further discussion of the report. As I said, it is unanimous and I hope it will be adopted by a substantial majority.

I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that under the rules and the parliamentary procedure there will be no way of having a direct vote on my amendment. I desire, however, to take this time in order not to defend the 207 Members who voted for my amendment but to make the record straight. Some Members of Congress may even be retired on their vote on this bill and possibly on my amendment. In justice to them and in all fairness to them I want to try to make this record clear in these few minutes. As every Member knows, whether he was for or against my amendment and regardless of the merits or demerits of it, there has been a most unfair, outrageous, and grossly inaccurate attack made by the eastern newspapers, by the columnists, and over the radio against the amendment that a majority of this House voted for, when they stated that it would delay by 60 days the induction of draftees. I repeat what every Member of Congress knows, that it would not delay it by 1 day or 1 hour or 1 minute.

My amendment, providing for an opportunity for the youth of America to enlist within 60 days after the passage of the Conscription Act, does not in any way, as stated in eastern newspapers, delay the operation of the draft. Everyone in Congress is aware of this fact, as is the War Department, as well as the sponsors of the bill.

However, the eastern interventionist press deliberately and maliciously headlined my amendment as an attempt to delay the draft by 60 days, and this slimy and contemptible perversion of the truth was repeated over the radio by war-mongering commentators such as H. V. Kaltenborn, and by Henry A. Wallace, the New Deal candidate for Vice President.

My amendment would actually speed up the induction of soldiers into the Federal service, while the draft bill will not induct any draftees until November 15 or 60 days, and then only 75,000. Under my amendment there would probably have been over 75,000 volunteers within a few weeks' time, with the provision for 1 year enlistment and $30 a month.

The final paragraph of my amendment, which unfortunately many of those who are opposed to it have never read, is clear and concise:

> Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to require or postpone during either of such 60-day periods the registration, classification, or selection of persons to be inducted for training and service under this act.

My amendment has nothing to do with politics, votes, or election day. I preferred 90 days, but used 60 days in order not to delay the operation of the draft.

I despair of our free institutions and republican form of government if the press and columnists, some of whom could not be elected dog catcher, are permitted to deliberately deceive the American people by such dishonest and cowardly methods and brazen falsehoods. Such policies are a reflection on the honesty and integrity of the press, and if continued will destroy its usefulness and influence for public service.

"The proof of the pudding is in the eating thereof." I am positive that the 207 Members of the House who voted for my amendment will be in a position to prove to their constituents by election day that not a single draftee has been inducted into the service by then, and the rejection of the volunteer amendment has actually delayed the training of men for our armed forces and national defense.

"Veritas magna est et pravalebit"—the truth is mighty, and will prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD, and to include certain excerpts from hearings and other matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, we are now approaching the final vote, the vote on the conference report on the Burke-Wadsworth conscription bill. I intend to vote "no." My decision is based on long and careful and, I may say, prayerful study of the entire subject. This subject is not confined to conscription alone—it embraces our foreign policy, our domestic economy, our defense position, the existing political situation, and the immediate and future welfare of those affected by the proposed measure. I cannot hope to more than touch upon some of the many factors involved.

First, let me say that insofar as my own immediate political future is concerned that can have no effect upon my decision, as I have voted my conscientious belief on all measures heretofore, and intend to continue doing so, regardless of political consequences.

On previous occasions I have taken the floor to present certain facts. Begging your indulgence, I shall now amplify some of them.

Mr. Speaker, on October 5, 1937, the President delivered a message to the people and the world, through the medium of an occasion in Chicago. At that moment he announced a change in the foreign policy of the United States, a change toward intervention in the affairs of the world. He announced that the United States believed in "quarantining" aggressor nations. No one seemed to know just what he meant by that, and there was much speculation about it. Suffice it to say that when he so changed our foreign policy toward intervention, then was the time to commence rearming our country for both defense and aggression, because that policy indicated an intent to intervene in world affairs on the side of whichever nation might be termed the "victim of aggression." It is not only idle, it is dangerous, to make big talk unless one is ready, able, and willing to back up the talk with action and force.

A year and a half later, in this Seventy-sixth Congress, came the first real attempt to commence modernizing our defense forces. Since 1920 we had been "living off the fat" of the World War. We ended that war with a considerable stock of matériel—which was not produced in time to use. While our Army and Navy prayed even for funds to experiment with, in order that they might just keep abreast of the times in the knowledge of defense matériel, almost no funds were appropriated for such purposes.

In 1939 we increased the defense budgets over 1938 by $225,000,000, mostly for new planes, for the Army, and by $275,000,000 for the Navy, a large part of which was for improving and adding to the number of outlying defense bases.

Then in the late spring of 1939 we entertained the King and Queen of England, a delightful couple who charmed the American people with their grace and friendliness.

In September 1939 England and France challenged the Nazi invasion of Poland, after urging the Poles to resist, and the war in Europe was on. That is a matter of current history. None of the Allies were prepared to prevent, let alone resist, the invasion of Poland. In the meantime January 1940 rolled around and the Army budget for the fiscal year 1941 submitted by the President was, in amount, almost exactly the amount appropriated for the fiscal year 1940. It was for $853,356,754.

Mr. Speaker, on February 26, 1940, a war was on in Europe. That war had not then broken into its full fury, but we had witnessed the fall of Poland in but a few weeks in September 1939. On February 26, 1940, General Marshall, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, was testifying before the Appropriations Committee of the House, justifying the budget presented. I quote:

> THEORY OF HEMISPHERE DEFENSE
> Mr. CASE. General, in your discussion at one point you referred to your experience with the A. E. F. in France. I was wondering if your concept of hemisphere defense contemplates large concentrations of troops.
> General MARSHALL. No, sir. Compared with European conceptions our concentrations of troops involve very small numbers. Our present small concentrations in the South and West are for the principal purpose of educating our higher commanders in their combat duties and teaching the troops to adapt themselves to field conditions. The maneuver which will be held in April and early May in the Southeast will involve a very small force, about 60,000 troops. This year's program of training represents the first time in our history that we will have been allowed to train comprehensively.
> Mr. CASE. I notice that in your discussion of the modernized 75-millimeter guns you said that they would possibly be large enough for our needs under conditions in this hemisphere. In other words, we do not have the same problems in developing the howitzer that they have in Europe?
> General MARSHALL. To the extent that we shall rarely be confronted with concrete fortifications and masonry villages.
> Mr. CASE. This program is based on the concept of Western Hemisphere defense.
> General MARSHALL. It is based primarily on the basis of learning how to fight. We have not been allowed to learn how to fight, except theoretically, and it is important that we do learn.

Mr. Speaker, for years our Army has been starved for development and experimental funds, to say nothing of funds to purchase sufficient matériel to halfway decently equip the small Army we have had. The officers of our Army have had to sit and plan on paper for what they thought might be required in the event they were again called to defend our country. I shall now trace for you by quotations from hearings before House and Senate committees the progress of thought along defense lines in the few months following.

On Wednesday, May 1, 1940, before the Senate committee, General Marshall testified as follows:

General MARSHALL. This present bill provides for an increase of but 384 enlisted men who are needed for duty with the civilian components.

Senator LODGE. But there is a deficit in corps troops, is there not?

General MARSHALL. Yes, sir; we have the men for the corps troops of one corps only, and at peace strength. What we would like to have, and will have when, and if, 15,000 additional men are provided is the remaining half of the corps troops required for another corps. One-half is already organized in the National Guard. With this addition, we would have the corps troops for two corps.

Senator LODGE. Well, if we have this deficit, why should we not remedy it?

General MARSHALL. You have asked my frank opinion, which is that it is very important at the present moment that we do remedy it.

MINIMUM STRENGTH OF REGULAR ESTABLISHMENT

I would like to add to what I said a little while ago as to the minimum strength for the Regular Establishment. That question is a matter of public policy to be determined, I think, at some later day. At the moment, we ought to have 242,000 men instead of 227,000. If the situation continues to grow more threatening, we ought to take still another step and increase our strength to 280,000. We would then have 9 small Regular triangular divisions and the corps troops of 2 corps. These match up with the National Guard divisions to form the basis of 9 Army corps.

At present we have missing units throughout our organization. Fifteen thousand additional men are required to fill in these blank spaces here and there all over the Army. For example, in some of the divisions in the South we have assembled complete units for the first time. To accomplish that we have drawn a battalion from one regiment to fill out another regiment. We have taken battalions from several regiments and put them together to make still another regiment.

Senator TOWNSEND. Did you make a request for this addition of the Budget, General?

General MARSHALL. No, sir; our first priority at that time was for critical items of equipment.

On page 81 of the Senate hearings we find:

NUMBER OF PLANES BY JULY 1, 1941

Senator LODGE. By July 1, 1941, how many planes ought we to have?

General ARNOLD. We ought to have 5,500 less the number deferred.

Senator LODGE. We ought to have 5,500; all new?

General ARNOLD. No; counting the 2,700. You see, we had that number on hand March 31, 1940.

Senator LODGE. So of that 5,500 only 2,800 will be all that you have that have embodied in them the lessons of the European war?

General ARNOLD. That is not altogether true either, because out of the 5,500 we are only contemplating having a total of 1,965 combat airplanes which will be modern, up-to-date planes.

Senator LODGE. Out of the 5,500?

General ARNOLD. Yes, sir.

Senator LODGE. Of the rest of the 5,500, 2,700 will be what?

General ARNOLD. They will be training planes and obsolete combat types and other planes that can be used back of the lines.

Senator LODGE. So that means that increment of 2,800 in this coming fiscal year will be all modern?

General ARNOLD. Yes, sir. Some of those will be training planes, too.

Senator THOMAS. General, in our tour, we saw nothing in the way of leakless gas tanks. We saw nothing with armor, and we saw nothing of guns larger than perhaps the machine guns; maybe some larger guns of that type. That was in November and December. Later, we saw at Bolling Field some improvement. We saw there a larger gun installed on the planes.

On page 290 of the Senate hearings we find the following:

PONTOON BRIDGES

There is also one unit of 10-ton pontoon bridge.

I might say that, up until we got the $2,000,000 this past February, the engineers have been equipped with types of pontoon bridges that were developed during the Civil War for wagon transportation. We are now, for the first time, getting bridge equipage which is capable of carrying motortrucks and other loads that are involved in the modern division and army corps.

Senator THOMAS. Would you place in the record a very brief description of the material that goes to make up this type of item?

General KINGMAN. Of the pontoon bridge?

Senator THOMAS. Yes.

General KINGMAN. It consists of aluminum boats, four trestles, and the flooring required to make a bridge 244 feet long.

That is one unit.

Senator THOMAS. It is sufficiently strong to accommodate what weight vehicles?

General KINGMAN. Ten-ton vehicles. We have one unit so far. We have others on order. We have been testing that unit over at Fort Du Pont, Del., and we find that we can carry a 12-ton load; that is, light tank, or truck weighing as much as 12 tons; but we call it a 10-ton bridge.

Senator THOMAS. Able to accommodate the regular mobile transportation vehicles, ordinary vehicles and trucks?

General KINGMAN. Yes, sir; and if we put in twice as many boats making what we call a reinforced bridge, then we can carry a medium tank weighing 20 tons, and the 155 G. P. F. gun.

Senator THOMAS. This is equipment that you desire, to enable you to build practically any bridge to accommodate the War Department transportation vehicles?

I could go on to present other testimony but it all goes to show the miserable state of our Army equipment and the result of a starvation policy for the Army over a long period of years. When this war started in Europe we only had 52 planes in service that were not obsolete, 28 tanks that were not obsolete, and 1 piece of pontoon-bridge equipment—and that an old one. We had 141 of the old French 75's that had been modernized, no howitzers of the 105-millimeter size, 4 of the 155-millimeter long-range guns, and no 8-inch howitzers. I could go on down the list. We did have a lot of old rifles and other equipment about as useful as bows and arrows in this modern warfare.

Mr. Speaker, we have now appropriated enormous sums for the purchase of matériel. But these large requests were not made of the Congress until Holland and Belgium had fallen and France was doomed. Only then were we requested, amidst a blast of fearsome hysteria, to prepare for adequate defense. Meantime, our leaders have been making faces at foreign dictators and thumbing their noses, breaking all rules of neutrality with seeming disdain for our pitiful condition. It seems as though they were anxious to break right into the war—equipment or no equipment.

On May 16 the President spoke to the Congress and the country on defense. He spoke in fearsome tones and hysteria swept the country. On the next day, May 17, General Marshall, Chief of Staff of the Army, testified as follows before the Senate committee:

Senator ADAMS. At this moment there is no air base from which continental United States could be attacked, is there?

General MARSHALL. At the moment there is none. The important consideration with relation to antiaircraft is an estimate of our situation in comparison to that of England and France, for example, on which the public mind now dwells. What is necessary for the defense of London is not necessary for the defense of New York, Boston, or Washington. Those cities could be raided under certain favorable circumstances; but as to continuous attack, such a thing would not be practicable unless we permitted the establishment of air bases in close proximity to the United States. So, the best anti-air-defense are the facilities to prevent the establishment of such bases within reach of the United States—in particular, of the Panama Canal. That is one reason why I referred to the necessity in my opinion for an immediate increase for the ground forces in order to make possible the naval and Army air operations to prevent the establishment of such bases.

Senator ADAMS. What we need is anti-air-base forces rather than antiaircraft forces.

General MARSHALL. You might put it that way, sir.

Senator CHAVEZ. Do they not go together, General?

General MARSHALL. The whole thing is interwoven. London is subject to bombardment by large masses—a thousand or more bombers. New York City is subject to raids by carrier-based aviation—probably by not more than 150 bombers. Our defense against that is to sink the carrier. A better way to express it is to have immediately available the means to sink such a carrier—the listening devices and the bombers, and the accompanying pursuit, to make it so dangerous that they would not risk the carrier to undertake the operation. Defensive pursuit aviation is made immeasurably more effective if we have aircraft detectors, about which I made representations to this committee the other day. Prior to aircraft detectors, defense against bombardment was primarily by antiaircraft artillery, because insufficient warning of the approach of enemy bombers prevented the pursuit aviation from engaging the bombers.

I have referred to the matter of the practicability of placing larger orders at the moment. I have referred to the necessity of having a trained, seasoned enlisted personnel in organizations available for operations to prevent the establishment of bases within operating distance of the United States. I should like to add that all of these matters have to be given proper weight in order to get a well-integrated and balanced whole; and it is of great importance, when the matter is so vital to our defense and when it is so terribly expensive, that our action be on the most cold-blooded, businesslike basis we can figure out. As I say, we should not be fooled by mere numbers. Frankly, I should be embarrassed at the moment by more money for matériel alone. A few months later you may see your way clear to make another and further step; but it is much wiser to advance step by step, provided those steps are balanced and are not influenced by enthusiasm rather than by reason.

Then on the same day and before the same committee, there occurred the following:

Senator O'MAHONEY. Is it not a fact, General, that in the event of a real test the Regular Army which we now have, even with the additional strength, would be totally and completely inadequate?

General MARSHALL. Oh, yes, sir; but the minute the emergency really arrives, we will mobilize the National Guard and call Reserve officers to active duty; in addition, we will fill all of our schools—Infantry, Artillery, Cavalry, and Antiaircraft Artillery Schools—with the maximum number of students for specialist training. We are then engaged in mobilization and will be moving toward 1,000,000 men. The plan I have been discussing will give us available trained men in this country to carry out the initial missions which would develop the instant the emergency descends on us. Behind them we would mobilize a large army.

Senator O'MAHONEY. To what extent could the Army be effectively and efficiently expanded in case of emergency, on the basis of the Regular Army which you visualize with this appropriation?

General MARSHALL. I am a little confused by the question. When you say "the Army," you mean the war Army?

Senator O'MAHONEY. Surely; in case of emergency. You have a small unit, which you tell us would be wholly ineffective in case of emergency, except that it is a nucleus for expansion.

General MARSHALL. Is is more than that, Senator. If the Regular Army is increased to 280,000, and beyond that up to around 400,000, by voluntary enlistments, we shall have available mobile troops in this country, with equipment of one kind or another—but workable equipment—to utilize the instant the emergency arises for all the initial missions that will arise. Behind that force will come the mobilization, the recruiting, and training of the National Guard, and parallel with it, of certain additional special units. Thereafter, we pass into the next augmentation, which increases our forces to about one and a half million. The ensuing augmentation passes beyond 2,000,000. Building an army is a process of successive steps.

Senator O'MAHONEY. To go back, you were discussing the fundamental necessities for defense, and you had mentioned trucks and similar equipment and the training of pilots. What was next?

General MARSHALL. The next was the completion of certain essential ground units which the 15,000 men will accomplish. Then there should follow immediately on the heels of the 15,000 men a steady increase of the Regular Army up to a force that will be strong enough to carry out all of the instant requirements for defense in the Western Hemisphere.

VOLUNTARY ENLISTMENTS

Senator O'MAHONEY. What success have you had in obtaining voluntary enlistments?

General MARSHALL. We have had great success up to the present time.

Senator O'MAHONEY. Have you found it necessary to seek volunteers, or have you found it desirable to hold them back? Do you have more volunteers than you have places, for example, or less?

General MARSHALL. We had a large recruiting program to get the Army up——

Senator O'MAHONEY. Still you did not get it up to the authorized strength. Did you get it up to the authorized strength?

General MARSHALL. We went beyond it to 230,000 men.

Mr. Speaker, I am still quoting from the Senate hearings of May 17, 1940.

Senator THOMAS. Let me use a few moments, if I may, with a few questions.

Earlier in this hearing you made some statements giving information as to your own personal opinion, and so stated. I want to know what you think the Congress should provide in addition to the Budget estimates now appearing before the committee. I should like to have you go into detail, and give an outline of what you think the Congress should do, speaking for yourself, on your own volition, in answer to my questions. I want this information preserved as a matter of record, so that, if there is any question about it later on, the responsibility will fall where it belongs.

INCREASE IN ENLISTED PERSONNEL

General MARSHALL. In addition to this program as represented by the President's message of yesterday, it is my personal opinion that we should immediately proceed with the further increase of the Army up to its authorized peacetime limit of 280,000 men, and, as we approach that limit, in the light of the situation at that time, we must then decide to what extent we should go beyond that strength. I anticipate the necessity of 400,000 men before we finish with this business of preparing for emergencies short of full mobilization.

ESTIMATED INCREASED COST

Senator THOMAS. At this point, put in the record the estimated cost of doing the thing that you now suggest you think should be done.

General MARSHALL. To carry the Regular Army up to 280,000 will require approximately $50,000,000, with the various equipment necessities.

Senator ADAMS. Is that annually?

General MARSHALL. No, sir; that is the first year, 1941.

The first cost includes the annual recurrent charges and also the initial equipment.

Senator THOMAS. Does that cover all that you think should be done in addition to what the Budget provides?

General MARSHALL. Yes, sir; at the moment. These measures provide a base of departure for possible mobilization. When we have assimilated this program, then will be the time to come forward for such further sums as may be necessary, and these will be tremendous sums. Later on it may be necessary to ask for about $300,000,000 to complete various items of essential or commercial matériel. The following step will carry us into the billions to provide the facilities for actually carrying out a mobilization and fitting an army over a period of 6 months.

Senator ADAMS. That is a war basis, then?

General MARSHALL. Yes, sir.

Senator THOMAS. Is it your opinion that if we should provide what you now indicate you think we should have, the sum necessary to do that might relieve us later on of going into billions and going on a strictly war basis?

General MARSHALL. That is my opinion, that the present situation is an example of the wisdom of the adage that "a stitch in time saves nine." We can do certain things now that may save us from the necessity of doing tremendously costly things later on.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me turn on to June 4, 1940, when the House Committee on Appropriations was taking testimony on the supplemental national-defense appropriation, 1941.

Mr. CANNON. How did your original request compare with the amount provided for the current year, and how did the final Budget estimate submitted to Congress compare with the amount provided for the current year for the same purpose?

GENERAL MARSHALL. Our original request or, rather, that part that was approved, is the amount provided in the President's 1941 Budget.

Mr. CANNON. How much is your budget for 1940, that is, your total budget for this year?

Mr. WOODRUM. The amount is $851,473,245, plus contract authorizations.

NEED FOR ADDITIONAL NATIONAL-DEFENSE FUNDS

General MARSHALL. Then came developments in the world situation that first made it necessary for me to immediately get the approval of the White House to provide for the deficiency of $24,750,000 in critical items of equipment for existing units of the Regular Army and National Guard. However, $18,000,000 only was approved and that latter sum was forwarded as a supplemental estimate to the Senate which had before it the military appropriation bill for 1941.

As the situation abroad became rapidly worse something had to be done in the way of definite preparations that would have an immediate effect. Our matériel program, in a large measure, would give us no major result inside of about a year or a year and a half after funds became available.

So I urged that the President request Congress to consider a further increase in funds. The proposed increase included the money to give us a total of 280,000 men in the Regular Establishment. It included only a small number of planes.

Out of that request came the President's defense message of May 16, which included the items that I had recommended, except that it only provided for approximately 28,000 additional soldiers for the Regular Establishment.

Mr. CANNON. It did not provide for the full amount you had recommended?

INCREASED PERSONNEL PROGRAM

General MARSHALL. It did not provide for the full amount in personnel, but it did provide the full amount for matériel. It provided for an increase in the Regular Army to 255,000 or 25,000 below authorized peace strength. It also provided for increased pilot training to reach a rate of 7,000 pilots per year.

So it came out with a personnel reduction of 25,000 men below authorized peace strength.

Mr. WOODRUM. Came out of where?

General MARSHALL. Out of the Budget, with a personnel reduction of 25,000 men, but with the full matériel request we had made, and with an additional amount for some heavy bombers, and for a large number of planes for the increased program for training pilots.

The Senate not only approved the supplemental estimates of May 16, but added funds for 25,000 additional men, which gave us the authorized peace strength of 280,000 as provided by the National Defense Act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, from the foregoing it is seen that on June 4, 1940, General Marshall testified before the House Appropriations Committee that, while the President through his Bureau of the Budget had recommended all the matériel requested, the President had cut the number of soldiers requested by 25,000. That is most important and indeed almost an accusation in these difficult times.

But let us examine the plan of the War Department. Let us see what their idea of an adequate defense is. In these same hearings we read as follows, on page 71:

OBJECT OF PRESENT PLAN

Mr. WOODRUM. General, what are we building this force on; on what general policy? What are we going to defend?

General MARSHALL. This plan is entirely devoted to the problems as we visualize them in the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. WOODRUM. The whole Western Hemisphere; not the continental United States?

General MARSHALL. Not the continental United States. We do not visualize any invasion of this country. An air raid or something of that sort is possible, but, frankly, at the present moment we do not see it in the offing. But we see all manner of possibilities in the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. WOODRUM. And it is with that idea in view that we are building the forces for the defense of the Western Hemisphere?

General MARSHALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOODRUM. For any eventualities?

General MARSHALL. For any eventualities.

Mr. WOODRUM. And this bill will carry that defense forward as rapidly as you think it can be carried forward under existing industrial conditions?

General MARSHALL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is as far as you think we should go at this time?

General MARSHALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOODRUM. Do you look to any necessity for equipment beyond this, for reserves in the future?

General MARSHALL. Yes, sir. If we go to mobilization, there will be tremendous additional demands for equipment. But the $200,000,000 for new facilities that I spoke about will give us a means of meeting partially that problem by reducing the bottlenecks; that is, by providing some of the facilities to produce those things which cannot be obtained in the industrial market.

We are not proposing this enlarged program as a permanent program. We did not ask for an increase in the permanent corps of officers last September. We are not asking for a permanent increase of the 50,000 enlisted men, or of the 25,000 enlisted men now in the military appropriation bill. We are trying to keep the present expansion on a temporary basis. Wherever practicable construction is of a temporary character and our program of expansion is so drawn that when the emergency has passed we can shrink more rapidly than we expanded and with a minimum of waste.

TERM OF ENLISTMENT OF EMERGENCY FORCE

Mr. SNYDER. As I understand you, General, the 55,000 men would not be taken on for a 3-year enlistment.

General MARSHALL. No, sir; not for a 3-year enlistment. In other words, we are requesting a purely volunteer force for a short term only.

Mr. SNYDER. Since we have so many young men, why would it not be a good idea to have them enlist for 3 years?

General MARSHALL. Because it is much harder to get them, sir. We can again take stock of ourselves next winter or next spring.

Mr. TABER. You are not taking any enlistments now except for the winter and spring?

General MARSHALL. Our present enlistments are for 3 years. We wish to enlist the additional 95,000, however, on the basis of a purely temporary force for the emergency.

Incidentally, the voluntary enlistments, on a 3-year basis at $21 per month were, in the first 24 days of August, 38,333. The Army has more volunteers than it can presently digest. The Navy has 8,000 on its waiting list. All this in spite of the fact that there is also going on a recruiting drive for the C. C. C. at $30 per month, and if I read the bill correctly, then C. C. C. enrollees will be deferred.

Before we get down to the conscription bill I want to submit to you General Marshall's idea of the proper age for first enlistment of soldiers. This has a direct bearing on the conscription measure and is very enlightening. I quote from the Senate hearings on the Military Establishment appropriation bill for 1941, Wednesday, May 1, 1940, as it appears on page 69.

General MARSHALL. We are studying the use in war of older men. For example, older men, men between 35 and 45 are particularly suited for military police work. In France our military police were young men, lacking in the tolerance and that more benign point of view which comes only with years.

Senator THOMAS. If you have old men, that would change the ratio. At the present time, we have an Army with hospitals as an incident, and if you get old men, you will have hospitals with the Army as an incident.

General MARSHALL. I did not understand you, Senator.

Senator THOMAS. I said at the present time we have an Army with hospital facilities as an incident to the Army; but if you get old men in the service you will have the hospitals as the main consideration and the Army as an incident.

General MARSHALL. Young men get all of the diseases. They take all of the risks; get all of the colds and are sick a great deal until they finally become hardened. At first, the older man, say around 30, is the more desirable soldier, but he lacks stamina. He does not react from hardships the way the younger men do. The young fellow is a great care at first, because he will not take care of himself. He gets sore feet and he acquires all of the camp diseases. He does not clean his mess kit, and he eats injudiciously and suffers from diarrhea and other disorders. The older men avoid much of that. But the older man does not have the stamina. When you put a heavy pack on him his age begins to tell heavily.

Please notice that General Marshall considers that an "older man, say around 30, is the more desirable soldier but he lacks stamina." Men 35 to 45 are fit for military police work.

So, Mr. Speaker, we arrive at the direct consideration of the conscription bill, leaving out many of the important and relevant facts of recent history and foreign policy. We are faced with a bill. It must be voted up or down. At this point it becomes a question whether or not we are to mobilize our Military Establishment up to a full war strength of several million men.

It is the duty of the General Staff to design a defense force in accordance with our foreign policy and our relationship to the affairs of the world. If we are to seek war by engaging in wordy threats and direct participation in international strife, then we must mobilize to full strength and do so at once. That is a matter of public policy and the Congress has something to say about it. For my part, I am opposed to engaging in foreign wars. Our leaders say that they, too, are opposed to our engaging in foreign wars. If that be true, then why do they go out of their way to invite our entry into a foreign war? My belief is that we should prepare ourselves for defense. I have voted to increase our Army to its full strength of 400,000 men. I have voted to give our National Guard and Reserves a year of training. I have voted to buy a complete new outfit of everything from shoes to aircraft. I have voted to double the size of the Navy and to establish new bases, and to add a second set of locks to the Panama Canal.

What next? Mr. Speaker, now is the time to stop, look, and listen. If we go into full mobilization, it means that we expect immediate war. The country is being geared up to war. The people are being worked up into war hysteria. There can be only one answer, and that is that we are preparing for entry into a war abroad. General Marshall has testified that 375,000 men in the Regular Army plus the Organized Reserves is adequate to defend the Western Hemisphere. Every military man I have talked to admits that it would take several years for a foreign power or group of powers to prepare for an invasion of this country, even if they were rash enough to contemplate such a step; yes, even with a combination of all the great navies and all the available merchant shipping to bring them to our shores.

I have supported and favor building our defense forces to maximum strength and power. I have so voted in the Congress, but I am opposed to our entering a foreign conflict. If we need more than a million Regulars and Reserves under arms, then there is in my judgment a better way to raise and train a Reserve army. That is the Swiss system.

Mr. Speaker, the Burke-Wadsworth bill takes 1 out of 10 men from civil life, by lot or otherwise, and compels him to leave his vocation and enter upon a year of military training. He then must remain in the Reserve force for 10 years on call. The other 9 men go scot free. In the Swiss system, young men are called for training by age groups. As they reach, say 18 years of age, then all physically fit men go in for training without exception. It is fair and just. They serve alike and they start out even after their period of training.

I favor the principle of universal service—soldiers, capital, and labor—in event of war; but for training an army, I favor universal service in one age group, if such a large army is needed.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, there are many other inequities in this bill. Soldiers who have served 3 years in the Regular Army are exempt from this service, but sailors and marines who may have served twice as long are not exempt. That is ridiculous.

Then aliens who have not declared their intention to become citizens are exempt, but section 8 (i), concerning jobs, reads as follows:

(i) It is the expressed policy of the Congress that whenever a vacancy is caused in the employment rolls of any business or industry by reason of induction into the service of the United States of an employee pursuant to the provisions of this act such vacancy shall not be filled by any person who is a member of the Communist Party or the German-American Bund.

Aliens can get the jobs but not if they are members of the Communist Party or the German-American Bund. Who can know what organizations they belong to? How can the employer tell? And what about the "fellow travelers" who are not regular Communist Party members? And what about Fascists, and maybe Australian "fellow travelers"? Mr. Speaker, that provision indicates the hysteria of war propaganda and prevents nothing.

Mr. Speaker, the press, the radio, and the movies are working together, like the several tubes of a calliope, roaring and screeching out propaganda for war upon our people. Let some of us, at least, keep our sanity if we can and not be frightened into another bloody folly. We need an adequate Army, Navy, and air force. Let us have it. But let us not create something that will require us to become a totalitarian state to support it. Let us not create a monster that will eat out all our substance and bring poverty and distress for generations to come. We have not paid for the last war yet. The next one will not be paid for except in blood and tears.

Mr. Speaker, in the hope that the foregoing has made some of my reasons clear, and to summarize, may I say I am opposed to this bill principally because there is a better way to accomplish the same end, because it provides a convenient vehicle for dictatorship, and lastly because it creates a war hysteria that will make a declaration of war almost inevitable.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, during the general debate on the Burke-Wadsworth bill, September 7, I took occasion to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that subsection E of section 9, page 28, of this bill, according to an informal opinion of officials of a certain Government department, does not mean a thing; and that no protection whatsoever is provided as intended by Congress for selectees affected by this bill, insofar as benefits under social security, Railroad Retirement Act, and civil-service retirement are concerned.

An amendment offered to this section by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] was adopted for the purpose of strengthening the intent of this section of the bill.

But in reality what does this amendment do? It simply places these selectees either on furlough or leave of absence. It does not provide them with an active status or allow them to participate in benefits for the period spent in training.

Let me briefly illustrate the manner in which this section of the Burke-Wadsworth draft bill operates.

John Smith, a railroader, is drafted under the Burke-Wadsworth bill. He serves the required 1-year period and returns to his employment with the railroad company. At the completion of 30 years' service and having reached the age of 65, Smith applies for retirement. The Railroad Retirement Board under existing law will inform Smith that while he has 30 years' service, yet for retirement purposes only compensated service years can be recognized; hence he has actually 29 years' service and will have to continue his employment for an additional year to make up for the year spent in the military service of his country.

Smith, according to the informal opinion, had only one alternative, and that was to pay to the Railroad Retirement Board the monthly contribution of both employee and employer, which amounts at the present time to 6 percent of the monthly wage. If Mr. Smith is drawing a monthly wage of $100 as a railroad employee he pays $3 monthly and the company pays $3 monthly into the retirement fund. But under this plan Mr. Smith as a selectee under the draft bill will receive $30 monthly, and to continue retirement status with the Railroad Retirement Board he must pay $6 monthly.

If Mr. Smith is a coal miner, or in some other industry under the Social Security Act, or if he is in Federal employment under civil-service retirement, he will be faced with the same problem of having to pay the retirement assessment out of his $30 monthly pay as a selectee in the United States Army.

Gentlemen, surely you are not going to penalize the young men drafted by making no provisions for these monthly contributions. It is the same old story—insurance is not in force unless someone pays the premium.

Recalling my statement of September 7, this Congress should provide the means for payment of the monthly contribution before passing this bill. In so doing, a grateful government will be looking after these new selectees and taking a lesson from the days of 1917–18 when the young men of that era were given no credit for the period spent in the armed forces of these United States.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, we now have before us the conference report submitted by the conferees of the Senate and House. This report has already been forced through the Senate. I rise to express my vigorous opposition to it.

I spoke against the bill when it was before the House and voted against it when it passed the House some days ago. I spoke and voted for the Fish amendment, to give the volunteer system a test, and without delaying 1 day or 1 hour the induction of all men into the naval and military service that might be necessary. The Fish amendment was adopted by a record vote in the House of 207 to 200. Through strong pressure, the Fish amendment has been stricken from the bill.

FAVORS PREPAREDNESS ON LAND, SEA, AND IN THE AIR

Let me emphasize again that no one could favor more strongly than I thorough preparedness on land, sea, and in the air so that our country could successfully defend itself against any and all nations that might attack us. I have voted for all the appropriations and authorizations requested by the President for this purpose, amounting in all to approximately $15,000,000,000, and in time of war or peril to our country, I would not hesitate to vote to conscript all the manpower and the wealth of the country necessary for its defense. We are not now technically or otherwise at war with any nation. No nation has attacked or has even threatened to attack the United States or the Western Hemisphere.

What should we do with respect to conscription of the men and wealth of this Nation in peacetime?

TWENTY-FIVE MILLION MEN AND BOYS

The bill as originally introduced in the House would cover within a period of 5 years as provided in the bill, all males who are citizens of the United States over 16 years of age and up to and including 64 years of age—about fifty million in all. The bill that passed the House the other day covered 25,000,000 men and eight and one-half million boys over 16. The bill as amended and set out in the conference report includes all males between 21 and 35 years of age who are citizens of the United States—about sixteen million five hundred thousand that must register now, but as this bill will cover a period of 5 years it includes all boys now over 16 years of age, but who will become 21 years of age before 1945—approximately eight million five hundred thousand. Therefore the conference report covers, in effect, 25,000,000 men and boys. It throws a barrier across the pathway of life of all of them. How can they plan their education, profession, occupation, their social and political lives? They have no way of knowing how soon they may be called and if they are called and serve 1 year, they are then subject to be called during the following 10 years. It is bound to mean a great upset in the economic, social, and political lives of these 25,000,000 men and boys.

This is the first time in the history of our country that a conscription or draft bill has been passed in peacetime.

There should be some strong and compelling reasons to forsake the way of democracy and adopt the way of the dictators of this day and all other ages.

HAVE WE BEEN THREATENED OR ATTACKED?

I know those who favor this measure have made many of our citizens believe we are about to be invaded by Hitler, and many of our citizens have been flooded with all sorts of propaganda. This propaganda originated in Europe. They have been and are determined to involve us in the European-Asiatic-African war. They have been busy making the people of this country war-minded and stirring up war hysteria. Many people in this country with selfish interests to serve, such as munitions makers, rich men and women with investments in Europe, have urged conscription of the men and boys of this Nation. They did not like it so well, however, when an amendment was put into the bill to conscript wealth. Their propaganda through the great newspapers had whipped up war hysteria and the war spirit. We have not been attacked or threatened by any nation on earth. I know of no leading naval or military expert who seriously contends that Hitler can successfully launch an attack on the United States or the Western Hemisphere. We must have ships, submarines, planes, and guns, both aircraft and antiaircraft guns, and coast-artillery weapons. Germany has been unable to cross 22 miles of English Channel and subdue Great Britain. How can she come three or four thousand miles and successfully attack the United States and the 20 other nations of the Western Hemisphere? I want us to have the best navy in the world. After careful inspection of our fleets, auxilliaries, bases, and men, Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Knox, said only yesterday:

I am firmly convinced our sea forces are the most powerful and efficient in the world.

England has agreed that she would not turn over any part of her fleet to Germany and Italy. Germany and Italy have small fleets. Billions are now being spent to improve our Navy. Must we conscript men for the Navy—knowing that there are thousands of able-bodied young men on the Navy's waiting list. Must we conscript 25,000,000 boys and men to provide manpower for our air force? No. The Air Corps some time ago refused to take further applications from able-bodied young men to join the Air Force because it had thousands of able-bodied suitable young men on the waiting list. Thousands of able-bodied young men have volunteered and are clamoring to get into the Navy and air forces. Do we need to conscript 25,000,000 boys and men at this time for the Army? Some of our ablest generals and experts say that a well-equipped mechanized army of 585,000 men would fully meet all of our requirements for manpower in the Army to defend our country. It is reliably stated that Germany used only about 250,000 men of her armies to subdue France. She had a thoroughly mechanized army—her equipment was superior to that of France. With this mechanized army of 250,000 men, she overthrew France's "finest army in the world" of 6,000,000 men who had served for years in the French Army as conscripts. Unless we send our boys to fight in foreign lands and meddle in the wars of Europe, Asia, and Africa, we do not need a large army, if it is properly equipped, to defend our country. We need plenty of tanks, planes, antiaircraft guns, and coast-artillery guns, and we have freely voted billions of dollars for this purpose.

Is there a shortage of manpower available for the Army? The President has now, subject to his immediate call and under his control, over 800,000 officers and men of the Regular Army, the National Guard, and the Reserves. No one seriously contends that we have guns, equipment, supplies, or quarters for a third of this number of men. For nearly a month now the President has had the right to call the National Guard of this Nation, numbering 300,000 men or more, and he has called out less than 60,000. Mr. Knudsen, who is in charge of manufacturing equipment, and so forth, for our Army, testified the other day that, working all of our facilities at full capacity, we would not have equipment for an army of 750,000 before 1942. There are more than 300,000 men of the National Guard and Reserves that the President could have called but he has not done so. Ablebodied young men have been volunteering by the tens of thousands for service in the United States Army. In the month of August, more than 40,000 volunteered and were accepted for 3 years at $21 per month. I am sure that more of these other men would have been called but for the fact that the Army is not prepared to receive them or to take care of them. We have more men than we can use.

SEEKING POWER AND NOT MEN

It was argued during the debate on this bill that we could not secure volunteers in sufficient numbers to man our ships, planes, and guns. It was claimed by the proponents of this bill and the administration that there should be called into service 400,000 new men by January 1, 1941, and the first call would be for 75,000 to report on or about November 15, 1940.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] offered an amendment which provided that the President should issue a proclamation calling for 400,000 volunteers to report in 60 days, and if 400,000 did not volunteer within this 60 days the provisions of this conscription bill would go into effect. A majority of the House, including myself, supported the Fish amendment. We wanted to give the volunteer system a test, although it was not a fair test for it. The President and the backers of this conscription bill opposed it, but the amendment won. The conferees have taken that salutary provision out of the bill. It would have gotten the 400,000 men by November 15, 1940. Of course, it would have expedited the procurement of men. How viciously and vigorously the proponents of the conscription bill fought this amendment. They knew that it would work and would explode the contention that we had to conscript 25,000,000 men and boys in peacetime in order to secure sufficient men for our Army. The backers of this bill were afraid of the test. The Army and Navy have always opposed the volunteer system. The author of the conscription bill, when he was in the Senate more than 18 years ago, tried to get through a military conscription bill. We were not then at war and were not threatened by any nation. It was defeated in the Senate but there has been growing in this country for a number of years a group that would forsake the volunteer system and fasten a policy of military conscription on the people. This war in Europe and the alarm created in this country afforded them the opportunity they had been seeking for a long time.

One of the backers of this bill said in the House today that certain Army officials have been working on this proposal for 10 years. This spokesman wanted the country to know what these Army officers had been doing on the quiet and this spokesman was afraid these officers would not be given due credit for helping to fasten this undemocratic policy on our country. It may be convenient for our Army and Navy officials to reach into this pool of 25,000,000 men at any time they may desire but it will be very inconvenient and will create hardships and heartaches for these 25,000,000 boys and men and their families. It was clear that we could secure ample men by voluntary enlistments on a 3-year basis at $21 per month. What if we should fix it at 1 year and $30 per month as provided in this conscription bill? We could secure many more men than we shall ever need; and the volunteer system would be better for the country. I cannot help but believe that soldiers and sailors who desire to enter the Army and Navy as a career, and want to do that thing will develop into more efficient soldiers or sailors than those who are taken from their jobs and homes and forced into the Army or Navy. The volunteer system in peacetime is real democracy. The citizens do what they desire to do and what they have a right to do. Some desire to be farmers, lawyers, doctors, ministers, and so forth, while others desire to serve in the Army or Navy.

We do not learn democracy in the Army and Navy; there cannot be freedom of speech or of the press there. The subordinate must hold his tongue and follow orders from his superiors. It is going to require a superhuman effort on the part of this country to rid itself of this conscription law. At the end of 5 years the Army and Navy will be too big and powerful and too influential to accomplish its repeal. We are likely to follow the course pursued in dictatorial countries in that we will tighten up this law and suppress the freedom and liberties of our people. Italy now gives her boys military service at the age of 8 years. They insist on women giving birth to children, whether they are married or not married, to produce boys for conscripted armies. A powerful conscripted army did not save Germany in 1917 and 1918. France has had a universal conscripted army for years and years and was overrun and conquered in 1940. Conscription is the policy being followed by dictators of Europe today and the dictators through all the centuries. There cannot be real freedom or real democracy in nations where a policy of conscription is followed. Conscription breeds militarism and militarism means dictators and war. [Applause.]

In conscripting 25,000,000 men, is it intended to aid our politically ambitious President? They are speaking in terms of having millions of trained men. Is it the purpose of the administration to send them to foreign lands? Is there not good grounds to believe our President is pushing us into the European-Asiatic-African war; in fact, has he not already involved us in that war?

None of us have any use for Hitler and Mussolini. We are anxious to see Great Britain win, but must American fathers and mothers every 25 years furnish the blood and treasure to bail out some European country? Our President has taken over the Federal courts; he has taken control of Congress; he has countless billions at his disposal and he has forced a subservient Congress to grant him many extraordinary and dictatorial powers. Shall we now place under his thumb the manpower of this Nation? He now regards himself as the indispensable man of this Nation; he must have a third term. He already has too much power for any President in peacetime and especially one that has proven himself to be as ambitious as Mr. Roosevelt.

Believing this measure threatens the freedom and liberties of the American people, I feel constrained to speak and vote against this conference report.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am still as firmly opposed to conscription in peacetimes as I have ever been and I shall vote against the conference report.

My principal objection to this conscription bill is that we never yet have conscripted men in peacetimes. We are not at war yet, but the administration is demanding war powers. When we get into war I shall favor universal compulsory military training. That is the only fair way to raise an army. But since we have about 700,000 to 1,000,000 soldiers now ready to be brought together and trained and about 300,000 sailors and marines and Reserves of different kinds, and since we do not have the equipment for one-half of this number I think we should not draft any more until we can clothe and feed and furnish shelter and equipment for those we now have. We will not be able to do this for several months yet. When this is done and if the emergency becomes more threatening or if war is declared or is apparently inevitable I think there may then be a reason for this kind of legislation. While I might not go as far as some would go in conscripting wealth in wartimes I feel that we should learn something from our experiences in the last war. Wealth, like manpower, must play its proper part in national emergencies. Its proper part cannot be played if it is to be threatened and blackjacked before it is given a chance to do anything. The businessmen are as patriotic as any other group of our citizens but there are some cheaters and chiselers in all groups.

The Constitution says that Congress "shall have power to raise and support armies." That means that Congress can conscript men. The Constitution also says, "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." That means that the Government can draft property but that it must do so by due process of law and for just compensation. Due process of law does not mean that an Army officer can come in and take a man's property and pay him what he thinks is a fair price. Due process of law means that no property may be taken until the law has had a chance to operate. What law? Such law as is now in operation permitting the taking of property for public use. Every State has passed such laws. Let them abide by the Constitution. There is no emergency grave enough to justify setting aside the Constitution. If the Constitution and the laws provide a complete method whereby the Government may take one's property, why not comply with the law and the Constitution? Let us do things right. There is no use to permit the President or anybody else to go beyond the Constitution. Our tendency is fast toward dictatorship. We do it in a wild enthusiasm to want to do something quick. We won our liberty through tribulation. We cherish it while the whole world is toppling to destruction. Why lose it through hysteria? It is always easy to get into trouble and difficult to get out of it.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reaffirm my stand on this measure. I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two articles and an editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, the 16,500,000 men and boys from 21 years of age to 35 years of age who will be subject to the proposed draft measure known as the Burke-Wadsworth bill immediately upon its passage, and the 5,000,000 boys from 16 years of age to 21 years of age who will become subject to its provisions between the date of its passage and May 15, 1945, their relatives and friends, are, of course, vitally interested in knowing the provisions of the proposed act. I shall now briefly set out the requirements of the proposed law. Any violation of the act is a felony, and is punishable by a term of imprisonment of not more than 5 years or a fine of not more than $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment. In the event the act becomes the law of the land, I advise and urge everyone affected by it to obey it.

THE TERMS OF THE ACT

It provides for the conscription of men and boys between the ages of 21 and 35, inclusive. It will require the registration of an estimated 16,500,000 citizens and aliens seeking citizenship. Five million of this number will, upon the passage of the act, constitute a reservoir from which the first 1-year conscripts will be drawn.

The drafting of men will begin immediately after the registration and as soon as the machinery can be set up and swung into action.

The act permits the Government to resort to a draft of industry. The act provides that those drafted may be inducted for training or service anywhere in the Western Hemisphere and in the Philippines, and that the act remain in force until May 15, 1945.

The act leaves much to the discretion of the President. By Executive order, and through rules and regulations promulgated by him, he can determine those who are called first and the ages of those to be called, and also whether they are to be trained and are to serve in the United States and its possessions or whether they are to be trained and serve in Canada, Mexico, Central America, or South America.

The President has the power to decide, upon the recommendation of the War Department or the joint Army and Navy Committee on Selective Service, to call first men between the ages of 21 and 25, or the President could make his calls, in required numbers, from another age range—21 to 23, or 21 to any age up to and including 35.

Pay for those inducted into the land forces would be at the rate of $21 per month for the first 4 months; then it would go up to $30. In the naval forces the pay schedules would be on a parity with those in the Regular service. Boys and men between the ages of 18 and 35 would be permitted to volunteer for 1-year enlistments.

The first draft call, expected late in October, likely will be for about 75,000 men, to be followed in November by another for 112,000, and a third late in December or early in January for 115,000. The final call to make up the first 400,000 will be for 98,000. The number to be drafted from each State will be determined on the basis of the actual number of men in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and the subdivisions thereof, who are liable for training and service under the act, and credit shall be given to the subdivisions of each State—meaning counties in Tennessee—for residents of such subdivision who are in the land and naval forces of the United States on the date fixed for determining such quotas.

The selection of the boys and men drafted under the act will be in the hands of some 10,000 local draft boards distributed throughout the country.

Not more than 900,000 boys and men may be called for training in the course of a single year.

After the training period each boy and man drafted will be transferred to the Reserve forces of the Army or Navy for 10 years, or until he is discharged. During this 10-year period he is subject at any time to be recalled to military duty. He may escape future calls in the land services by enlisting for 2 additional years in the National Guard or the Regular Army.

On September 6 the House adopted an amendment to the act, as reported by the committee, which provides that boys and men drafted under the act shall not be inducted into service "until adequate provision shall have been made for the proper housing of the men selected for training and service, the term 'housing' to include such sanitary facilities, adequate water supply, heating and lighting systems, medical care and hospital accommodations as are in general accepted by the United States Public Health Service as essential to public and personal health." This amendment was offered by Dr. AUSTIN, a Member of the House from Connecticut, and was passed by a vote of 115 to 95. Those who introduced and sponsored this act opposed this amendment. I voted in favor of it in order to safeguard the health of those drafted and to prevent such epidemics as took the lives of more than 75,000 of the boys who were drafted during the first World War and who died from influenza and other diseases due to lack of proper clothing, housing, medicine, and medical attention.

The act provides for the exemption of those who object to training and service on the ground that they are conscientiously opposed to serving in the armed forces. It also exempts regularly or duly ordained ministers of religion and students who are preparing for the ministry in theological or divinity schools recognized as such for more than a year prior to the date of enactment of the law. Conscientious objectors, ministers, and divinity students must, however, appear for registration.

The President may prescribe deferment of training for those whose employment in industry and agriculture is found to be necessary for the maintenance of the national health, safety, or interest.

Deferment is also allowed students of colleges or universities which grant degrees in arts or science, if such students should be selected while pursuing their courses, until the end of their academic year, or to July 1 next, whichever comes first.

The act admonishes employers, whose employees are drafted into the service under the act, to take such employees back and put them in their jobs, except in cases where it is "impossible or unreasonable" to do so. The act provides that an employer, able to take an employee back, but refusing to do so, may be liable to court action. In such suits between a former employee and his employer United States district attorneys would serve the employee, without fee or court costs, as counsel for the worker denied reinstatement and would settle by agreement or take the case to court if the district attorney deemed the claim to be valid.

The act makes any violation of its terms by those who administer it or by those subject to be drafted under it, a felony, punishable by imprisonment for not more than 5 years or a fine of not more than $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment. For any offense against the act committed after induction into the service, the offender shall be tried by court martial, and on conviction shall suffer such punishment as a court martial may direct. In case of persons subject to the act who fail to report for duty in the land or naval forces as ordered, military and naval courts martial shall have concurrent jurisdiction of offenses arising out of such failure. Other offenses against the act shall be triable in the district courts of the United States having jurisdiction.

Under the act the Government is empowered to take over private industrial plants and facilities in cases where the Government and such plants cannot agree over the taking of defense orders or carrying orders out to the satisfaction of the War and Navy Departments.

The act further provides that any individual, firm, company, association or corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, or the responsible head or heads thereof, failing to accept an order for any product or material produced or manufactured by them, or capable of being produced or manufactured by them, shall be guilty of a felony, and shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 3 years and a fine of not exceeding $50,000.

The act, upon its passage, takes effect immediately, and is in full force and effect until May 15, 1945.

It will, therefore, be seen that this act makes liable to conscription, immediately upon its passage, 16,500,000 boys and men from the ages of 21 to 35. The act remains in force until May 15, 1945. It, therefore, will apply, between the date of its enactment and May 15, 1945, to all who will become 21 years of age during that period of time. It will be in force for 4 years and 8 months. So that boys now 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20 years of age will become 21 years old before the law expires, and will, therefore, be liable to be drafted into the armed forces upon their reaching the age of 21. There will, therefore, be liable to the draft under this law 5,000,000 boys who are now under 21 years of age, making a total of 21,500,000 men and boys.

THE VOLUNTEER SYSTEM HAS NOT BROKEN DOWN

The passage of this act in time of peace is uncalled for, and is unprecedented in the history of this Nation. The proposed act, for the first time in the history of this country, in time of peace, resorts to the draft of men and boys and the seizure and operation of private property by the Government in peacetime.

Today we have in the armed forces of the Nation: Regular Army, 309,000 enlisted men and officers; National Guard, 236,768; Reserve officers, 104,500; enlisted men of Reserve, 35,000; a total of 685,268.

Today we have in the naval forces: Regular Navy, 149,723; Estimated enlistments not yet reported, 1,000; Naval Reserve forces, 8,894; officers as of August 1, 1940, 10,774; a total of 170,391.

We, therefore, have in the armed forces of the Nation at this time 855,659 men.

From September 1, 1939, to September 1, 1940, the period elapsing since England and France declared war on Germany, 213,014 men have enlisted in the United States Army. This total does not include the number who enlisted during August of this year. The enlistments for August of this year amount to 40,000 men, according to information furnished me on the 10th of this month by the War Department. This total does not include the enlistments for September of this year. The enlistments in the Army for the months of June, July, and August 1940 are as follows:

June 1940	23,444
July 1940	31,958
August 1940	40,000

These enlistments were all for a period of 3 years, at $21 per month. With the period of enlistment as fixed by the proposed draft act, reduced to 1 year and the pay raised to $30 per month, these enlistments would have been much greater—from 50,000 to 60,000 per month. So that it is evident that by January 1, 1941, with the period of enlistment reduced to 1 year and the monthly pay raised to $30 per month, the Army could, by voluntary enlistment, be increased to 1,000,000 men.

It is therefore unnecessary to resort to conscription in time of peace and create a "pool" of 21,500,000 men and boys subject to the draft. This great "pool" of men and boys from 16 to 45 years of age are segregated, set aside from their fellow men and, for the period during which they are registered and subject to the draft, will stand in the shadow of uncertainty. They cannot plan their lives. They will be handicapped in obtaining and holding employment. Employers will be afraid to give them permanent jobs. They will not know what to do with themselves. They will not know what minute they will be conscripted, taken from their homes, from their jobs, by the arbitrary power of government. Thus, will a great barrier be thrown across their future.

In addition to this, the act provides that any indebtedness of a man or boy drafted, for rent, on installment contracts, or mortgages cannot be collected by his creditor during his service in the armed forces of the country. It declares a moratorium on such indebtedness. This provision, while helpful to the man actually drafted and inducted into the armed forces of the Army or Navy, will work a great hardship on the millions subject to the draft. They will be unable to obtain credit. Those from whom they wish to purchase an automobile, furniture, or other necessities, or from whom they wish to borrow money, rent, or lease property, will be afraid to extend them such credit because of their inability to collect or foreclose conditional sales contracts or mortgages in the event the man or boy desiring such credit is drafted.

And further, the act provides that if, during the training period of any man drafted for a period of 1 year, the Congress shall declare that the national interest is imperiled, he shall be subject to service until the Congress shall declare that national interest permits his being relieved from actual service.

Thus, under the guise of raising an army of a million men, the lives and future of 21,500,000 men and boys are rendered uncertain and their entire future imperiled. The entire business structure and economic life of the whole people will be upset, disturbed, and rendered uncertain at the cost and loss of billions of dollars.

The Government does not have at this time clothing, houses, nor the hospital facilities to take care of the men proposed to be drafted. This lack of facilities exists when winter is fast approaching.

The records of the War Department show that it now has permanent and temporary buildings for the accommodation of only 230,000 men, with construction under way that will enable it to house a total of 375,000 men. At this time it does not have housing facilities for this additional 145,000 men.

To accommodate and house the National Guard, the Government is constructing permanent tent camps, with concrete floors, wooden walls, and tin roofs, and temporary wooden buildings. Thousands of these draftees will have to be put in tents.

These facts recall to mind the terrible loss of life due to epidemics of flu, spinal meningitis, measles, typhoid fever, and other diseases in 1917 and 1918. From these diseases alone there occurred, in 1917 and 1918, 75,460 deaths among those drafted and inducted into the armed forces of the country.

There is not on hand sufficient clothing to clothe them. It is estimated that by January 1, 1940, there will be barracks for 500,000 men. The other 500,000 will have to be housed in tents in winter. And under the terms of the act, these draftees may be sent to any country on the Western Hemisphere—to Canada, to Mexico, to the Republic of Central America, to the Nations of South America, and to the Philippine Islands, 7,000 miles from home.

The Government does not have tanks, artillery, antiaircraft guns, and other mechanized equipment, with which to equip and train the men and boys proposed to be drafted.

There is not on hand at this time sufficient automatic rifles, machine guns, tanks, artillery, and other mechanized equipment with which to arm and train these draftees. At the outbreak of the present World War, France had 6,000,000 conscript soldiers trained in the art of warfare, but they did not have modern equipment, consisting of airplanes, antiaircraft guns, antitank guns, and tanks. These draftees cannot train or fight with mechanized equipment on order, existing only on blueprints.

Two hundred and fifty thousand mechanized German troops conquered France. There were in France at that time 6,000,000 conscript soldiers. But they did not have adequate mechanized equipment. In the opinion of military experts, a mechanized army of 500,000, capable of rapid movement from one part of the country to another, is adequate to repel any threatened or possible invasion of this Nation. Mr. Knudsen recently testified that we would not have mechanized equipment for an army of 750,000 men until 1942.

SEIZURE OF PRIVATE INDUSTRY IS UNJUSTIFIED AND UNCALLED FOR IN PEACETIME

No individual and no company has declined or is refusing to accept and fill any order for war supplies. On September 7, of this year, David Lawrence, editor of the United States News, in an article of that date, wrote as follows:

THE REAL ISSUE

(By David Lawrence)

WASHINGTON, September 7.—Evidence is piling up to demonstrate dramatically that the real issue of the Presidential campaign is whether the new dealers in Washington will ever understand the industrial operations of America sufficiently to permit the United States to build a strongly mechanized army and a powerful air force—or whether a new President with a background of industrial knowledge can do the job better.

For without airplanes to man them, the new Atlantic bases will be useless and without the weapons of mechanized warfare, the draft army might as well be forgotten.

Today the biggest obstacle to the development of our industrial defense program is the attitude of those new dealers who think that demagoguery can build airplanes or that the manufacturers and plant managers of this country can be stimulated to produce by threats of coercion.

The psychology which prompted the Russell-Overton amendment which is designed to permit seizure of plants is a psychology of politics. It is an attitude that does not know how to get production because if the Government is to be guided by arbitrary-minded officials there will be no plant managers who can do any better under actual Government control than under the threat of seizure.

AN OLD PROBLEM

This is not a new problem. Bernard M. Baruch, chairman of the War Industries Board in the last war and who should really be guiding America's defense program today, had this to say in his testimony in 1932 before the War Policies Commission:

"The 'draft everything' proponents seem to think that confiscation of productive facilities promises a more effective use of them in the interests of government and for the purposes of war. During the World War a government had power to commandeer factories and to operate them under bureaucratic direction. I do not recall a single important industrial enterprise that was thus taken over. This does not mean that the use of the power was never advocated. On the contrary, it was seriously urged in respect of a great industrial plant which was thought by some not to be giving full cooperation to its government. The proposal split on the rock of this argument:

" 'Who will run it? Do you know another manufacturer fit to take over its administration? Would you replace a proved expert manager by a problematical mediocrity? After you had taken it over and installed your Government employee as manager, what greater control would you have than now? Now you can choke it to death, deprive it of transportation, fuel, and power, divert its business, strengthen its rivals. Could any disciplinary means be more effective? If you take it over, you can only give orders to an employee backed by threat of dismissal and with far less effect than you can give them now. Let the management run the plant and you run the management.'

"Nobody with any familiarity with industry could seriously urge a wholesale assumption by any Federal bureau of the responsibility for management of any or all of the vast congeries of manufacturing establishments upon which we must rely for extraordinary effort in event of war."

It has been supposed up to now that the President summoned to Washington outstanding businessmen to manage the defense program. On the surface it has seemed that they had something to do with the attainment of production of airplanes and weapons of warfare. They are mere conduits through which a lot of official papers and documents and contracts flow.

But Mr. Roosevelt hasn't delegated any authority over the really vital problems of defense policy to the businessmen.

Is this proposed draft act a plan for defense or a plan for participation in Europe's endless wars? The times call for sane judgment and the floodlight of fact. It is admitted that we have the best navy in the world, a seagoing, modern, well-manned, and adequately armed fleet, consisting of battleships, cruisers, destroyers, aircraft carriers, torpedo boats, and submarines. We are separated from potential enemies by 3,000 miles of ocean to the east and 7,000 miles of ocean to the west. These oceans can be dominated by ships alone.

If we are to have an adequate defense, more than a blind appropriation of dollars and conscription of manpower is necessary. Are we preparing for defense or are we preparing for participation in an aggressive warfare in Europe? All are agreed on the defense of the Western Hemisphere. We have naval and air bases, from which outposts any aggressor nation can be met and turned back. We have naval and air bases in Alaska, in Hawaii, thence off the western coast of Central and South America. We have them girdling the eastern coast. We have a political, economic, and military understanding with the Central and South American republics.

We are in no imminent danger of a German invasion. If Germany wins, she will be beset by mistrust and fear on the part of Russia and Italy. She will be under the necessity of constantly policing conquered peoples of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Norway, Belgium, Holland, France, and the British Isles. It is unthinkable to believe that she will ever obtain possession of the British Fleet. No invasion of this country can take place except by sea or air. Troops have been transported in limited numbers over short distances in Europe. It is utterly impossible to transport them in any numbers by air from Europe across the 3,000 miles of the Atlantic. Supplies for a series attack could only be transported to this hemisphere by ship. The combined navies of Germany, Italy, Russia, and Japan would not be superior to ours. As pointed out by Hanson W. Baldwin, a graduate of the United States Naval Academy and a naval authority, in an article in Harper's magazine, the sea power of Russia is negligible. Italy's fleet is composed of high-speed, short-range ships built for Mediterranean service. Some of Germany's ships have small cruising range, for duty in the North Sea. Japan's navy has been built primarily for service in the Far East. Our fleet, in the event of an attack by these combined navies, would be fighting from our shores and our naval bases, aided by aircraft and submarines, and it would have an unconquerable advantage over such a conglomeration of ill-adjusted ships operating thousands of miles from their bases.

It is estimated that to supplement our naval and land forces we need not more than 10,000 planes, plus reserves and training planes. Mr. Baldwin points out in his article that probably the maximum initial force that could be transported from Europe to this country, even if sea control were wrested from us, would be 50,000 men, and that the transportation of such a force would require 375,000 tons of shipping; and if such a force were landed, half the tonnage of the German merchant marine would be needed to supply them. He points out that—

To supply an army of 1,000,000 men in this hemisphere would require at the very least 13,000,000 tons of shipping. Economically and commercially the problem seems impossible; not even a combination of Britain and Germany could divert so much shipping to the purpose. We do not, therefore, have to fear the employment of mass armies in this hemisphere; the most we have to guard against is the transportation of a small expeditionary force.

Then why all this talk about conscripting a huge army? The induction of huge masses of men into the service may actually hamper the development of a small, highly trained field force which is our primary problem today insofar as land forces are concerned in hemisphere defense.

Our Regular Army must provide garrisons for Army, Navy, and air bases; this may require 150,000 men. The Regular Army must provide the nucleus for coast defense and antiaircraft troops; it must provide officers to train the National Guard, and to form the skeletal structure upon which a large mass army may be built up after M day. And, under our broadened responsibilities of hemisphere defense, it must provide a field force highly trained, fully equipped, instantly ready for transportation anywhere within the Western Hemisphere—to quell, with the help of the Navy and air force, alien-inspired revolutions, to seize an advanced base, to hold any area against attack until larger forces are concentrated. Such a force need be no larger than 150,000 men—perhaps half that number—about the number with which Germany seized Norway. And considering its other functions, the Regular Army need be no larger than 400,000 to 500,000 men.

Hemisphere defense is primarily a problem for sea power, secondarily for air power. But it is not a problem which can be solved by any one service or by the defense forces alone. Political and economic planning within the hemisphere must precede strategical planning. And in an integrated defense each element of the fighting services and the other branches of government must be nicely articulated, each working not on its own but as part of a machine.

There seems to be no such unity of concept in Washington. Our defense forces are, like Topsy, "jest growin'." Wanted above all, is a plan for defense, a military policy, a definition of what we must defend and against whom, and the organization to carry out the plan.

It is now said that the only way to keep this Nation out of war is to get into war, that to save this country we must first save the British Empire, and the idea is advanced that our first line of defense is and always has been either the Rhine or the English Channel. We have voted a two-ocean navy. Contracts for its construction have been let. By the first of the year we will have more than a million men under arms. Let us cease to talk about intervention in the present war.

In an editorial of September 7, 1940, in the Saturday Evening Post, is a clear and forceful statement of facts that should interest every thoughtful lover of this country:

In his message to France on June 15, the President said: "The Government of the United States has made it possible for allied armies to obtain, during the weeks that have just passed, airplanes, artillery, and munitions of many kinds, and * * * this Government, so long as the allied Governments continue to resist, will redouble its efforts in this direction."

That was the United States Government speaking, acting, pledging itself to assist in the war against Hitler to the utmost, short only of an actual declaration of hostilities. It was already too late to save France. Moreover, nothing we had been able to send her, even our total military power, including the Navy, could have saved her, which was a trifling reality the Government was unable to comprehend.

Only 6 weeks later, the Secretary of War is saying to the House Committee on Military Affairs, in support of the conscription bill, that there is very grave danger of a direct attack upon the United States by Hitler. He is asked how long it will take to prepare a suitable defense. He says: "We will not have it in time to meet the first possibility of invasion."

The Secretary of War of course is speaking directly for the administration. He is saying what it thinks. The administration thinks there is very grave danger of an invasion of this country by Hitler before we can be ready to meet it. But this is the same administration that stripped the American defense of rifles, artillery, munitions, and airplanes and sent them to the Allies. It is the same administration that would have delivered to the British Admiralty the whole of our mosquito fleet in building if the Congress had not found a law to stop it. It is the same administration that has ever since been trying to find a way to deliver United States Navy destroyers to the British. If what it thinks is true—that there is grave danger of an invasion of this country by Hitler before we can get ready—then we have not a rifle, a gun, an airplane or a rowboat to spare, nor any industrial capacity. On the day the Secretary of War was making his statement before the House committee the New York newspapers carried pictures of National Guard men training with imaginary machine guns devised by plumbers out of gas pipe.

We can imagine circumstances in which the highest strategy would call for taking the war to the enemy. We cannot conceive of circumstances in which it is permitted in sanity to slap danger in the face before you are ready to meet it—to name an enemy who has not named you, to attack an enemy who has not yet attacked you, before you are ready to fight him.

Our enemies, the Administration keeps telling the people, are Germany, Italy, and Japan, naming them. Not one of them has made a gesture of war toward us. For all we think and feel about Hitler, he has not attacked us. He says he does not intend to. We do not believe him. Nobody in the world now believes him. Very well. But the American Government has attacked Hitler, first by words, then by measures short of war, then by giving pledge to his enemies to assist them by all physical means to the utmost.

In June, the American Government entered the war against Hitler by acts of physical intervention all the worse because they were futile.

In July that same Government is telling the people they are in grave danger of being attacked by Hitler before they can get ready to meet him. "Hitler does not wait," said the Secretary of War to the House Committee on Military Affairs—and the National Guard men in New York training with gas-pipe guns.

What a triumph for statecraft. What strategy.

What a face for a great nation.

These are the conditions under which there has been created in the country a war psychosis, misled by cries of "Stop Hitler now" and "Defend America by aiding the Allies." We had nothing to stop Hitler with in Europe. A Government that either did not know that, or made believe it was not so, now is saying that if he decided to invade the United States soon, as there is very grave danger that he may, we are not ready to stop him here. Nevertheless it goes on to declare against him an economic war—a pan-American economic bloc against his European bloc—for which also it is unprepared, not having thought it through, not having calculated the cost.

We do not believe that an invasion of the United States by Hitler is among the imminent possibilities. The word of the Government for it does not greatly impress us. A Government that had been so wrong about his power to overcome in Europe and about the power of France to resist could very well be wrong again. Nor do we believe that 50 or 60 destroyers from the United States Navy would save the British Empire. That would be but another futile act of futile intervention, much more likely to infuriate an enemy we are not prepared to meet than to save a friend.

We are bound to be emotionally torn by the specticle of the British Empire fighting for its life. That is a feeling that lies deep in us and is shared even by those who still can think in a realistic manner. The fall of the British Empire would be a mighty human disaster. Yet we part with those who say, or who believe, it would mean the end of American civilization and part with them again when they would in any degree weaken the American defense to repair the weakness of Great Britain, for which Great Britain, not we, are responsible. We add here two reflections—first, that Great Britain would be stronger if she had stood alone; second, the enemy is governed by logic, not emotion.

We stand, therefore, in our first position. Let us jealously mind our own defense in the great manner of a great people, resolved to be let alone. Let us build at any cost a dreadnought defense power such as no aggressor, nor any combination of aggressors, will dare to challenge. Thus we forfend war.

And meanwhile, for this will take some time, let us look very hard at a state of facts. The German thing has conquered Europe. That will be still true whether the British Empire stands or falls.

Who is going to put the German thing back? The British? They are not able.

Shall we do it? Unless we are willing to go to Europe and destroy it there, we may as well make up our minds now that we shall have to live in the same world with it, maybe for a long time, whether we like it or not. Nonetheless, for that reason, only all the more, we should, we must, create on this continent the incomparable power of defense. After that we shall see. For after that we shall be again as we once were, safe and free and dangerous.

We therefore submit that we can, and it is our duty to, stay out of this war; that we can arm and train an army for all adequate national defense without resort to conscription of men in peacetime; that we can produce all of the war materials necessary without exercising the power of seizing and taking over the industry of the country by arbitrary governmental power. The supreme issues before our people today are the preservation of our free institutions and the liberties of our people. "One thousand years scarce serve to found a state, an hour may lay it in the dust."

In an hour of hysteria let us not remove the ancient landmarks which our fathers have set. We have and are building the ships. We are capable of producing, within the time that they may be needed, all necessary mechanized military and modern equipment, armament, and munitions. We have, and can get, the men, but these men can only be effectively trained by putting them in possession and teaching them the use of the implements of modern warfare. We need not surrender our liberties to defend our free institutions. Freedom from entangling European alliances, free men, and free industry have builded this Nation; and free men and free industry can and will maintain it.

It was Charles Pinckney, in the early history of this country, in response to a demand from Napoleon Bonaparte that this Nation join in his European wars, who said: "Millions for defense but not one cent for tribute."

When the drafting of the Constitution of this country had been completed by the founding fathers, in Independence Hall in Philadelphia, a lady asked Benjamin Franklin: "Mr. Franklin, what kind of a government have we?" He replied, "A republic, if we can keep it."

The American people are highly resolved that we will keep this Republic by preserving it here at home and by defending it against the aggressor nations of the world.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, 207 Members of this body a few days ago voted against peacetime compulsory military service when they voted for the Fish amendment on a record roll-call vote. Let us have some constructive action on the floor of the House today. Those 207 Members of this Congress have an opportunity to reaffirm their position today. Let us have a yea-and-nay record vote on this conference report today and send word to the Senate and to the country that we still maintain the same position which we did on the record roll-call vote on the Fish amendment a few days ago, opposed to peacetime compulsory military service until such time as it has been demonstrated that the voluntary system of military service has failed.

Mr. Speaker, we know that much political heat and pressure has been turned on the Members of Congress in an attempt to adopt this conference report, and thereby put the peacetime compulsory military service bill on final passage without a record vote. If those 207 Members who voted for the Fish peacetime voluntary military service amendment a few days ago were sincere when they did so, then we should not have any difficulty in obtaining a sufficient number of seconds for the demand which shall be made for the aye-and-nay record vote on the adoption of this conference report, which is a clear-cut issue on the question of peacetime compulsory military services. I shall vote against the conference report and shall support the demand for the record roll-call vote on its adoption and thereby maintain my position on the Fish voluntary peacetime military service amendment.

Mr. Speaker, should we vote to adopt this conference report, we vote to nullify section 1 of the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which states that—

> Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Should we vote in favor of this conference report, we vote to enact the "involuntary servitude" Col. Julius Ochs Adler peacetime compulsory military service portion of the New Deal program to establish a dictatorship in the United States of America. I feel confident that there are sufficient red-blooded independent Members of this Congress who will rise when the demand for a record vote is made so that we might have a record roll-call vote on this New Deal Hitler-Stalin type of peacetime compulsory military service, in order that our countrymen may know just where each Member of this Congress takes his position. The people of the United States are entitled to this knowledge. Remember that our good Lord said, "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them."

Mr. Speaker, I am not a prophet, or a son of a prophet, but let me prophesy that the record roll-call vote on this pending motion to adopt this conference report, which is equivalent to final passage by the House of Representatives of this New Deal peacetime compulsory military service and "involuntary servitude" legislation shall never die. Like Banquo's ghost, it shall forever rise to haunt many Members who vote for it, particularly during this November's election campaign.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, let me respectfully remind my colleagues that should they sow "involuntary servitude" seeds this 14th day of September, many shall reap their abundant harvest on the 5th day of this November; for "as ye sow, so shall ye reap." [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against this conference report and, as the record discloses, I have voted against the bill when it was before us. I have, throughout this national emergency, voted for all legislation and appropriations having for their purpose the early completion of our preparedness program and will continue to do so until we have made our defenses so strong that we will be impregnable against attack from any source. It is incumbent upon each one of us to make every sacrifice that this grim job of complete preparedness be accomplished without any delay. It will be a matter of heroic sacrifice for all of the American people. The immense cost bill alone will be a burden reflected in taxes for years to come. However, when the security, the welfare, and even the preservation of our country is at stake, we must not weigh the costs. We must provide unity of action and coordination and mobilization of all of our vast industry and manpower, to the one common end of defending ourselves. I believe the Congress has exhibited a unanimity of action and a course entirely removed from partisan politics in proceeding with the defense program, that has rarely been exhibited before. I personally do not believe that in order to advance this program it is necessary at this time to draft our young men for military service. After careful and full consideration I am convinced that as long as we are at peace we need not resort to this method but can with security continue to rely on volunteer enlistments as we have done for 150 years. Furthermore, there is serious doubt that the Government will have the facilities in time to protect the health and provide for the welfare of such a large number of draftees. The most serious objection, however, to peacetime military draft is that it is a totalitarian concept, the regimentation of our people in peacetimes. In order to combat the dictators we are resorting to their methods.

However, this question now becomes academic, because both Houses of Congress, by a substantial majority, have adopted the principle of immediate draft to provide manpower for our defense forces. Therefore, I will support this legislation when enacted, although I still am opposed to it in principle, to the end that we may, without any delay, complete our preparedness program.

Some misunderstanding and confusion has arisen with reference to the Fish amendment, which provided that 60 days should elapse before any men were called under the Draft Act. Many statements have been made in the press and on the radio that this was an act to postpone the matter until after election and to delay the draft. As a matter of fact, it would have had the opposite effect, because as a part of the amendment it was provided that immediate provision should be made for registering all of the men coming within the draft, which would require at least 60 days, and under this new law no draftees will be called until after that time, whereas under the Fish amendment volunteers would be called for immediately, and unquestionably a large number of men would have volunteered within the 60 days, which would have speeded up our program instead of slowing it down.

I believe it to be my duty and the duty of every American wholeheartedly and without reservation, now that the law is determined upon, to join hands with those who supported it, to put it into immediate effect and permit no delay. I pray God that no need for this superarmament and large army will ever arise, but should it, we will be prepared. Better to be prepared and not need it than to be unprepared and need it.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, this is the prelude to war and dictatorship. Time and events will demonstrate it.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if I may. In section 5, paragraph (b), subparagraph 1, it is provided that men who have served at least 3 consecutive years in the Regular Army will be exempt not merely from liability for service in the Reserves but also from liability for training and service under section 3 (b). That is under the present bill.

The question is, If you exempt men who have served 3 years in the Regular Army from liability for training and service, why do you not extend that same exemption to men who have served 3 years in the Marine Corps or the Navy?

Mr. MAY. The Navy had a representative present, a commander, and he objected to it, saying that the Navy did not desire that. That is the reason it was left out.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It would seem to me that we might want to preserve liability for Reserve training or emergency service, but I do not understand why a man who has served 3 years in the Marine Corps is not just as much entitled to an exemption from the draft for peacetime service as a man who has served 3 years in the Army.

Mr. MAY. I may say to the gentleman that the commander who was present said that the present arrangement was entirely satisfactory and he stated that if we did what was suggested it would complicate their affairs very much. For that reason we did not do it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I understand that the members of the Navy and Marine Corps go into a reserve status following completion of an enlistment, and it is probably that situation which the commander does not want to disturb. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] calls my attention to another provision in the conference report that exempts members of the Organized Reserves from registration, which would automatically exempt these Naval and Marine Corps Reserves from induction.

Mr. Speaker, I am wholeheartedly for an adequate national defense. And in the present world situation I believe it is better to be safe than sorry. I am for an increase in our armed forces. I voted against peacetime conscription when this bill was before us, not that I was opposed to increasing our armed forces but because I feel that conscription should be undertaken only when an emergency is clearly demonstrated. The evidence brought before us during the debate on the bill revealed that over 919,000 men were already in the armed forces, either in active duty or subject to call following the passage of the National Guard bill. The evidence also showed that recruits were increasing for the Army and exceeded 43,000 in August, and that the Navy and Marine Corps had men on the waiting list. It was my belief and is my belief that the acceptance of 1-year enlistments by the Army and the raising of the base pay to $30 a month would have provided men as rapidly as they were needed at this time, and as rapidly as equipment would be available for their proper housing and training.

A majority of the Congress, however, has taken the position that conscription is the method to adopt to provide the increase desired. At this time, therefore, I expect to vote for the adoption of the compromise bill brought in by the conference report as representing the best argreement we can reach on the proposition.

During the debate several Members pointed out that the bill limits the number of men called to the number for which appropriations may be made. I am sure that the Members understand that no appropriation items receive such careful and diligent study today as do those for national defense.

As a new member of the Appropriations Committee in this session of Congress, and as a new member of the Appropriations Subcommittee for the War Department this year, and a minority member, I can testify to the conscientious service of the other members. And I have had occasion to observe the work of the Deficiency Subcommittee which has handled the supplemental items. I think it is generally true that there is less partisan politics in committee work than is generally supposed by the country at large; I am sure that is true in the preparation of the appropriation bills for national defense.

The chairmen of these subcommittees, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER], and the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] simply do not play politics with national defense. In the working of these committees I have seen no partisan politics, only the utmost earnestness and a determination to do the right thing for the safety and security of the United States. I am sure that it will be so in the consideration of appropriations to be made under this act.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, before I exhaust my time on behalf of members of the Military Affairs Committee, the House, whether the various Members are for this bill or not, owes a debt of gratitude to some of the gentlemen in the War Department in the G–1 Section who received little or no credit in any official or public mention. I want to pay my particular respects to Lt. Col. Louis Hersey of the G–1 Section and to numerous Reserve officers who served in Washington for the last 6 weeks, many of whom have worked for years on this proposition. I believe the success of the House and Senate committees in obtaining a bill of this type, whether you like it or not, is largely due to the painstaking efforts of that group in the G–1 Section of the War Department. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER], a member of the House Committee on Military Affairs and a member of the conference committee, such time as he may desire.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, there should be no hesitancy on the part of the membership of the House in agreeing to this conference report. While some compromises were made and some of you may not agree with all of the revised bill, its omissions or inclusions, we feel that it is a well-perfected piece of legislation. It was just a week ago today that the House passed its bill. The battle for England has been waged more relentlessly than ever during the past week. Most of us must admit that the emergency confronting this Nation becomes more imminent with each passing day and the future more beclouded and uncertain. We dare not gamble with the future. For us there is but one course to pursue and that is be ready with an adequate defense for this Nation no matter what may happen abroad.

The principal changes in the compromise draft of the selective training and service bill in this conference report from the House bill are, as you know, the making of men from 21 to 35 years of age, inclusive, liable to military service instead of those from 21 to 45, and the elimination of the Fish amendment postponing the draft for 60 days. The other principal difference between the Senate and the House was the provision relating to industrial conscription. This was eliminated through the action of the other body last evening in directing its conferees to accept the House language, which is the so-called Smith amendment adopted by an overwhelming vote in the House and which is practically an adoption of the language of section 120 of the National Defense Act. Upon other important details in the legislation the House fared very well in the agreement finally reached by the conferees. The House gave up its provision for not more than 1,000,000 men in active training in the land and naval forces of the United States at any one time for the Senate provision of not more than 900,000 men in active training in the land forces at any one time for the 12-month training period. The House provision providing for the transfer of trainees to Reserve components until they reach the age of 45 or for a period of 10 years or until discharge, whichever occurs first, prevailed. Your conferees followed the Senate and House provisions in substance in giving trainees pensions, compensations, and disability allowances to the same extent as enlisted men of the Regular forces of the same grades and lengths of service, with this qualifying language:

With respect to the men inducted for training and service under this act there shall be paid, allowed, and extended the same pay, allowances, pensions, disability and death compensation, and other benefits as are provided by law in the case of other enlisted men of like grades and length of service of that component of the land or naval forces to which they are assigned, and after transfer to a reserve component of the land or naval forces as provided in subsection (c) there shall be paid, allowed, and extended with respect to them the same benefits as are provided by law in like cases with respect to other members of such reserve component. Men in such training and service and men who have been so transferred to reserve components shall have an opportunity to qualify for promotion.

It was agreed that the House provision allowing trainees to accept payments by former employers to trainees or to members of reserve components on active duty should stand, and the limitation allowing only such payments to be made to those below the rank of captain was eliminated. The provisions in both bills preventing discrimination on account of race or color with respect to men volunteering for induction remains in the bill. The House language providing for a mental as well as a physical examination of those to be inducted for training remains in the bill; also the provision that college students in bona fide institutions granting degrees either in academic work or in professional courses may, upon their request, have their induction for training postponed during the college year 1940–41 until the end of the college year, but in no event later than July 1, 1941. Many boys 21 years of age or who will soon be 21 are working their way through college and have jobs to see them through this year or have earned money and paid fees for this year, and this will permit them to complete the college year as they have planned.

Language has been clarified throughout the bill, and your conferees have endeavored to make clear and precise the intent and meaning of the Congress in the various sections of the act. We feel that the measure which we bring you, while not perfect, is an improvement over the respective versions of the bills previously adopted by the Senate and House and a reasonable compromise of the opinions of the two bodies. It should go far toward insuring the security of the United States in these times of extraordinary danger. I hope the House will demonstrate to the country that we are cognizant of the dangers that exist, of the imperative need for the strengthening of our national defense, and let it know that we are not only willing as representatives of the people to make vast appropriations for war material but we are taking not the easy way but the hard way by conscripting our manpower, so that all the world may know that America will have trained Reserves which she hopes she may never need for service in time of war but who will be ready for the defense of the Nation if such defense is necessary. Let us do this without flinching and with a determination that our institutions and our form of government shall continue as we have known them. The greatest danger to America is not from without; it is from within. Have we the stamina, the determination, to meet the necessities of our times as our forefathers met theirs? I think we have. We shall demonstrate that we are not soft, that when the Nation needs her sons they will fulfill their duty and their obligations as Americans have always done. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, in regard to the statement of the gentleman from New York that the Fish amendment would not have delayed the program of the War Department for 1 hour, I merely wish to say that the judgment of the high officials of the War Department is to the contrary. They say that it would have changed and greatly obstructed their whole procedure.

Mr. Speaker, I now desire to read into the RECORD a telegram I received yesterday. It is addressed to the chairman of the conference committee, dated at New York, N. Y., on September 13:

I demand hearing in opposition of conscription bill, as I have been informed it specifically excludes bund members from employment in United States industries. Proposed legislation is damnable, vicious, and a congressional declaration of civil war upon every German-American. Letter in detail follows.

(Signed) G. WILHELM KUNZE,
National Leader, German-American Bund.

Mr. Speaker, that gentleman does not represent the German-American population of the United States, and I regard his letter as an insult to the American people. Millions of good German-American citizens will be found faithfully toiling upon the farms and in the factories throughout America to preserve our institutions of freedom while this Wilhelm Kunze will doubtless be found in the dark places of sin and vice trying to undermine our institutions. He is unworthy of the notice of all true Americans.

I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. AUSTIN. The conference report uses the word "shelter" instead of the word "housing" as used in my amendment. Shelter is a broad term. Have I the assurance of the gentleman that it is not the intention under the broad interpretation to place conscriptees in tents in northern climates during winter months?

Mr. MAY. I am happy to assure the gentleman from Connecticut, who has fought so valiantly for his amendment, that the War Department has assured your Military Affairs Committee that tents will be used only in such sections of the country as Florida, Louisiana, Texas, and other extremely warm southern climes. Your conferees used the word "shelter" in lieu of "housing" to permit that.

Mr. AUSTIN. The original amendment required that housing facilities be provided that compare to standards set up by the United States Public Health Service. The conferees changed the amendment so that the Secretaries of War and Navy set the standards. Has the gentleman the assurance of each of these officials that conscripts will not be placed in tents in northern climates during the winter months and that other provisions as made in the amendment to safeguard the health of the men inducted will be carried out?

Mr. MAY. I am very glad to say to the distinguished author of the amendment that the very matters he had in mind in drafting the amendment have been a matter of much study by the War Department and the committee, and we are assured that adequate, comfortable, and convenient housing will be provided in all sections of the country other than the extreme southern areas to which I have referred, and furthermore all necessary steps for proper sanitation and other health requirements will be provided along with modern facilities, all of which will be provided before the men are inducted.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. GAVAGAN, Mr. MARCANTONIO, and Mr. EBERHARTER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 233, nays 124, answered "present" 2, not voting 70, as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. KEEFE, who, if he were present, would vote "nay." I voted "yea." I withdraw my vote and ask to be recorded as voting "present."

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, on this vote I have a pair with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MARTIN. If he were present he would vote "yea." I therefore withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. MAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House the Speaker pro tempore be authorized to sign the enrolled bill of the Senate, S. 4164.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HARE, for 2 days on account of important business.

To Mr. SWEENEY, for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 seconds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentlewoman from New Jersey, Mrs. NORTON, is detained by illness. If present, she would have voted "yea" on the conference report just agreed to.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL] has been detained by official business in connection with congressional work with regard to the defense program. Had he been present, he would have voted against the Fish amendment and for the bill, and he would have today voted for the adoption of the conference report.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short article from the Summit (N. J.) Herald and the Summit (N. J.) Press.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article from the Watertown Times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a portion of an article appearing in the Washington Times-Herald.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

CONSCRIPTION BILL

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I opposed the passage of this peacetime conscription law as unnecessary, a threat to our peace and freedom, but now it will be the law of the land, the method duly enacted for manning the defenses of the Republic.

I reserve my right to criticize this law, to urge its amendment or repeal—but so long as it is the law I pledge myself to aid wholeheartedly in its efficient administration and fair enforcement. We must have no scofflaws on conscription. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made today, and I further ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a quotation from the press.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in regard to some advice which I wish to give to the draftees under the conscription bill, and to include therein an address entitled "Caught in the Draft."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on my vote on the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that a few moments ago I left the Chamber and on returning found that the roll call on agreeing to the conference report had been completed. I was unavoidably detained, thinking the debate would last for the customary 1-hour period of time. Had I been present, I would have voted for the conference report on the conscription bill.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, had I been present, I would have voted against the conference report on the conscription bill.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, September 16, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SMITH of Washington:

H. R. 10515. A bill to promote the health of the people of the United States and to encourage the dairy industry in the interest of the general welfare; to the Committee on Agriculture.

H. R. 10516. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9300. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the General Gorgas Post, No. 1, the American Legion, Birmingham, Ala., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to the national-defense program; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

9301. Also, petition of the International Union, United Automobile Workers of America, Local No. 7, Detroit, Mich., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to the United States housing program; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

9302. Also, petition of the American Psychiatric Association, meeting held in Cincinnati, Ohio, petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to the prevention and treatment of mental and nervous diseases and epilepsy; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, August 5, 1940)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. William S. Abernethy, D. D., minister, Calvary Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations; before the mountains were brought forth or ever Thou hadst formed the earth and the world; even from everlasting to everlasting Thou art God. Our voices are hushed this morning and our hearts are bowed in grief as we think of the one who has gone from the activities of this life to the life eternal. We thank Thee for good men, strong men, men of clear vision, as we believe our brother was. God bless his memory, we pray Thee. We pray for his colleagues, for those who worked with him, for his loved ones. May God give them strength, we pray Thee, and comfort from on high; and raise up in these critical days men who shall prove themselves able leaders. Hasten the day, our Father, when men shall be able to consider each other as brothers; and may we, too, some day hear the "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." This we believe our brother has heard. God bless his memory. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Saturday, September 14, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

DEATH OF SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, we have all been profoundly shocked and grieved by the death of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, of Alabama. A funeral service will be held in the House of Representatives at 12:30 o'clock today. It is desirable that the Senate meet in its Chamber and proceed in a body to the Hall of the House to attend the funeral. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Thereupon (at 11 o'clock and 13 minutes a. m.) the Senate took a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

At 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m. the Senate reassembled, and was called to order by the President pro tempore.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Russell

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, of Alabama, late Speaker of the House of Representatives, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message informed the Senate that Hon. SAM RAYBURN, a Representative from the State of Texas, had been elected Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The message announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 10295. An act to amend the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944); and

H. R. 10405. An act to provide for adjusting the compensation of persons employed as masters at arms, and guards at navy yards and stations, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, I wish to announce that, of course, a resolution will be submitted and adopted accepting the invitation of the House of Representatives. Following the services in the House of Representatives the Senate will reassemble, and immediately thereafter there will be an adjournment until noon on Wednesday.

The train returning from Jasper, Ala., will reach Washington at 2:30 on Wednesday. It is the understanding of all Senators, and that is satisfactory to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], in charge of the tax bill, that there will be no vote on any controversial amendment until the funeral train shall have returned and Senators shall be in their places.

THE LATE SENATOR ERNEST LUNDEEN

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for a brief statement?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have asked the Senator from Kentucky to permit me to make a brief statement, and he has acquiesced. I would not make it except that it should not be delayed one needless hour.

Last week, after the untimely and tragic death of the late Senator Lundeen, a newspaper columnist carried a story to the effect that he was under investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Department of Justice because of his antiwar attitude, and that F. B. I. operatives on the death plane were there to shadow him. I referred to this matter in debate last week, suggesting that it ought to be conclusively settled and explored.

Attorney General Robert H. Jackson has just telephoned me and made a conclusive statement. He says that the Department of Justice never at any time had Senator Lundeen under investigation for anything. He says that the Department's representatives on the plane were not shadowing him; they were there on totally different business. He says there is not a scintilla of truth in the story which was published.

Mr. President, this is the most shocking example of irresponsible post mortem character assassination I have ever seen in the American press. I am glad to make this statement on the authority of the Attorney General in justice to the memory of a patriotic, loyal, earnest United States Senator who is no longer here to speak for himself.

TRANSPORTATION IN COMMERCE OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, is it the intention of the majority leader to have another meeting of the Senate following its return to its Chamber today?

Mr. BARKLEY. The resolution which will be adopted will call for the return of the Senate, and then it will stand adjourned.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I simply wish to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the fact, which we have already discussed, that there is a special order for a vote on the so-called convict-made-goods conference report not later than 12:30 o'clock tomorrow. In view of the fact that there is to be an adjournment until Wednesday, I am wondering what course should be taken relative to the special order. I do not wish to do anything to delay for a single moment the adoption of the resolution which is to be offered, but in view of the fact that the special order has been displaced, it seemed to me it might be proper at this time to get a unanimous-consent order for the disposition of that matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that we have entered into an informal understanding that the conference report will be taken up immediately following the disposition of the tax bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am aware of that fact; but inasmuch as we are displacing a special order, it seemed to me that some further order should be made in the premises.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the fact that we have to displace the order previously entered into, I think there will be no impropriety in asking unanimous consent that the special order be postponed until the conclusion of the consideration of the tax bill. I make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEATH OF THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which were read, as follows:

House Resolution 603

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
September 16, 1940.

Resolved, That the House has learned with profound sensibility and sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, Speaker of the House of Representatives for the Seventy-sixth Congress.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House be appointed to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. BANKHEAD in the Chamber of the House of Representatives at 12:30 o'clock p. m. on Monday, September 16, 1940, and that the House of Representatives attend the same.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the remains of Mr. BANKHEAD be removed from Washington to Jasper, Ala., in charge of the Sergeant at Arms, attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry these resolutions into effect, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That a committee of 63 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral at Jasper, Ala.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these resolutions to the Senate, transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased, and invite the Senate to attend the funeral in the House Chamber, and appoint a committee to act with the committee of the House.

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps (through the Secretary of State), the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard to attend the funeral in the Hall of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 313) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, late Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the Senate accept the invitation of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the late Speaker in the House at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. today.

Resolved, That a committee of 2 Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore to join the committee appointed by the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased, and that a committee of 30 Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore to join the committee on the part of the House to attend the funeral of the deceased at Jasper, Ala.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That at the conclusion of the funeral services the Senate return to its Chamber and, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Speaker, it then stand adjourned until Wednesday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints as members of the committee on the part of the Senate to take order for superintending the funeral of the late Speaker of the House of Representatives the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently, under the third resolving clause of the Senate resolution, appointed the following Senators as the committee of the Senate to join with the committee on the part of the House to attend the funeral of the deceased Speaker of the House of Representatives at Jasper, Ala.:

Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. HILL, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. FRAZIER, Mr. SHIPSTEAD, Mr. WHEELER, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. DAVIS, Mr. BULOW, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. WHITE, Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. BILBO, Mr. BURKE, Mr. GUFFEY, Mr. MINTON, Mr. TRUMAN, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. CLARK of Idaho, Mr. WILEY, and Mr. CHANDLER.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in accordance with the resolution just adopted, I move that the Senate proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and the Senate, preceded by the President pro tempore and Rev. William S. Abernethy, D. D., and escorted by the Secretary (Edwin A. Halsey) and the Sergeant at Arms (Chesley W. Jurney), proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral services of the late Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

ADJOURNMENT

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m., and, under the fifth resolving clause of Senate Resolution 313, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Speaker of the House of Representatives, adjourned until Wednesday, September 18, at 12 o'clock meridan.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1940

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock noon by Hon. South Trimble, Clerk of the House.

The CLERK. Members of the House of Representatives, it becomes my sad and painful duty, as Clerk of the House of Representatives, to inform you officially that your beloved Speaker passed away yesterday morning at the Naval Hospital in this city.

America has lost one of her greatest statesmen and patriots, the House of Representatives a most able and eloquent Speaker, and the State of Alabama a noble and courageous son.

In accordance with the rules and practice of the House of Representatives, it now becomes the duty of this House to elect a Speaker. What is the pleasure of the House?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Clerk, in view of the unfortunate circumstances in which the House finds itself, and with a feeling of very profound respect for the memory of our beloved Speaker who has left us, it becomes necessary, in order that the House may continue to function and the machinery of Government may go on, that the House proceed to the election of a Speaker.

I therefore offer the following resolution, and move its adoption:

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 602

Resolved, That Hon. SAM RAYBURN, a Representative from the State of Texas, be, and he is hereby, elected Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the President and the Senate be notified by the Clerk of the election of Hon. SAM RAYBURN as Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

The CLERK. The Clerk appoints the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] to escort the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] to the chair.

The committee escorted Mr. RAYBURN into the Chamber, and he assumed the chair.

The oath of office was administered to the Speaker-elect by Mr. SABATH.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Ladies and gentlemen of the House, I present the newly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives, a worthy successor to our late beloved Speaker the Honorable William B. Bankhead, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

The SPEAKER. The Chaplain will offer prayer.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee and worthily magnify Thy holy name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with and that the Journal stand approved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

SIGNING OF ENROLLED BILL

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that, pursuant to authority granted him on Friday last, he did, on September 14, 1940, sign an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 4164. An act to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

THE LATE SPEAKER WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker—

> Another bark has put to sea,
> Another boat has left the shore,
> As fair a soul on board has she
> As ever left the land before,
> And as her outward port she tends—
> Sit closer, friends!

Our beloved Speaker, WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, passed away yesterday morning at 1:30. If I possessed the greatest learning and the widest command of words, I should still be bankrupt in language with which to express what is in my heart and what is in the hearts of the Members of the House of Representatives. His loss is not ours alone, but his passing is a loss to the Nation and a loss to mankind.

I speak out of a friendship and affection that runs back to the days of boyhood, but what I have to say of him rests upon his record of great public service. Early in life the people of his native State began to honor him, and so, step by step and year by year he advanced from one honor to another, each always having been conferred because of demonstrated capability and fitness. So it was that when he came to the Speakership of the House of Representatives the promotion followed a career in the House characterized by unexcelled brilliance. This great office has been filled always by great men, statesmen, patriots, great Americans, regardless of party affiliations, but no one of these surpassed him in the qualities of leadership, courage, loyalty to party, fidelity to friends, devotion to convictions, understanding of parliamentary procedure, knowledge of national affairs and the problems of government. None who follow in that great office will soon excel him in all the essential qualities that make the ideal American statesman. He was free from envy, he was too big for jealousy, he had a heart as broad as humanity, and the love that he gave his fellows was returned by those who knew him and loved him. He embodied all the refinements of a brilliant mind and chivalrous soul—a Christian gentleman who walked with God. Greater honor would have been his before his passing but for the impairment of his health. He so loved his duties here, he was so devoted to his responsibilities at this juncture in our national life that he felt he should forget physical infirmity and physical welfare, and so he turned not aside for a moment from the duties that confronted him. Duty to his party was his last undertaking. He was a partisan, but his partisanship was grounded in the deepest principles of patriotism and love of country. It was a partisanship based upon considerations of what he believed to be the welfare of the Nation.

I have no language to do justice to his splendid record and his illustrious public service. His life will be an inspiration to those who come after him in his native State and throughout the Nation. His service and his record will for all time enrich the annals of our great, free Republic that he loved so well and served with such deep devotion, and to which he gave his life.

Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 603

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES.

Resolved, That the House has learned with profound sensibility and sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, Speaker of the House of Representatives for the Seventy-sixth Congress.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House be appointed to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. BANKHEAD in the Chamber of the House of Representatives at 12:30 o'clock p. m. on Monday, September 16, 1940, and that the House of Representatives attend the same.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the remains of Mr. BANKHEAD be removed from Washington to Jasper, Ala., in charge of the Sergeant at Arms, attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry these resolutions into effect, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That a committee of 63 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral at Jasper, Ala.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these resolutions to the Senate, transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased, and invite the Senate to attend the funeral in the House Chamber and appoint a committee to act with the committee of the House.

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the diplomatic corps (through the Secretary of State), the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard to attend the funeral in the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following committee of four, under the resolution, to superintend the order for the arrangement of the funeral: Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL, of Alabama; Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, of Colorado; Hon. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM, of Virginia; and Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., of Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER appointed as members of the committee to attend the funeral of the late Speaker at Jasper, Ala., the following Members of the House: Hon. SAM RAYBURN, of Texas; Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., of Massachusetts; Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL, of Alabama; Hon. FRANK W. BOYKIN, of Alabama; Hon. SAM HOBBS, of Alabama; Hon. JOE STARNES, of Alabama; Hon. PETE JARMAN, of Alabama; Hon. LUTHER PATRICK, of Alabama; Hon. JOHN J. SPARKMAN, of Alabama; Hon. GEORGE M. GRANT, of Alabama; Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH, of Illinois; Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, of Colorado; Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON, of North Carolina; Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS, of Texas; Hon. CARL VINSON, of Georgia; Hon. SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND, of Virginia; Hon. MARVIN JONES, of Texas; Hon. DREWRY, of Virginia; Hon. MILTON A. ROMJUE, of Missouri; Hon. JOHN E. RANKIN, of Mississippi; Hon. SOL BLOOM, of New York; Hon. CLARENCE CANNON, of Missouri; Hon. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM, of Virginia; Hon. JOHN TABER, of New York; Hon. B. CARROLL REECE, of Tennessee; Hon. JOHN M. ROBSION, of Kentucky; Hon. JAMES MCANDREWS, of Illinois; Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN, of Missouri; Hon. E. E. COX, of Georgia; Hon. CHARLES A. EATON, of New Jersey; Hon. MARY T. NORTON, of New Jersey; Hon. LINDSAY C. WARREN, of North Carolina; Hon. U. S. GUYER, of Kansas; Hon. JED JOHNSON, of Oklahoma; Hon. JOHN W. MCCORMACK, of Massachusetts; Hon. JERE COOPER, of Tennessee; Hon. JOE L. SMITH, of West Virginia; Hon. WILLIAM P. COLE, Jr., of Maryland; Hon. PATRICK J. BOLAND, of Pennsylvania; Hon. ANDREW J. MAY, of Kentucky; Hon. BRENT SPENCE, of Kentucky; Hon. JESSE P. WOLCOTT, of Michigan; Hon. MILLARD F. CALDWELL, of Florida; Hon. JOHN D. DINGELL, of Michigan; Hon. J. WILL ROBINSON, of Utah; Hon. JAMES G. SCRUGHAM, of Nevada; Hon. MARTIN F. SMITH, of Washington; Hon. DAVID D. TERRY, of Arkansas; Hon. FRANK CARLSON, of Kansas; Hon. FRED L. CRAWFORD, of Michigan; Hon. BERTRAND W. GEARHART, of California; Hon. JOHN M. HOUSTON, of Kansas; Hon. CHARLES F. MCLAUGHLIN, of Nebraska; Hon. FRANCIS H. CASE, of South Dakota; Hon. VINCENT F. HARRINGTON, of Iowa; Hon. HARRY R. SHEPPARD, of California; Hon. ROBERT F. JONES, of Ohio; Hon. EARL R. LEWIS, of Ohio.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the order of services for the exercises today in honor of the late Speaker and the proceedings thereunder be printed in today's RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 12:20 o'clock p. m.) the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The House was called to order by the Speaker at 12:27 o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 313

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
September 16 (legislative day of August 5), 1940.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, late Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the Senate accept the invitation of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the late Speaker in the House at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. today.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore to join the committee appointed by the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased, and that a committee of 30 Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore to join the committee on the part of the House to attend the funeral of the deceased at Jasper, Ala.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That, at the conclusion of the funeral service, the Senate return to its Chamber and, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Speaker, it then stand adjourned until Wednesday next.

RECESS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess during the funeral services.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The body of the late Speaker BANKHEAD lay in state in the space in front of the Clerk's desk.

At 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., the following guests were escorted to the seats assigned to them:

The President pro tempore of the Senate [Mr. PITTMAN] and Members of the United States Senate.

The SPEAKER. On the part of the House the Chair appoints as members of a committee to escort the President to the Chamber the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOLAND], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the part of the Senate the Chair appoints the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY].

The following guests arrived, and were escorted to the seats assigned to them:

The Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Ambassadors and Ministers and Chargés d'Affaires of foreign governments.

The Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard.

The members of the President's Cabinet.

The President of the United States, escorted by the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The family and relatives of the late Speaker.

The CHAPLAIN (Dr. Montgomery). I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth on me, though he die, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die.

Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you strength. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of heart and ye shall find rest of soul.

In the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Master. Amen.

The SPEAKER. For 25 years and more I was given a rich friendship, one I shall remember to my last day. It was given to me by a great statesman, by a great man with a great soul. Paraphrasing a little, his friendship was an enriching treasure in the memory of which I shall not be poor.

We meet today knowing from the highest to the lowest in the land that we have lost a friend. The House of Representatives has lost its great leader, the country has lost a great patriot and friend to all mankind, and each of us has lost a brother.

The conditions under which I appear before you today make the situation more pointed to me because I stand here in great humility with a knowledge of my poor limitations, trying to follow in the footsteps of one so great and fine as the late Speaker BANKHEAD.

WILL BANKHEAD was a human being. He loved individuals, he loved people in the mass. His was a great soul. It will be many days before his light passes from this world.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is with heavy hearts we gather today to pay a tribute of respect and devotion to a beloved friend, a truly great American.

Those of us who have been associated with Speaker BANKHEAD for many years know of his fine personal character, his devotion to the public service, and his rugged Americanism.

He held, as Speaker of the House, one of the great positions in the Government. It is a position which calls for ability, the highest integrity, absolute fairness, and a thorough knowledge of the business of the Government. Mr. BANKHEAD had all of these. It can be truthfully said he measured up fully to the highest traditions of his great office.

Mr. BANKHEAD was a strong partisan. Yet his respect for constitutional government and his high office was such that he gave us of the minority the full rights which must be given to a minority if we are to have a government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

A fine life is ended. A great American has passed on to the reward which comes from a life of service dedicated to the common welfare. Legions of friends will miss his friendly smile, his warm clasp of friendship, and his characteristic southern courtesy and chivalry.

As we who loved him gather here expressing our sorrow and grief, we can say only that which, after all, is the finest tribute which can be paid to any man: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

The quartette sang Be Still My Soul, by J. Sibelius.

The CHAPLAIN (Dr. Montgomery). Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, today sorrow touches our earthly pilgrimage; do Thou weave a divine comfort about the altars of our hearts. We praise Thee that Thy earthly children, over whom the skies bend, are within the Father's fold; consider and hear us; in the midst of life we are in death. Thy ways are in the deep and Thy paths are in the mighty waters; yet, blessed Lord, Thy sovereignty is love and eternal good. We pray that our faith may see through the shadows and cleave steadfastly to Him who is the resurrection and the life. Heavenly Father, we pause with one accord in loving memory of him our true friend and brother, a renowned statesman and patriot, whose distinguished services have become a part of our Nation's history. O let this hour freshen and deepen our devotion to our country as we pray at the shrine of our sorrowing hearts. Hear us as we bestow the silent tokens of our abiding affection. We praise Thee for his deep convictions of the right, courage, and for his unsullied honor. O blessed Lord God, the memory of this scholarly Christian gentleman we will not willingly allow to die out of our aching hearts. He loved the good, the beautiful, and the true, and saluted a greater future for his brotherman. Comfort the loved ones in the shadows of their great loss, yet in the glow of a wonderful memory. Let the vision of our Lord and Saviour hang in the chambers of our breasts, and Thine shall be the glory forever. Amen.

My friends, while in the office of our beloved Speaker he has told me of his own favorite psalm, namely, the one hundred and third. This I will read:

Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless His holy name.

Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits;

Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases;

Who redeemeth thy life from destruction; who crowneth thee with loving kindness and tender mercies;

Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things, so that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's.

The Lord executeth righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed.

He made known His ways unto Moses, his acts unto the children of Israel.

The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plentious in mercy.

He will not always chide; neither will He keep his anger forever.

He hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities.

For as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is His mercy toward them that fear Him.

As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us.

Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him.

For He knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust.

As for man, his days are as grass; as a flower in the field, so he flourisheth.

For the wind passeth over it, and it is gone; and the place thereof shall know it no more.

But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear Him, and his righteousness unto children's children;

To such as keep His covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them.

The Lord hath prepared His throne in the heavens; and His kingdom ruleth over all.

Bless ye the Lord, all ye His hosts, ye ministers of His, that do His commandments, hearkening unto the voice of His word.

Bless ye the Lord, all ye His hosts, yet ministers of His, that do His pleasure.

Bless the Lord, all His works in all places of His dominion; bless the Lord, O my soul.

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters.

He restoreth my soul; He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake.

Yea, though I walk through the Valley of the Shadow of Death, I will fear no evil: For Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me.

Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: Thou annointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

Let not your heart be troubled: Believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you; for I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I come again, and will receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.

Consider the lilies of the field how they grow. They toil not, neither do they spin. But yet I say unto you that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

Wherefore if God so clothed the grass of the field which today is but tomorrow is cast into the oven, shall He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith.

And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, flowing out of the Throne of God; and in the midst of the river and on either side of it was there a Tree of Life.

There shall be no night there and they need no candle there; neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and forever.

O, yet we trust that somehow good,
Will be the final goal of ill,
To pangs of nature, sins of will,
Defects of doubt and taints of blood.

That nothing walks with aimless feet,
That not one life shall be destroyed
Or cast as rubbish to the void
When God hath made the pile complete.

That not a worm is cloven in vain,
That not a moth with vain desire
Is shriveled in the fruitless fire
Or but subserves another's gain.

So runs my dream; but what am I?
An infant crying in the night,
An infant crying for the light;
And with no language, but a cry.

I falter where I firmly trod,
And fall with my weight of cares
Upon the great world's altar-stairs,
That slope through darkness up to God.

I stretch lame hands and grope
And gather dust and chaff and call
To what I feel is Lord of all,
And faintly trust the larger hope.

My dear friend and beloved brother, how I loved you. In the other hour when he breathed his last the heavens opened above his couch and the soul of WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD became immortal.

The quartette sang I've Done My Work, by Carrie Jacobs-Bond.

Rev. William S. Abernethy, D. D., minister of Calvary Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., pronounced the following benediction:

May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ and love of God and fellowship of the Holy Spirit abide with us all, now and forever more. Amen.

The President of the United States, escorted by the joint committee of the House and Senate, the President's Cabinet, the Diplomatic Corps, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy, the Commandant of the Marine Corps and the Commandant of the Coast Guard, the President pro tempore and Members of the Senate, and the family and relatives of the late Speaker retired.

AFTER RECESS

The House was called to order at 1:06 p. m., pursuant to the recess.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama to make an announcement.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, the special train for Jasper, Ala., will leave Union Station at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon and arrive at Jasper at 11 o'clock tomorrow. Services will be held at the Methodist Church in Jasper at 2:30. The special train will leave Jasper for Washington at 6 o'clock Tuesday afternoon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. REED of New York (at the request of Mr. CROWTHER), indefinitely, on account of a death in his family.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, as a further mark of respect for the memory of our deceased Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn to Thursday, September 19, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House, pursuant to its previous order, adjourned until Thursday, September 19, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1940

Very Reverend Noble C. Powell, D. D., dean of the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God, who through the ages hast inspired the hearts and minds of faithful men with the breath of Thy Holy Spirit, giving to them insight into Thy truth: Do Thou so inspire these Thy servants, granting to them grace and strength to conceive and to do that which is in accord with Thy righteous will for this people. In this hour of many voices and counsels, be Thou their guide in all things committed to their charge, that, under their leadership, this Nation may patiently and peacefully seek Thy kingdom and its righteousness, where alone may be found sure foundations and fullness of life. Grant that we, serving and obeying Thee, and Thee alone, as our Lord and God, may be worthy of the place which Thou hast given us, and do Thy will, that we may serve Thee amongst the nations of the earth. And to Thee shall be the honor and praise from generation to generation. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER

The Chief Clerk read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., September 18, 1940.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. WILLIAM H. KING, a Senator from the State of Utah, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

KEY PITTMAN,
President pro tempore.

Mr. KING thereupon took the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. HARRISON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Monday, September 16, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

FUNERAL SERVICES FOR THE LATE SENATOR LUNDEEN

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the sermon by Rev. George Mecklenburg at the state funeral of my colleague the late Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN, together with an obituary, and the program of the services on that occasion.

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SERMON ADDRESS BY REV. GEORGE MECKLENBURG, OF WESLEY METHODIST CHURCH, MINNEAPOLIS

Text: "But Gamaliel who was highly respected by all the people stood up and said."—Acts vi:34.

Gamaliel was a member of the Sanhedrin, the legislative body at Jerusalem. He stood out in the first century as a teacher of liberal thought and wide wisdom and prudence. He worked for laws for the poor gentiles so that they should have the same rights as the poor Jews in gathering the gleanings after the harvest. He rose above racial prejudice. He was humane. He advocated laws to protect wives against unprincipled husbands and widows against unscrupulous children.

In crucial moments, when it was not popular, Gamaliel stood up and spoke out. How like Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN. It seems that God always raises up great leaders, in every crisis, who are brave enough and strong enough to stand out against the forces of wrong. Today, again we are in one of the major crises of history. Therefore, the loss of Senator LUNDEEN, just at this moment, seems irreparable, and we can only pray that God again will raise up more strong and fearless leaders in Congress for days like these.

As we scan history we take courage. We note how God has always raised up great leaders who had the courage of their convictions and did that which they believed was right. Amos was such a prophet. He stood up and spoke the truth even at the King's banquet. Jeremiah dared to stand alone with God. Savanarola cried out against evil in Italy. John Huss never compromised with autocracy. Martin Luther at the Diet of Worms stood up for spiritual freedom. John Knox criticized Mary, Queen of Scots, to her very face. Voltaire stood up for truth and justice and tolerance. Wesley advocated a free evangelical Christianity. Roger Williams stood for religious liberty in our country. John Brown, Wilberforce, and Lincoln fought for the freedom of the slaves.

That is the way social and moral progress has always been made. Let us thank God and take courage in the fact that we do have people who dare to stand up and save the day for righteousness. If the time ever comes that our prophets are under the thumb of some social system or some totalitarian party, then pity civilization. To muzzle healthy protest is to kill the goose that lays the golder eggs of progress.

Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN stood up again and again in Congress and protested against the evils of our day. He will always be remembered by his friends as well as by his enemies as a man who believed tremendously, who worked sincerely for that which he believed. It mattered not what the popular clamor of the moment might be. He was not an ordinary politician. We might call him a statesman. It would, perhaps, be more true to call him a prophet—a secular prophet of our times.

His stand on the World War is the best example of that. In April 1917, in the House of Representatives, he voted "no" to the act of war that plunged our country into the European chaos for which we were totally unprepared. Before he voted, though he knew it was hopeless, he cried out like a prophet in the wilderness against it. He said: "We cannot hope to maintain the Monroe Doctrine and at the same time interfere in the affairs of other continents. I stand with George Washington and Thomas Jefferson on a policy of absolute neutrality. I place America first. I have but one allegiance, and that is to my native land. I have but one country, and that is the United States. Let America show love, not hatred, to the battle-torn people of Europe. Let us show compassion, not revenge. Let us play the part of the Good Samaritan. The spirit of Christianity, peace, and sanity must be preserved here in the United States. On Good Friday, about to break, you are proceeding to add to the agony of a world already crucified by war." Many people who severely criticized him at the time feel he has been vindicated in this stand. He was not carried off by the hysteria of war.

Senator LUNDEEN was a great friend, and he had hosts of friends. The thousands of letters, telegrams, and floral tributes that have arrived in Minneapolis the last 2 days from every State in the Union tell the story of the regard in which he was held by millions. Messages have been received from the President of the United States, down to a colored bootblack in Minneapolis. His political opponents are as generous in tribute as his coworkers.

The sorrow of the State of Minnesota and the Nation is deep and genuine. The masses have lost a friend and an advocate.

I saw a letter he wrote recently philosophizing the duties of a public servant today. I have picked a few sentences from this letter, and they read as follows: "After all, we are only the hired men of the people. Support all programs for security in old age. Remember the veterans of our wars. Remember the youth of America, who are entitled to an education and a permanent job. Remember the farmer. Defend the small merchant. Be a fighting, liberal progressive. Fight for a government such as was defined by Abraham Lincoln—a government of the people, by the people and for the people." Senator LUNDEEN was always the champion of the poor. He fought for and really saved the bonus bill for our war veterans. He was the constant supporter of the post-office employees. He always worked for better labor laws.

He was implacably against war, because, he said, the poor pay the price of war. He believed no foreign war should be declared except by a vote of the people. He was not a pacifist. He believed in preparedness for America, but America only.

I maintain he was a Gamaliel. He was respected by the people, even though he stood up and spoke up whether it was good politics or not.

Now his work is suddenly cut off, and it seems to us that his task has not been completed. But is not that true of all life? We only start work here. It takes eternity to complete life.

The best thing about today is tomorrow. The best thing about time is eternity. Eternity completes, explains, and fulfills time. We certainly can see now that one world at a time is not enough. It takes eternity to put vitality into sagging life.

I fear too many of us have a mechanical, barrenly theological, or magic idea of immortality. If we understood immortality as Jesus taught it, we would practice it and glory in it. Definite, practical, working immortality becomes ours when we realize that life is so unfinished that we need eternity to complete it.

Those who set their faces toward achieving great results, exploring great truths, mastering great tasks find life expanding until the horizons reach out into eternity itself.

Immortality to be anything but an intellectual or academic belief must become an experience of today. It is when we live imperishable values, when we are busy with eternal principles, that we begin to experience everlasting life. It is when life is bent on interests that transcend time that faith in immortality becomes vital. So it is life that determines immortality. That is what Jesus meant when he said, "He that knoweth God hath immortality." It is a present and eternal possession.

So the fulfillment of life beyond possibilities of this temporary and unsettled existence is the demand of life itself. God in eternity will complete these broken and incomplete lives of ours. History itself needs eternity for its fulfillment. Immortality is the very basic center of life philosophy. It is a living challenge to our day. A challenge to every form of materialism. A challenge to us to live a life of immortality here and now. It challenges every movement to treat men as less than immortals. It challenges every attempt to exploit men for profit; all movements of totalitarians that subject men to the government. The only effective basis for democracy and freedom must be found in the regal nature of man himself. The central weakness of our times is our lack of vital faith in man as an eternal being. Politics without God and immortality always ends in tyranny and dictatorships. On the other hand, immortals cannot be enslaved.

The whole Nation is in mourning over the 25 people who were lost in this major airplane accident of our country. We express sympathy to their dear ones. Mrs. Lundeen received yesterday a telegram from one of the mourners of this accident. It reads as follows: "My deepest sympathy goes out to you. I, too, had a sister on the same plane."

This tragic death of the Senator is a personal sorrow to me as his pastor. Only the other day I received a hand-written note from him reading: "George, don't get discouraged. Keep up the fight. The hope of the world, after all, is in religion. We'll make a good world out of it yet."

It is altogether fitting and proper that Senator LUNDEEN should be buried in Little Arlington National Cemetery at Fort Snelling. It was the Lundeen bill that created this cemetery which will become one of the beauty spots of Minnesota in time. There he will be laid to rest, but his work goes on. May God raise up workmen who will carry on.

There is no death! The stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore,
And bright in Heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forevermore.

There is no death! The dust we tread
Shall change beneath the summer showers
To golden grain or mellow fruit
Or rainbow-tinted flowers.

The granite rocks disorganize
To feed the hungry moss they bear;
The forest leaves drink daily life
From out the viewless air.

And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life—there are no dead.

OBITUARY

ERNEST LUNDEEN was born at Beresford, S. Dak., August 4, 1878.

His father was the Reverend Charles Lundeen, minister of the Swedish Mission Church.

After graduating from Carlton College he graduated from the University of Minnesota Law School in 1904. He was admitted to the bar in 1906.

He married Miss Norma Matheson Ward, of San Francisco, Calif., in 1919. Mrs. Lundeen and two children, Ernest Ward and Joan Jessie, survive him.

Early in life he became interested in civic life. He felt he could best serve his country in politics. He was elected a member of the Minnesota House of Representatives for two terms, 1910–14. He became known then as an independent thinker and an independent voter.

Then he served as a Member of the Sixty-fifth (war) Congress in 1917–19. In this Congress he voted against war and against conscription for foreign service.

He served as private in Company B, Twelfth Regiment Minnesota Volunteers, Spanish-American War.

Senator LUNDEEN was a loyal member of many organizations: United Spanish War Veterans; honor member, Veterans of Foreign Wars; the Masonic Lodge, No. 19, Minneapolis; the Wesley Methodist Church, Minneapolis; he was vice president of Civil War Veterans' Association.

Senator LUNDEEN delivered Memorial Day oration at National Cemetery, Arlington, Va., in 1919 upon invitation of the National Grand Army of the Republic.

He was elected Congressman at large to the Seventy-third Congress. Reelected to the Seventy-fourth Congress from the Third Congressional District. Upon the death of the late Governor Floyd B. Olson he received the unanimous nomination of the Farmer-Labor Party for the United States Senate and was elected to that office on November 3, 1936.

In the Senate he served on the following committees: Military Affairs Committee, Interstate Commerce Committee, Territories and Insular Affairs Committee, Indian Affairs Committee, and Printing Committee.

THE LATE SENATOR LUNDEEN: CONDOLENCES

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Home Owners Association of Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh, Pa., signed by Herman M. Samowich, secretary, expressing its sympathy and condolence on the tragic death of Hon. Ernest Lundeen, late a Senator from the State of Minnesota, which was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate petitions of Father Divine and sundry other citizens of the United States, praying that the Americas be united for peace, and also praying for the enactment of pending legislation to prevent and punish the crime of lynching, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the New Jersey State Association of Chiefs of Police in convention assembled at Asbury Park, N. J., endorsing and commending the activities of the so-called Dies Committee on Un-American Activities of the House of Representatives, and favoring the complete exposure of all agents of Hitler, Stalin, and Mussolini operating in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram from Michael Kolarik, of Gary, Ind., endorsing and commending the passage of the bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4175) to amend section 61 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, by adding a proviso which will permit States to organize military units not a part of the National Guard, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 2138) thereon.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 4319) authorizing the transfer of land owned by the United States back to the Spring Park Club, of Richfield Springs, N. Y., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2139) thereon.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 312) continuing the authority for an investigation of the matter of the proposed enlargement of Rocky Mountain National Park (submitted by Mr. HATCH on September 12, 1940), reported it without amendment.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on September 14, 1940, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TAFT:

S. 4352. A bill to provide for the free transmission in the mails of absentee ballots of officers and enlisted men of the land and naval forces of the United States; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

(Mr. GEORGE introduced Senate bill 4353, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. WALSH:

S. 4354. A bill to authorize naval agents to assist civil authorities in the enforcement of the law; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GILLETTE:

S. 4355. A bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, and as reenacted by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 4356. A bill making provision for payment of Reserve officers employed by the Government when on active duty;

S. 4357. A bill to provide a right-of-way across Camp Wallace Military Reservation, P. I.; and

S. 4358. A bill to provide a right-of-way across Camp Wallace Military Reservation, P. I.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONTROL OF PAYMENTS TO VETERANS AND DEPENDENTS RESIDING ABROAD

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, on April 24 I introduced a bill (S. 3835) to provide for the control of payments of financial benefits to veterans and their dependents who reside outside the continental limits of the United States, except for Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, and the Panama Canal Zone. That measure has been given study by various departments interested in it, including the Treasury Department and the Department of State. I now desire to introduce a bill which contains the substance of the bill originally presented to the Senate, with some enlargements—a bill which I believe to be necessary, which I understand has the approval of the Treasury and State Departments, and to which the Veterans' Administration itself raises no objection. I introduce the bill, Mr. President, rather than offer amendments to Senate bill 3835, so that when the Finance Committee is next in session it may have the new bill upon which action may be taken. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and referred as requested.

The bill (S. 4353) to restrict or regulate the delivery of checks drawn against funds of the United States, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, to addresses outside the United States, its Territories and possessions, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

H. R. 10295. An act to amend the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944); and

H. R. 10405. An act to provide for adjusting the compensation of persons employed as masters-at-arms, and guards at navy yards and stations, and for other purposes.

CORPORATION-INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. ADAMS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the amendment of Mr. BROWN to the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON FISCAL AFFAIRS OF THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. TYDINGS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 314), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved, That there is hereby established a special committee, to consist of three Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President of the Senate, which shall make a full and complete investigation with respect to (1) the amount, source, and type of revenue raised annually by the Federal Government during the past 10 years; (2) the relationship between the appropriations made for the various branches of the Government and the revenues raised to support such appropriations; (3) the amounts of Federal borrowings and the sources from which they have been obtained during the past 10 years; (4) the amount and character of the annual deficits of the Federal Government during the past 10 years; (5) what additional sources of revenue are available without serious injury to the economic life of the Nation; (6) such other matters relating to the fiscal affairs of the Government as are necessary to a consideration of the problem of balancing income and expenditures; and (7) the formulation of a plan or plans for an automatically balanced Budget in times of peace. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth and Seventy-seventh Congresses, to employ such experts, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $15,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING AND SERVICE—PROCLAMATION AND STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present for printing in the RECORD the proclamation of the President relating to registration under the draft.

There being no objection, the proclamation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REGISTRATION DAY

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas the Congress has enacted and I have this day approved the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, which declares that it is imperative to increase and train the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and that in a free society the obligations and privileges of military training and service should be shared generally in accordance with a fair and just system of selective compulsory military training and service; and

Whereas the said act contains, in part, the following provisions:

"SEC. 2. Except as otherwise provided in this act, it shall be the duty of every male citizen of the United States, and of every male alien residing in the United States, who, on the day or days fixed for the first or any subsequent registration, is between the ages of 21 and 36, to present himself for and submit to registration at such time or times and place or places, and in such manner and in such age group or groups, as shall be determined by rules and regulations prescribed hereunder.

* * * * * * *

"SEC. 5. (a) Commissioned officers, warrant officers, pay clerks, and enlisted men of the Regular Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Public Health Service, the federally recognized active National Guard, the Officers' Reserve Corps, the Regular Army Reserve, the Enlisted Reserve Corps, the Naval Reserve, and the Marine Corps Reserve; cadets, United States Military Academy; midshipmen, United States Naval Academy; cadets, United States Coast Guard Academy; men who have been accepted for admittance (commencing with the academic year next succeeding such acceptance) to the United States Military Academy as cadets, to the United States Naval Academy as midshipmen, or to the United States Coast Guard Academy as cadets, but only during the continuance of such acceptance; cadets of the advanced course, senior division, Reserve Officers' Training Corps or Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps; and diplomatic representatives, technical attachés of foreign embassies and legations, consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, and consular agents of foreign countries, residing in the United States, who are not citizens of the United States, and who have not declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, shall not be required to be registered under section 2 and shall be relieved from liability for training and service under section 3 (b)."

* * * * * * *

"SEC. 10. (a) The President is authorized—

(1) to prescribe the necessary rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this act;"

* * * * * * *

"(4) to utilize the services of any or all departments and any and all officers or agents of the United States and to accept the services of all officers and agents of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and subdivisions thereof in the execution of this act;"

* * * * * * *

"SEC. 14. (a) Every person shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of this act upon publication by the President of a proclamation or other public notice fixing a time for any registration under section 2."

* * * * * * *

Now, therefore, I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, under and by virtue of the authority vested in me by the aforesaid Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, do proclaim the following:

1. The first registration under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 shall take place on Wednesday, the 16th day of October 1940, between the hours of 7 a. m. and 9 p. m.

2. Every male person (other than persons excepted by section 5 (a) of the aforesaid act) who is a citizen of the United States or an alien residing in the United States and who, on the registration date fixed herein, has attained the 21st anniversary of the day of his birth and has not attained the 36th anniversary of the day of his birth, is required to present himself for and submit to registration. Every such person who is within the continental United States on the registration date fixed herein shall on that date present himself for and submit to registration at the duly designated place of registration within the precinct, district, or registration area in which he has his permanent home or in which he may happen to be on that date. Every such person who is not within the continental United States on the registration date fixed herein shall within 5 days after his return to the continental United States present himself for and submit to registration. Regulations will be prescribed hereafter providing for special registration of those who on account of sickness or other causes beyond their control are unable to present themselves for registration at the designated places of registration on the registration date fixed herein.

3. Every person subject to registration is required to familiarize himself with the rules and regulations governing registration and to comply therewith.

4. The times and places for registration in Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico will be fixed in subsequent proclamations.

5. I call upon the Governors of the several States and the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia to provide suitable and sufficient places of registration within their respective jurisdictions and to provide suitable and necessary registration boards to effect such registration.

6. I further call upon all officers and agents of the United States and all officers and agents of the several States and the District of Columbia and subdivisions thereof to do and perform all acts and services necessary to accomplish effective and complete registration; and I especially call upon all local election officials and other patriotic citizens to offer their services as members of the boards of registration.

7. In order that there may be full cooperation in carrying into effect the purposes of said act, I urge all employers, and Government agencies of all kinds—Federal, State, and local—to give those under their charge sufficient time off in which to fulfill the obligation of registration incumbent on them under the said act.

America stands at the crossroads of its destiny. Time and distance have been shortened. A few weeks have seen great nations fall. We cannot remain indifferent to the philosophy of force now rampant in the world. The terrible fate of nations whose weakness invited attack is too well known to us all.

We must and will marshal our great potential strength to fend off war from our shores. We must and will prevent our land from becoming a victim of aggression.

Our decision has been made.

It is in that spirit that the people of our country are assuming the burdens that now become necessary. Offers of service have flooded in from patriotic citizens in every part of the Nation, who ask only what they can do to help. Now there is both the opportunity and the need for many thousands to assist in listing the names and addresses of the millions who will enroll on registration day at schoolhouses, polling places, and town halls.

The Congress has debated without partisanship and has now enacted a law establishing a selective method of augmenting our armed forces. The method is fair, it is sure, it is democratic—it is the will of our people.

After thoughtful deliberation, and as the first step, our young men will come from the factories and the fields, the cities and the towns, to enroll their names on registration day.

On that eventful day my generation will salute their generation. May we all renew within our hearts that conception of liberty and that way of life which we have all inherited. May we all strengthen our resolve to hold high the torch of freedom in this darkening world so that our children and their children may not be robbed of their rightful inheritance.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 16th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1940, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and sixty-fifth.

[SEAL] FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

By the President:

CORDELL HULL,

Secretary of State.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, following the proclamation of the President, the statement issued by him on September 16, 1940, at the time of the signing of the selective service and training bill. I call attention particularly to one paragraph in the statement, reading, in part, as follows:

In the military service they—

will be intelligently led, comfortably clothed, well fed, and adequately armed and equipped for basic training.

There is much discussion of the danger which might result if a large number of trainees were called into their training period and adequate housing, food, clothing, and medical attention were not supplied. I offer this statement from the Commander in Chief of the armed forces to show that every attention will be given to those essential factors, and that no person will be called for training or service until the Government is ready to see that he is comfortably clothed, well fed, and adequately equipped in every way for basic training.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE PRESIDENT

America has adopted selective service in time of peace, and, in doing so, has broadened and enriched our basic concept of citizenship. Beside the clear democratic ideals of equal rights, equal privileges, and equal opportunities, we have set forth the underlying other duties, obligations, and responsibilities of equal service.

In thus providing for national defense, we have not carved a new and uncharted trail in the history of our democratic institutions. On the contrary, we have merely reasserted an old and accepted principle of democratic government. The militia system, the self-armed citizenry with the obligation of military service incumbent upon every free man, has its roots in the old common law. It was brought to this continent by our forefathers. It was an accepted institution in colonial days. At the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution, 9 of the 13 States explicitly provided for universal service in their basic laws.

In those days little was required in the way of equipment and training for the man in arms. The average American had his flintlock and knew how to use it. In addition he was healthy, strong, and accustomed to hardship. When he reported for military duty he brought with him his musket and his powder horn. His daily life inured him to the rigors of warfare.

Today the art of war calls for a wide variety of technical weapons. Modern life does not emphasize the qualities demanded of soldiers. Moreover, behind the armed forces we must have a munitions industry as a part of an economic system capable of providing the fighting man with his full requirements of arms and equipment. Many individuals, therefore, may serve their country best by holding their posts on the production line. The object of selective service is to provide men for our Army and Navy and at the same time disturb as little as possible the normal life of the Nation.

Selective service consists of four steps, which singly and in the group have been developed to operate with the fairness and justice characteristic of free democratic institutions. These steps are registration, classification, selection, and induction.

Wednesday, October 16, has been set aside, on which day every male between 21 and 35, inclusive, will be expected to report to a neighborhood precinct to fill out a registration card and a registration certificate. The certificate issued to the individual will be carried by him as a testimonial to his acceptance of the fundamental obligation of citizenship. The registration card will be forwarded to the county clerk or similar official and will be delivered by him to the local selective service board. These boards, consisting of 3 men, each appointed by the President, upon recommendations of the State Governors, will be set up in more than 6,000 communities. When the States notify the National Director of Selective Service that all of the local boards have completed this work, a national drawing by lot will determine the order of priority of the registrants in each local board area. The national priority list will be furnished to the local boards and the corresponding order of selection will be entered on the registration cards in their custody.

The priority established by the drawing will determine the order in which questionnaires will be mailed to the registrants. Upon receipt of these questionnaires, the registrants will enter on these forms pertinent facts on the basis of which their final classification will be determined.

There will be organized in every community in our Nation advisory boards for registrants, composed of patriotic citizens, civilian volunteers, to assist registrants in presenting fairly the facts to be used in determining the place of each individual in the scheme of national defense.

After the return of these questionnaires, the local board, after due consideration, will place the registrants in one of four classes. In class I will be those who are available for immediate service; in class II, those who are deferred because of the essential character of the service they are rendering in their present occupations; in class III, those individuals who should be deferred because of individuals dependent upon them for support; in class IV, those specifically deferred by the terms of the act.

The total number of individuals needed by the armed forces will be prorated among the several States. In this allocation due consideration will be given to the number of men already furnished by that State for our military forces. Within each State a quota, in a similar manner, will be divided among the local boards. Thus, each locality will be asked to furnish its fair share of individuals for induction into our armed forces.

In each of these local board areas individuals between the ages of 18 and 35 will be offered an opportunity to volunteer for a 1-year period of service and training. Such applicants will be accepted before any other individuals are selected, provided they are suitable for military service. It will be the duty of the local board to select as many additional individuals as are necessary to fill the quota for that particular area.

Following the tentative selection of these individuals, a local medical examiner will examine them physically. If they are accepted, they will be sent forward for final physical examination by medical officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps. Those who pass will be inducted into the service.

In the military service they will be intelligently led, comfortably clothed, well fed, and adequately armed and equipped for basic training. By the time they get physically hardened, mentally disciplined, and properly trained in fundamentals, the flow of critical munitions from factory to combat units will meet the full requirements for their advanced training.

In the military service, Americans from all walks of life, rich and poor, country bred and city raised, farmer, student, manual laborer, and white-collar worker, will learn to live side by side, to depend upon each other in military drills and maneuvers, and to appreciate each other's dignity as American citizens.

Universal service will bring not only greater preparedness to meet the threat of war but a wider distribution of tolerance and understanding to enjoy the blessings of peace.

LETTER BY SENATOR PITTMAN ON SELECTIVE TRAINING AND SERVICE ACT

[Mr. PITTMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed by him to Hon. Malcolm McEachin, secretary of state of Nevada, relative to the Selective Training and Service Act recently passed by Congress, which appears in the Appendix.]

MR. WILLKIE'S VISIT TO CHICAGO—STATEMENT BY SENATOR LUCAS

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement by Senator LUCAS following the visit of Hon. Wendell L. Willkie to the city of Chicago, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY LEMUEL B. SCHOFIELD ON REGISTRATION OF ALIENS

[Mr. SHEPPARD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the registration of aliens, by Lemuel B. Schofield, Assistant Attorney General in charge of the immigration and naturalization service, Department of Justice, which appears in the Appendix.]

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN EDWARD J. FLYNN AND LUTHER HARRISON

[Mr. BRIDGES asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Edward J. Flynn, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, to Luther Harrison, of Oklahoma City, Okla., and the reply of Mr. Harrison, which appears in the Appendix.]

ROOSEVELT GAINS ACCORDING TO GALLUP POLL

[Mr. SMATHERS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from the New York Times of this date under the heading "Roosevelt gains in three States," which appears in the Appendix.]

INVASIONS OF ENGLAND—LETTER BY RALPH LOZIER

[Mr. TRUMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to him by Ralph F. Lozier, Esq., of Washington, D. C., relative to the history of invasions and attempted invasions of England, which appears in the Appendix.]

DAY OF NATIONAL PRAYER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read Senate Resolution 293, submitted by Mr. GILLETTE on August 5, 1940, as follows:

Whereas the Senate of the United States on March 3, 1863, passed a resolution requesting President Lincoln, by proclamation, to set apart a day for national prayer and humiliation, in view of the critical situation then confronting our war-torn Nation, and President Lincoln, in response to this request, appointed such a date of prayer for the Nation; and

Whereas President Wilson, during the crisis of the World War, likewise appointed a day for national prayer and supplication; and

Whereas, following the observance of these days of national divine petition, there were manifest outpourings of God's blessings on the Nation; and

Whereas President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, in an address to the joint session of the Congress on September 21, 1939, stated that the situation of recent weeks carried a trend to a condition which "relegates religion, democracy, and good faith among nations to the background where there could be no place for the ideals of the Prince of Peace"; and

Whereas President Roosevelt, in an address to the American people on May 26, 1940, stated that "day and night I pray for the restoration of peace in this mad world of ours. I am certain that out of the hearts of every man, woman, and child in this land in every waking minute a supplication goes up to Almighty God; that all of us beg that suffering and starving, that death and destruction may end, and that peace may return to the world. In common affection for all mankind your prayers join with mine that God will heal the wounds and hurts of humanity": Therefore be it

Resolved, That in the situation we are now facing, imperiling as it does both the spiritual and democratic ideals of our own Nation and of other nations as well, we respectfully request the President of the United States, by proclamation, to appoint a day of prayer on behalf of our Nation, a day for confession of our national offenses, and for petitioning the Source of All Wisdom for the guidance and protection of our Nation in this crisis period, and that He may point the way to thought and action that will secure for our own country and all humanity the blessings of peace and liberty under law.

TAXATION OF GOVERNMENTAL SECURITIES AND SALARIES—MINORITY VIEWS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, as a member of the Special Committee on Taxation of Governmental Securities and Salaries, which was created pursuant to Senate Resolution 303, Seventy-fifth Congress, I file the views of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] and myself. They amount to minority views. I had thought of asking that they be printed in the RECORD, but I shall not make that request, as they are somewhat voluminous, embracing 90 pages of typewritten matter.

I find under the parliamentary situation that I will have an opportunity between now and 2 o'clock to cover some of the points which otherwise might not come before the attention of the Senate at all in the action that it will take concerning the pending amendment to the tax bill. Therefore, what I ask is that the views of the minority presented by me be printed in the usual form.

The minority views submitted by Mr. AUSTIN were ordered to be printed, with an illustration, as part 2 of Report No. 2140.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I am sorry I was 2 or 3 minutes late. I desire to submit an inquiry to the Senator from Vermont. I understood he intended to ask unanimous consent that the restriction which was imposed on debate last Saturday on the pending amendment be lifted. What was the result of his effort?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have made that request, but it was unsuccessful. I then tried to obtain agreement to three or four other requests by negotiation. The Senator from Mississippi has been very generous and liberal with me in these negotiations, and I have no complaint of his attitude toward this matter. He recognizes the importance of the question presented by the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] to the pending tax bill and realizes that the 2 years of work which the special committee has devoted to this question will be lost to the Senate, in effect, if we do not, in some manner, get the results of our studies before the Senate. He consented tentatively to an extension of time on this particular amendment to 1 hour on the amendment and half an hour on the bill.

Mr. BROWN. That would apply to all Senators?

Mr. AUSTIN. It would apply to each and every Senator. Subsequently I tried to figure out some way to get more time than that, in the hope that I could get into the RECORD the substance of what is in the minority views which I have just presented for printing in the usual way.

So I have obtained the floor under an item of business coming up in the morning hour, having in view the possibility of placing in the RECORD, so that it will be available tomorrow morning to all Senators, some of the views of the minority which will not get to the Senate before this amendment is voted on, unless it is published in the RECORD, because the usual publication of these reports would require more time than from now until tomorrow morning. That is the situation.

I wish to say to the Senator from Michigan that if he desires to use any of the time between now and 2 o'clock I am perfectly willing to be entirely equitable and fair with him in that regard.

Mr. BROWN. I will discuss that with the Senator privately in a moment. I want to say that the committee has prepared a report, which was printed, in substance, in the RECORD of last Thursday. I withheld the actual filing of the report at the request of the Senator from Vermont, who was required to return to his State on Friday. I may say that since receiving a copy of the minority views, which the Senator very kindly gave me a couple of days ago, I have prepared a reply, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed, together with the views filed by the Senator from Vermont.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, consent is granted.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, an hour and a half may be taken by each Senator on the bill and the amendment—an hour on the amendment and a half hour on the bill. Is that correct?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that that is not correct.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into, the debate is limited to 30 minutes on the amendment and 30 minutes on the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. I shall not ask for an extension of time if the Senator from Michigan finds it convenient to divide the time with me between now and the end of the morning hour and not have it count under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BROWN. I inquire if that is satisfactory to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HARRISON. That is satisfactory. I understand the Senate cannot proceed to take any action on the tax bill until it is laid before the Senate, which will be at 2 o'clock. I had understood the Senator from Vermont wanted to take the time until then, but that he is willing to divide it with the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. He is willing to divide it with me.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. That is satisfactory to me.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the resolution coming over from a previous day, the question of agreeing to it will be debatable until 2 o'clock.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have no objection to the division of time by the Senators in any way they see fit; I do not desire to take up any time so far as I am concerned, but, with the unanimous consent agreement here, in which the time is specifically stated, it is a precarious way of doing for us to proceed outside that unanimous-consent agreement.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator permit the Chair to state that until 2 o'clock the tax bill will not be before the Senate? The unfinished business comes before the Senate at 2 o'clock. The agreement would not interfere with going ahead with the unfinished business at 2 o'clock.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I understand that, and I understand that is a subterfuge by which to get around the unanimous-consent agreement; that is all right, and I do not object to it; but I do not like this way of proceeding. I do not like the way of proceeding by which time is to be parceled out or to be divided or that any other method may be taken by which certain Senators may be heard and certain other Senators may not be heard. I do not like the idea. I simply want to express, not an objection to their doing it in this particular instance, but an objection generally to the mode.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I understand that at 5 minutes to 1 I am to yield the floor to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]. I hope the clerk will remind me of that fact.

Mr. President, in 1938 a special committee was created to study proposals to enable the Federal Government to tax securities of State and municipalities and other political subdivisions. That committee immediately commenced its work, and has made a very thorough study of the subject in all its aspects, and has had the benefit of a great deal of assistance from all parts of the country and from a fairly representative cross section of the life of the country.

Of course, it is obvious that the issue raised by the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan is one of the most serious, one of the gravest issues that Congress may be called upon to decide, because it at once raises the question whether we are to take the road which leads inevitably to a completely centralized form of government and to a form of economy which may be described, for lack of a simpler word, as collectivism. In other words, we are now at the parting of the ways. The amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan, if agreed to, simply means that the United States Government has seized upon an essential function of government which belongs exclusively to the several States and to their subdivisions, namely, the function of raising money to operate the government by means of borrowing.

I think the question is so simple that anyone must recognize that if the Federal Government, without an amendment of the Constitution and solely by a vote of the majority of the Congress of the United States, may go into a city and lay upon it a burden affecting the essential function of raising money to operate the municipality's business, the Federal Government has assumed the power of destruction of that city as a government, and if not that, it has assumed the power of control of that city's government.

I am conscious of Mr. Justice Holmes' comment about the great truth uttered by Chief Justice Marshall that the power to tax is the power to destroy when Mr. Justice Holmes said, "Not while this court sits." The mere comment, "Not while this court sits," is one of the most emphatic expressions of the recognition by the Supreme Court of the fundamental thing to which I have alluded, namely, that while the court sits it will examine the taxation or the interference with the power to borrow money of a municipality and see if it would tend to destroy the government of the municipality, and if it would, the court sits as a barrier against the possibility of its having that effect. In other words, the question is at once decided by that whimsical comment; and, of course, the subsequent action of the court, in which Mr. Justice Holmes concurred, in holding unlawful and unconstitutional attempts by one government to tax the securities of another further established the security of the doctrine which I here invoke.

Mr. President, we have a peculiar Government. We live in a geographical area in which two governments exist, and they exist concurrently. We may always think of the geographical fields of both governments as exactly identical, but we must never forget that the political fields occupied by those two governments are entirely distinct; and it has been recognized from the beginning of our history that each of the governments occupying this geographical field must at all times respect the scope and limitations of the political field occupied by the other government. In other words, it is absolutely essential to this "indestructible Union composed of indestructible States" for the States to refrain from trenching upon essential functions of the Federal Government, and vice versa, for the Federal Government to refrain from trenching upon the essential functions of government of the States and municipalities.

Recognizing that profound principle, the doctrine of immunity from taxation of the issues of each of these two governments was declared at an early time by Chief Justice Marshall and has been observed from that day to this.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I think it inaccurate to say that the famous Chief Justice ever announced a reciprocal immunity. McCulloch against Maryland announced immunity on the part of agencies of the Federal Government from taxation or interference by a State government, but the converse of that proposition was never stated by Chief Justice Marshall and was not written into the decisions of the United States Supreme Court until about 1870 by the case of Collector against Day.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, very able men differ about what a case holds. I shall content myself by reading from a very significant statement in the opinion in the case of McCulloch v. The State of Maryland (4 Wheat. 316, 431).

> That the power to tax involves the power to destroy; that the power to destroy may defeat and render usless the power to create; that there is a plain repugnance, in conferring on one government a power to control the constitutional measures of another, which other, with respect to those very measures, is declared to be supreme over that which exerts the control, are propositions not to be denied. But all inconsistencies are to be reconciled by the magic of the word "confidence." Taxation, it is said, does not necessarily and unavoidably destroy. To carry it to the excess of destruction would be an abuse, to presume which would banish that confidence which is essential to all government.
> But is this a case of confidence? Would the people of any one State trust those of another with a power to control the most insignificant operations of their State government? We know they would not. Why, then, should we suppose that the people of any one State should be willing to trust those of another with a power to control the operations of a government to which they have confided the most important and most valuable interests? In the legislature of the Union alone are all represented. The legislature of the Union alone, therefore, can be trusted by the people with the power of controlling measures which concern all, in the confidence that it will not be abused. This, then, is not a case of confidence, and we must consider it as it really is.

The great Chief Justice declared this doctrine in no uncertain terms, that, in the first place, the power to tax is the power to destroy, and that it is against reason and sound principles for one State to simply trust another with a power to control the most significant operations of their State government. This was recognition of reciprocal immunity.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Assuming that the Senator in speaking imagines that the rights of the States still exist, I call his attention to the fact that it is dangerous to quote Chief Justice Marshall, because one of the recent appointees to the Supreme Court signalized his entrance upon his duties as a Justice of the Supreme Court by pronouncing John Marshall a "rhetorician" rather than a lawyer.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Virginia for his comment. I think the sarcasm is justified. I, too, adhere to the old-fashioned notion that a large part of the foundation of our great Government rests upon the decisions of John Marshall, and that probably we would not have the type of government which could endure through 150 years, and become the oldest government of one continuous form in all the world, had it not been for the wisdom and foresight and remarkable judgment of John Marshall.

Mr. President, there is another quotation I wish to read from the case which followed McCulloch versus Maryland, the case of Weston and others against the City Council of Charleston, decided in 1829, which is right in point, and which together with the case of McCulloch against Maryland, is the foundation for the decisions up to the present time relating to the matter of immunity of States and municipalities from taxation by the Federal Government. I read this particular extract because it has such cogent meaning for us in our present emergency. We are now at work upon a tax bill intended in part to raise money to provide for the national defense. The special committee which studied this subject knows that the pending amendment would not help that cause, but would hurt it. We know that the extra burden placed upon the Federal Government by virtue of the adoption of this amendment would, if we assume that our borrowings were $10,000,000,000, amount to probably not less than $20,000,000 annually to us. Indeed, if based on another estimate which I have seen, would amount to very much more than that. In other words, the adoption of this amendment, instead of benefiting our national defense, would clog and impede it.

> If the States and corporations throughout the Union, possess the power to tax a contract for the loan of money, what shall arrest this principle in its application to every other contract? What measure can Government adopt which will not be exposed to its influence?
> But it is unnecessary to pursue this principle through its diversified application to all contracts, and to the various operations of Government. No one can be selected which is of more vital interest to the community than this of borrowing money on the credit of the United States. No power has been conferred by the American people on their Government, the free and unburthened exercise of which more deeply affects every member of our Republic. In war, when the honor, the safety, the independence of the Nation are to be defended, when all its resources are to be strained to the utmost, credit must be brought in aid of taxation, and the abundant revenue of peace and prosperity must be anticipated to supply the exigencies, the urgent demands of the moment. The people, for objects the most important which can occur in the progress of nations, have empowered their Government to make these anticipations, "to borrow money on the credit of the United States." Can anything be more dangerous, or more injurious, than the admission of a principle which authorizes every State and every corporation in the Union which possesses the right of taxation, to burthen the exercise of this power at their discretion?
> If the right to impose the tax exists, it is a right which in its nature acknowledges no limits. It may be carried to any extent whithin the jurisdiction of the State or corporation which imposes it, which the will of each State and corporation may prescribe. A power which is given by the whole American people for their common good, which is to be exercised at the most critical periods for the most important purposes, on the free exercise of which the interests certainly, perhaps the liberty of the whole may depend; may be burthened, impeded, if not arrested, by any of the organized parts of the confederacy.

The reasoning of that case applies equally to the government of the State of Vermont and the city of Burlington. The power to support themselves financially by anticipated taxes and borrowing money with which to operate their governments is an essential and necessary power of government. In time of war, in conditions such as those in which we now find ourselves, the power of the Federal Government to borrow money in anticipation of taxes must be unimpeded and unhindered by any interference on the part of the several States. That is on principle true, and it is so simple that it seems as though there should not be any necessity of arguing it.

It is rather interesting to bring right down to date the recognition of this fundamental principle with which the amendment meddles quite casually. I have before me a decision by Mr. Justice Frankfurter in the O'Keefe case, in which the opinion was handed down May 27, 1937—which is fairly modern—recognizing the same situation, the same peculiar structural condition which requires us to support and defend and protect our Government faithfully if we are to perpetuate it as a bulwark of our freedom and our security. In that case Mr. Justice Frankfurter said:

> But, as is true of other great activities of the State and National Governments, the fact that we are a federalism raises problems regarding these vital powers of taxation. Since two governments have authority within the same territory, neither through its power to tax can be allowed to cripple the operations of the other. Therefore State and Federal Governments must avoid exactions which discriminate against each other or obviously interfere with one another's operations. These were the determining considerations that led the great Chief Justice—

He is talking about the same Chief Justice I have quoted, Mr. Chief Justice Marshall—

> These were the determining considerations that led the great Chief Justice to strike down the Maryland statute as an unambiguous measure of discrimination against the use by the United States of the bank of the United States as one of its instruments of government.

Mr. President, no man can with any probity assert that the principle set forth in the early case of McCulloch against Maryland does not prevail today as a guard and a protection of this federalism of ours, and one of the most substantial means of maintaining this "indestructible Union composed of indestructible States."

The doctrine of immunity is not set forth in so many words in the Constitution. It is rather to be found enunciated in the cases. Of course, it is one of those constitutionalisms which need no writing. It is so eternally true that it does not need to be set forth. It is so necessary that all men should run to its support and defense at once. No consideration of expediency should induce anyone to attack this barrier between the two governments, designed to protect each from injurious interference with an essential function of the operations of the other.

The immunity is set forth most clearly in that early Pollock case. There were two Pollock cases. There it was held directly and expressly that—

The law is invalid so far as imposing a tax upon income received from State and municipal bonds is concerned.

Among other things, Mr. Justice Fuller said this:

The tax on Government stock is thought by this court to be a tax on the contract, a tax on the power to borrow money on the credit of the United States, and consequently to be repugnant to the Constitution. Applying this language to these municipal securities it is obvious that taxation on the interest therefrom would operate on the power to borrow before it is exercised and would have a sensible influence on the contract and that the tax in question is a tax on the powers of the States and their instrumentalities to borrow money, and consequently repugnant to the Constitution.

Mr. Justice White, in a concurring opinion, said this about the same subject:

They are relevant to one case and not the other, because in the one case there is full power in the Federal Government to tax, the only controversy being whether the tax that is imposed is direct or indirect, while in the other there is no power whatever in the Federal Government, and therefore the levy, whether direct or indirect, is beyond the taxing power.

Mr. Justice Harlan, concurring, said this about it:

Any tax imposed directly upon interest derived from bonds issued by a corporation for public purposes under the authority of the State whose instrumentality it is, is a burden on the exercise of the powers of that corporation which only the State creating it may impose.

In the second Pollock case the Court commented upon its holding in the first case in this way:

We have unanimously held in this case that so far as this law operates from the receipts of municipal bonds it cannot be sustained because it is a tax on the power of the States and on their instrumentalities to borrow money, and consequently repugnant to the Constitution.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I assure the Senator that when I have the floor I shall be as generous as the Senator is to me in these interruptions.

I noted after I made my comment on the attitude of Chief Justice Marshall that the Senator from Vermont was unable to locate the portion of the opinion to which he was referring.

Mr. AUSTIN. I was unable to locate the opinion. I thought I had the opinion with me.

Mr. BROWN. I happen to have it here, and I want to point out that Chief Justice Marshall was never an advocate of the doctrine of equal sovereignty between the State and the Federal Government. He was the great protagonist of the supremacy of the Federal Government over the States. I am not saying that I, as a Democrat, agree with him, because that has been the historic division between the parties before other issues arose to change the situation somewhat. But I read to the Senator what Chief Justice Marshall said:

It has also been insisted that, as the power of taxation in the General and State governments is acknowledged to be concurrent, every argument which would sustain the right of the General Government to tax banks chartered by the States will equally sustain the right of the States to tax banks chartered by the General Government. But the two cases are not on the same reason. The people of all the States have created the General Government and have conferred upon it the general power of taxation. The people of all the States, and the States themselves, are represented in Congress, and, by their representatives, exercise this power. When they tax the chartered institutions of the States they tax their constituents, and these taxes must be uniform. But when a State taxes the operations of the Government of the United States it acts upon institutions created, not by their own constituents, but by people over whom they claim no control. It acts upon the measures of a Government created by others as well as themselves for the benefit of others in common with themselves. The difference is that which always exists, and always must exist, between the action of the whole on a part and the action of a part on the whole—between the laws of a Government declared to be supreme—and those of a government which, when in opposition to those laws, is not supreme.

I think it is quite clear that, so far as Chief Justice Marshall is concerned, he would never have approved a reciprocal taxation by the Federal Government of State bonds and by the States of Federal bonds, such as we propose here. Of course, I differ in that respect. I think we do have the power.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, we differ about the meaning of this decision also. I have had handed to me the case; and although I have not had time to analyze it, I point out that Chief Justice Marshall said, among other things:

We are relieved, as we ought to be, from clashing sovereignty, from interfering powers, from a repugnancy between a right in one government to pull down what there is an acknowledged right in the other to build up, from the incompatibility of a right in one government to destroy what there is a right in another to preserve.

If that is not the doctrine of reciprocity, tell me what is in the relationship he describes? But I was not trying to make so much the point of reciprocity as I was trying to point out the fundamental fact that we are really temporizing now with one of the most important safeguards of our institutions. If we should agree to the pending amendment, and it should become law, we would have opened the door to the complete control of every municipality in the country by the Federal Government. We would have made it possible to extinguish State lines. We would really have wiped out by this amendment alone that important separation of the sovereignties with respect to those powers which they may exercise within their own fields.

I think the confusion in the mind of the Senator from Michigan—he will pardon me for calling attention to this and I remark that the Department of Justice was following what I regard to be the same fallacy—is this: With the language in the decision by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall respecting the supremacy of the Federal power over taxation, the unfettered nature of it, the absolutism of it, and the necessity of having it always remain so, of course, we are in agreement. We have no conflict with that thought at all. The Federal power must be supreme within its own field, its own political field, but not in its geographical field. No more can the Federal Government come into the State field of taxation than can the State governments come into the Federal field of taxation and be supreme. It is a complete forgetfulness of the theory of a Federal government to assume that in our system one government has supremacy over the other relating to a function absolutely necessary for the other government's preservation. Time and time again the Supreme Court in passing upon the question of immunity from taxation has reiterated that principle. Functions necessary to the existence of the State cannot be destroyed by the other government. So from the time when the great Chief Justice Marshall started us out, as he did, with a very fine expression of this immunity to the time when, in the O'Keefe case, Mr. Justice Frankfurter reiterated the recognition of the two governments occupying the same field, and necessarily respecting the rights and the powers of each other, we have maintained this doctrine of immunity.

Why do we now have it before us? Because any standing committee of the House has initiated it? Has the Ways and Means Committee, which originated this tax bill, even considered it? No. Has the Finance Committee of the Senate brought it in here? The Finance Committee of the Senate reported the bill, but it never had an opportunity to see this amendment. Why is it here? The special committee which was appointed to make a study of this great problem with which the country is now confronted did not make its report until today. No Senator will have the advantage of reading that report before acting upon this question; and yet we have spent 2 years in special studies upon this subject so as to be able to advise Senators, so that they might act upon information rather than upon conjecture or upon the fallacious doctrines which have already been advanced on this floor.

The first argument is that this amendment would aid the Federal Government in carrying on its national-defense program. The second is that it would destroy the opportunity for evasion by the rich. That is the old, foolish doctrine of "soak the rich." The truth is that as to the first argument, the proposal would cost the Government many million dollars more than would be secured in taxes; and as to the second argument, it is not true. It is contrary to fact. That is to say, we do not find enough tax-exempt bonds in the estates of the rich to amount to anything. The ratio is exceedingly small and insignificant. For the most part, tax-exempt bonds are found in the portfolios of institutions, many of which are exempt because of their eleemosynary character. We should gain nothing by attempting to "soak the rich."

There is no earthly reason for this amendment being here at this time; and certainly, at whatever time it were presented, I should be obliged to take the floor and resist it with all my soul, for I believe in our form of government. With the world all about us in revolution—a revolution which tends to national socialism—I feel that here on this little island, as it were, in the great sea of world revolution, we have a high obligation to perform, and that is to meet the revolution with all our might, in order that we may defeat it, and maintain free institutions, free economy, and the highest degree of relative liberty afforded to any people on earth. If we do not stop this movement now, at this particular point, we shall subject ourselves to the greatest gain on the part of the world revolution that has occurred to date.

Let no man fool himself. Day by day this country is more and more subjected to world revolution. If Senators and Representatives in Congress have not the character and the courage to stand up and meet it and fight it now, day by day as it comes, they are not doing their duty.

I realize that the time is short, and that I have been awkward in getting started with this matter. Later this afternoon I shall try to present a more precise further consideration of this fundamental question. I know, from studies we have made, that there are no economic reasons why we should at this time, or at any time in the future, enable the States to tax the financial operations of the Federal Government, or enable the Federal Government to tax financing by the States. Such a program would produce no net revenue for either. It would add to the burden of the operations of both. Its tendency would be to break down something of much higher value, and that is the spirit of the American people.

If we now do this thing, which Americans have successfully resisted for 150 years, and which we know is unconstitutional—no amount of discussion will change that fact—we say to the rest of the world, "the American people have changed. They have not the spirit to stand up and fight for their rights." What will the States, which have sent us here, say? All the States except two have sent their attorneys general here to fight this effort to encroach upon the security of the States. I understand that all cities of more than 50,000 population have organized a conference of mayors in an effort to defend themselves against this attack by the growing Federal Government. What will they be justified in saying to us?

Mr. President, I think we shall be derelict in our duty if we allow the pending proposal to prevail.

I understand my time has expired.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Vermont that I shall be pleased to have him interrupt me at any time he desires to do so in my discussion of this question.

First, I wish to say that I totally disagree with the statement of facts upon which the Senator from Vermont has based his argument. We had before our special committee a large number of witnesses. All the experts from the Treasury Department stated that a substantial income to the States and the Federal Government would result from the imposition of the proposed tax. The representatives of the States' attorneys general brought before the committee a distinguished economist from Princeton University. I do not know whether or not it detracts from his testimony to say that he was employed and paid as would be a lawyer for making his argument, but I think that fact should be known to the Senate and to the people.

Mr. President, it is a rather singular thing that the only person representing the teaching profession, expert scholars on the subject of taxation, who opposed this proposal was Professor Lutz, of Princeton University, who was hired to come here as an advocate. Every independent economist who appeared before our committee—and there were several—took the opposite view from that taken by Professor Lutz. Every representative of the Government who testified took a position opposite to that taken by Professor Lutz. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that many Secretaries of the Treasury have favored the proposal. The last four Presidents of the United States—Mr. Harding, Mr. Coolidge, Mr. Hoover, and Mr. Roosevelt—have urged that we enact such legislation. I am not talking about the legal side. I am talking about the economic side.

In a poll submitted to the American people—the so-called Gallup poll—more than three-fourths of the American people, if that poll accurately represents their view, are in favor of the proposal; and of 712 newspaper editorials which appeared at the time of the President's message and at the time of the hearings, more than 600 were favorable to the proposal.

I have not the time this afternoon to differ with the estimates of Professor Lutz. I rely upon the estimates of the independent investigators of the Treasury Department of the United States, who are interested in the proposal in behalf of all the people of the United States.

Their estimate is that when the full effect of the taxation of State, municipal, and Federal bonds operates upon their income the return to the Treasury of the United States will be between three hundred and four hundred million dollars.

If after the adoption of the sixteenth amendment we had followed its plain implications and its plain wording, and had adopted an income-tax proposal of this character today, close to 10 percent of the income of the Federal Government would be derived from this source of taxation.

The Senator from Vermont says that there is not very much to the argument of tax justice, which, to my mind, is the principal argument for this proposal. Under the present law the progressive principle of taxation is exactly reversed. Instead of bearing heavier upon the rich man and more lightly upon the poor man, by permitting the privilege of tax exemption to exist, taxation is heavier upon the poor man and lighter upon the rich man.

Are the rich taking advantage of that situation. I said the other day, in response to a question asked me by the Senator from Colorado, that I did not blame the wealthy man for taking advantage of this situation. He has the legal right to do so; he has done so; and none of us can deny that it is his privilege to do so. Any Senator would do it; any citizen would do it. It is his right. But my point is that, from the standpoint of tax justice, it should not be permitted. I ask again, Are the rich taking advantage of tax exemption? I give some statistics from page 3 of the report which will be filed. They deal with the Federal estate tax which is levied by the Federal Government on the succession of real property and personal property. In the case of net estates of from $100,000 to $200,000, as indicated by the data from the Bureau of Internal Revenue for 1938, 3.5 percent of the estates was in the form of tax-exempt bonds.

On estates up to $300,000, 5½ percent was in the form of tax-exempt bonds.

On estates grossing a half million dollars, 6½ percent was in the form of tax-exempt bonds.

On estates of $1,100,000 dollars, 10½ percent was in the form of tax-exempt bonds.

On estates up to $2,100,000, 14 percent was in the form of tax-exempt bonds.

On estates up to $5,100,000, 14½ percent.

On estates of $5,100,000 and over—and I want Senators to appreciate the force of this figure—44.6 percent was in the form of tax-exempt bonds.

Can it be successfully denied that a great amount of property is in the hands of wealthy people who are totally exempt from paying the burden they ought to bear in connection with the expenses of the Government of the United States?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the Senator if he has in mind "The case against taxing income from governmental securities," by Paul V. Betters, executive director of the United States Conference of Mayors, in which, on page 224, he tabulates the actual conditions shown by examination of returns of estates? The figures there given seem to differ from those given by the Senator from Michigan. I wonder if the Senator would have objection to my having inserted in the RECORD what Mr. Betters claims the figures to be?

Mr. BROWN. Not at all. I have not the slightest objection.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the matter being inserted in the RECORD?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is simply not the fact that the wealthy are loading their estates with tax-exempt bonds in order to escape their just share of income taxes. An examination of all estate-tax returns filed with the Treasury Department in the calendar years 1927–37, inclusive, reveals somewhat startling figures. These are not selected estates nor a sampling, but are all the estates reported for tax purposes during those 11 years. During the period noted above there were 3,044 estates having a net worth of $1,000,000 or more. There were 105,499 estates of less than $1,000,000 net. Of the estates above $1,000,000, totaling over ten and one-half billion dollars, the following were the percentages of investment:

	Percentage
Wholly exempt Federal bonds	3.69
Partially exempt Federal bonds	1.12
State and local bonds	9.81
Taxable corporate bonds	4.80
Corporation capital stocks	55.23

For the estates less than $1,000,000, totaling twenty-two billions, the following were the ratios:

	Percentage
Wholly exempt Federal bonds	1.05
Partially exempt Federal bonds	2.46
State and local bonds	3.61
Taxable corporate bonds	8.46
Corporation capital stocks	36.14

The average for all estates:

	Percentage
Wholly exempt Federal bonds	1.90
Partially exempt Federal bonds	2.03
State and local bonds	5.63
Taxable corporate bonds	7.27
Corporation capital stocks	42.35

It will be noted that the average ratio of all public securities to the gross estate is 9.56 percent while the average ratio of all private securities to the gross estate is 49.62 percent, and that the amount of taxable corporate bonds is almost equal to the percentage of all public securities, being 7.27 percent. Moreover, as far as holdings of State and municipal bonds are concerned, taxable corporate bonds exceed them by almost three to two, since taking both the large and small estates, municipals constitute only 5.63 percent of the security holdings.

These figures hardly bear out the constantly repeated plaint of Treasury officials that the wealthy are escaping taxes by sinking their funds in tax-exempt bonds, and also shed considerable light on the consistent failure of Treasury spokesmen to offer tangible statistics, rather than generalities, in support of their argument.

Many people, when confronted with these figures, are inclined to be skeptical and exclaim, "Well, if the rich don't take this way of escaping taxes, why don't they?" The answer is relatively simple. While it is unquestionably true that there are a certain few rich persons who do profit by investment of capital funds in tax-exempt bonds, no one ever got rich buying tax exempts. The vast majority of large incomes made today in the United States necessitate the investment and continuance of capital in private enterprise. Perhaps one of the best commentaries on this phase of the question comes from a witness produced by the Treasury Department at the Senate hearings, Prof. William J. Shultz, of the College of the City of New York:

"As study of the composition of estates of rich decedents shows, our wealthy men still keep the major part of their wealth in junior issues. Tax-exempt bonds never gave anyone control over an enterprise. And the power and the opportunities for capital gain that inhere in common stocks are not to be surrendered lightly—even for a substantial tax saving—by the man who can afford to own them."

Mr. BROWN. I may say that the figures to which I have referred where handed to me by the Treasury today and they represent the figures for the latest year available, 1938. I merely wish to repeat that, according to the official figure, in gross estates of $5,100,000 and over, 44.6 percent, or almost one-half of the property left by the wealthy decedents, was in totally tax-exempt bonds.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator happen to have any statistics as to the aggregate amount of national wealth in estates or ownership which aggregate individually more than $5,000,000?

Mr. BROWN. No; I do not have that figure, I will say to the Senator, but I do not think it is particularly large in amount. If the Senator wants that concession from me, I am glad to give it. But my point is that the argument made by the Senator from Vermont, and I think by the Senator from Colorado, the other day to the effect that the tax-justice argument does not amount to very much——

Mr. ADAMS. No; the Senator from Colorado never discussed that point. The Senator from Colorado said that the important thing, the fundamental thing, was the welfare of the United States and of the States, and that as to individuals who might profit or might not profit we should not enter upon a punitive expedition if in fact the proposal would be detrimental to the country. I did not refer to the justice element, and I was not arguing it.

Mr. BROWN. I may say that from the standpoint of the sentence the Senator last uttered, the punitive feature, I am not interested in that at all. I want to prevent such a situation existing as that wealthy people are lawfully entitled to escape taxation, and I say to the Senator—and I stand upon that proposition—that the result of this kind of taxation will mean an increase of revenue to the Federal Treasury, not in 1941 or 1942 or 1943 but when the full effect is felt, of between $200,000,000 and $400,000,000 a year.

Mr. ADAMS. What I am concerned with is that we do not want to pay too high a price to accomplish this result. In other words, I am concerned with the welfare of my city and county and State, and I do not want to sacrifice their interests in order to reach what is a minor result.

Mr. BROWN. I assure the Senator I intend to take up the argument he presented the other day, which made quite an impression upon me.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator from North Carolina will bear with me for a moment, I should like further to answer the Senator from Colorado. I may say that in the hearings we examined the statistics, and I have them at hand, but I would prefer to answer the particular argument as to the burden that will be placed upon the cities and counties and States and their taxpayers when I take up the argument after the tax bill shall have been laid before the Senate. It is not before the Senate at the present time.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator now yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator so far, it appears to me, bases his argument upon the view that the purchasers of public bonds, municipal, Federal, and State bonds, are enjoying an immunity from taxation, and that this is an unjust privilege enjoyed by the rich. I think that that contention cannot be sustained. If it can be sustained, I am sure the Senator from Michigan, who has the floor, will sustain it. The exemption of Federal securities and State and municipal securities always lies as a favor to the Government and not to the individual. I think the Senator will agree with that. I shall not question him at any length, but I should like him to develop that point.

Mr. BROWN. I may say that the Senator has put very aptly, as he always does, the real issue here.

Mr. BAILEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. The question in my mind is, first, whether the Federal Government and the State governments in a large sense will be ultimate gainers by the imposition of this tax; second, whether or not it is fair—not speaking from the standpoint of the present law; I want to make plain that the persons who have large holdings of tax-exempt bonds are perfectly justified in using the exemption which is granted them—whether or not, as a matter of governmental policy, it is fair to reverse the progressive principle, and lay a heavier burden upon the taxpayers generally, and a lighter burden, or no burden at all, upon the wealthy people to whom a tax-exempt bond is a very much more valuable piece of paper than it is to a man of moderate income like the Senator from North Carolina and myself. Third is the proposition whether or not we are keeping a large sum of money out of productive enterprise by granting this privilege.

The Senator asked me if there was just one issue involved. I want to point out that there is one main issue—that is the revenue issue, as the Senator has indicated—but there are two other propositions involved in this situation.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall not undertake to elaborate on that point, but I will say that the really great issue here is not one of revenue. The really great issue here is the power of one sovereignty to tax another, and the wisdom of it, even conceding that the Federal Government has the right to tax the credit of my State, for that is what it all amounts to.

My State of North Carolina wants a million dollars, but if it submits itself to the power of the Federal Government to tax its credit, it submits itself to the power of the Federal Government to deprive it to that extent of its credit, and to put the securities of my State on a level with all other securities—not those of municipalities or States but corporate securities—to put it into a hopeless competition. Mr. Frankfurter denied that the power to tax is the power to destroy on the ground that the taxes would be leveled out, and, I think, on the further ground that, after all, the Congress would not be destroying anything.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator, as a good lawyer, ought to go a little further than that. I do not think he was here when the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] earlier in the day quoted from an opinion by Mr. Justice Holmes that the power to tax is not the power to destroy "as long as this Court exists."

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; I was here.

Mr. BROWN. I think Chief Justice Marshall's axiom has been often misconstrued. He never did say, "The power to tax is the power to destroy." He said, "The power to tax involves the power to destroy."

Mr. BAILEY. I am sorry I even mentioned the phrase, because I see that it took the Senator off the argument I was making. I was assuming that the dictum of the recently appointed Justice had substance in it. I think it has some; but the power to tax is the power to limit the credit of the Commonwealth of North Carolina, and that statement cannot be denied. It may not destroy the credit of the Commonwealth, but it puts it in competition with all other credit in the country.

I shall be through in a minute. I do not wish to detain the Senator.

The issue here, therefore, in my mind, is just this: I think the Senator from Michigan has agreed that the State of North Carolina sells its bonds to pay from 2 to 4 percent, tax-free. Therefore it pays interest of 2, 2½, to 4 percent; and that low rate of interest is due to the fact that the purchaser of the bond is freed of the obligation to pay taxes on it. Now we propose to deprive my State of that right, which we have assumed to be an inherent right, but which is now challenged. I will not say that is the power to destroy the State, but I deny that the present tax exemption is a privilege to the rich. It is a privilege to the Commonwealth of North Carolina and all the people in it, poor and rich. I do not think that statement can be denied.

I know my distinguished friend is not going to pitch his argument on the low ground that here is a rich man with a great estate who has a number of bonds, and here is a poor man who has not any bonds, and the rich man can afford to own bonds and get a low rate, and the poor man cannot. I am one of the latter. I bought United States bonds only once in my life, and that was during the World War. I bought away beyond my capacity to pay for them, and I lost $1,400 on United States bonds. I have never bought one since, and I do not expect to have one. I can manage to make more out of the little savings I have than the Government would pay me. I will agree that a wealthy man having an immense amount of money to invest cannot hope to get a high rate of interest; but a man with no great amount of money to invest cannot hope to get along unless he does better than 2 percent.

That, however, is not the issue here. The issue here is the privilege existing in a municipality or a State or the Federal Government, by way of being sovereign, to say, "Well, all right; you buy my bonds and I will pay you a very low rate of interest, wholly on the ground that there is no tax on the bonds." What is wrong with that? What is uneconomical about that? What is unsound about that? Where is the injustice about that?

If you read the histories of nations you will see that it has been inherent in all sovereignties to waive taxes on their securities, not for the sake of the purchaser but for the sake of the state, in order that it may get a low rate of interest.

So there is the situation. Those who undertake to upset this age-long and historic system that we have ought to be able to show wherein the present policy is detrimental to the States, detrimental to the Federal Government, detrimental to the general welfare. Up until now—and I fear until the end of time—governments are going to expand and live by way of borrowed money.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I want to finish that thought, and then I shall not interrupt further.

This Government is now in sight of a bonded debt of $75,000,000,000. That debt is in plain sight. I wish the Senate to hear me. If I never speak again, I want this statement to be heard: That debt is more of a menace to the welfare of the American people than is the possibility of an invasion from any foreign country. That ever-mounting debt is the most serious thing we have to deal with.

The interest on $75,000,000,000 at 2 percent is a billion and a half dollars a year. Put a tax on it, and what will the interest be then? Let us say the rate goes to 4 percent; there is $3,000,000,000 a year of taxation. Who pays it? The poor man. Now, where is the argument about the poor man?

That is all I have to say.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will pardon me, I think he makes the usual error that men fall into when they try to separate the taxpayer in the States from the taxpayer in the Federal Government. He is one and the same fellow. He is the same taxpayer. With that fundamental fact in mind, the question is, Who is suffering the loss, both on the part of the Federal Government and on the part of the State governments, from the inability of the State and Federal Governments to collect the higher taxes which they would receive if these bonds were not tax-exempt?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt my friend?

Mr. BROWN. The Senator may interrupt. I hope he will not take quite as long as he did before.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator said I had fallen into a blunder. I hope I have not. I am not the same taxpayer and he is not the same taxpayer in the Federal jurisdiction that he is in the State jurisdiction.

Mr. BROWN. He looks out of the same eyes, and he speaks with the same mouth.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to elaborate that thought, because I think it is of the utmost importance here.

In North Carolina I am a taxpayer on real estate. In the Federal jurisdiction I am not a taxpayer on real estate.

In North Carolina I am a taxpayer on personal property. In the Federal jurisdiction I am not a taxpayer on personal property.

That distinction was laid down from the foundation of the Government; but if we pursue the tax policy which my friend is advocating we shall so deprive my State of North Carolina of revenue, or we shall so impose interest upon its bonds, that we shall drive the people of North Carolina and the legislature thereof to impose higher taxes on my real estate, on my farm down there, on the mules of the farmer, and the crop on his land. Yet it is said this would be a good thing that there is no distinction, that this scheme of things is relieving the poor man and vindicating him against the favors given to the rich. It is my solemn judgment that this very proposal, if adopted, will be reflected in increased taxes on every foot of land and every parcel of personal property in the country. Then my distinguished friend will have his theory right, that there is no distinction between the Federal taxpayer and the State taxpayer, but not until then. That is why I am resisting this proposal. I desire to forestall that day as long as I can. I think it is coming, but I wish to do my little part to prevent its coming.

Mr. BROWN. Certainly the State and Federal taxpayer, as one individual, pays his Federal and State taxes out of the same pocketbook. To his mind the total of those taxes is the important thing, whether it be a tax on real estate, an income tax, or a tax upon personal property.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not like to trouble my friend, but I was not saying anything about that. Of course, when a man pays money to any source, he pays it out of his own pocket. I would not like to suspect that the Senator would pay his tax out of my pocket. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN. I do not think the Senator would let me do that.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that is all beside the mark, of course, and is not worth even talking about. When a man pays money for taxes, he pays it out of his own pocket, and not out of that of his neighbor.

Mr. BROWN. All I am saying is that tax-exempt bonds today are permitting the escape, by the upper-bracket income-tax payers of the United States, and of many States in the Union, of somewhere between $200,000,000 and $400,000,000. As I stated a few days ago, only 13 percent of the total of all taxes—State, Federal, and municipal—are paid on a progressive principle, upon the ability-to-pay tax theory, which is conceded by all tax experts to be the soundest tax theory.

Mr. BAILEY rose.

Mr. BROWN. Just a moment, if the Senator will permit me. That means that 87 percent of our taxes are paid in the form of consumption taxes, real-estate taxes, to which the Senator has referred, and other taxes of that character, where the progressive principle, the principle of ability to pay, does not apply.

In a large sense, then, this $200,000,000 to $400,000,000 a year which is lost to the Federal Government—and that is 10 percent of our tax return, or was 2 or 3 years back—is being paid by those who are least able to pay.

I wish to get to the Senator's argument about the shift of the burden, and the argument which the Senator from Vermont makes, and which I am sure the Senator from Colorado made a few days ago, that the burden is shifted to the real-estate taxpayer. I have taken the estimates of Professor Lutz and the estimates of the Treasury Department. When the full effect of the amendment is felt, the taxpayer of the city of Detroit, in my State, on a thousand-dollar basis, would be paying 20 cents a thousand more, in 1960 assuming that to be the year in which the final effect of the amendment would be felt, than at the present time. He is paying now $27.90. According to the estimate of the Treasury Department, he would be paying $28.10.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I wanted to give one more figure. I thought I had the information as to Raleigh, but I do not see it among my papers.

Mr. BAILEY. What does the Senator wish to know about Raleigh?

Mr. BROWN. I want to know what the tax rate is.

Mr. BAILEY. The tax rate in the city of Raleigh is $1.40, fixed for this year.

Mr. BROWN. That is a hundred?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. Fourteen dollars a thousand.

Mr. BAILEY. We have the county tax to add, which is 90 cents, making $2.30.

Mr. BROWN. That is, $23 a thousand?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he leaves Detroit?

Mr. BROWN. In a moment I will yield. The situation in Raleigh, if substantially the same as it was in Detroit, according to the estimate, the increase in the tax would be somewhere between $23.10 and $23.18 a thousand. That is the estimate of the Treasury Department. Mr. Lutz has a different estimate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I do not think the Senator from Michigan could have apprehended what I was saying. He is off on a theory about something that will happen in 1960.

Mr. BROWN. Oh, no.

Mr. BAILEY. What Mr. Lutz said about it. I would not give a snap for what somebody estimated.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator has the same opinion of Mr. Lutz I have.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not know Mr. Lutz; but I am not concerned about 1960. The Senator may be here then, but I will not be. I am thinking about the public policy and the economic consequences. I want the Senator to see my point, though I do not like to interrupt him.

I was saying this policy of taxing the credit of my city of Raleigh and my State of North Carolina would drive the city of Raleigh and the State of North Carolina into further real-estate taxes.

Mr. BROWN. Exactly.

Mr. BAILEY. How can Mr. Lutz estimate it would be 20 cents on a hundred or a thousand in 1960? My city of Raleigh might want to borrow $200,000 next year. He does not know. The State of North Carolina may suffer a disaster, and may wish to borrow $50,000,000 next year. We may have to refund our road bonds, which amount approximately to $100,000,000. Mr. Lutz says that is 20 cents on a thousand. I would not care who said it, I would tell him he does not know what he is talking about. There is no sense in that kind of talk at all. I am dealing with a real situation, not a theory.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me also suggest that once Congress asserts the power of the Federal Government to tax the operation of making loans by States and municipalities, what is going to stop them from reaching back and taxing all the securities?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator is wrong about that; Mr. Lutz is going to stop it. [Laughter.] We may have to let Mr. Lutz stop it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Before the Senator leaves the city of Detroit, I wish to call his attention to a table, probably prepared by Mr. Lutz, although I do not know that to be so. The table shows that in the case of Detroit, Mich., assuming the debt to be $443,107,000, the interest paid in 1936, $29,879,000, the increased interest cost, assuming a $60.20 change in yield basis for long- and short-term debt, respectively, $2,645,000, and the tax levy per thousand in 1936 in Detroit being $27.90. Does the Senator from Michigan question that the tax levy adjusted to include the increased interest on these assumptions I have made would be $30 a thousand?

Mr. BROWN. Let me clear that matter up, and I think the Senator and I can agree. In the first place, Mr. Lutz is talking about the effect when there were no more tax-exempt bonds, in other words, when all tax-exempt bonds issued by the city of Detroit were eliminated, and all bonds issued by the city of Detroit were taxable. Mr. Lutz estimated that the additional interest cost on the $1,000 valuation per taxpayer would be $2.10 which, added to the $27.90 rate, would make the rate $30 instead of $27.90. That is my understanding of his estimate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the Senator question that estimate?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; I do.

Mr. AUSTIN. Before I sit down I wish to say that I do not think the Senator is quite just to Mr. Lutz, and I think he has created an erroneous impression. Mr. Lutz is not the only expert who testified. There were other professors. I understood the Senator from Michigan to claim that Mr. Lutz was the only professor who testified to the additional burden of taxation.

Mr. BROWN. I did not say that. I said I understood Mr. Lutz was the only man from the teaching profession, economist, so-called, who came here and opposed the general proposition which I am advocating today.

Mr. AUSTIN. Did not Professor Buehler, of the University of Vermont, come also?

Mr. BROWN. If he did, it escaped my notice.

Mr. AUSTIN. How about Professor Logan, of the University of Pennsylvania?

Mr. BROWN. I looked over the index of witnesses who testified, and I based my statement upon that. I was not paying attention to telegrams, and things of that sort, but I was talking about testimony.

Mr. AUSTIN. At the Senate committee hearings did not Prof. William J. Schultz, of the College of the City of New York, testify and state:

As study of the estates of rich decedents shows, our wealthy men still keep the major part of their wealth in junior issues. Tax-exempt bonds never gave anyone control over an enterprise. And the power and opportunities for capital gain that inhere in common stocks are not to be surrendered lightly—even for a substantial tax saving.

Does the Senator recall that?

Mr. BROWN. I did not say that none of these professors made any statements which the Senator from Vermont has used in the advocacy of his position, but I do say that Professor Schultz positively asserted that taxation exemption in Government securities should be ended.

Mr. AUSTIN. What about the testimony of Mr. Magill, former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury? Did he not say that there was no inducement of financial character in entering upon this road? Does the Senator understand that that was his position?

Mr. BROWN. Professor Magill took the trouble to write and have inserted in the RECORD, the pages of which I do not have before me now, his statement that he was in favor of the general proposition which I am advocating here today, and my general statement is that I know of no witness other than Professor Lutz, from the teaching profession, who did not take the position that I am taking here now.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I should like to respond for a moment.

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator is overlooking the fact that the $30, I think, which Professor Lutz says we shall have to pay in our States on account of this tax, this right of the Federal Government to tax our bonds, is a capital levy, not based on ability to pay. The farmer pays it on his timber, whether he sells the timber or not.

That is enough for that. I am not disposed to resolve this question according to what the economists say, mainly because the economists never agree.

Mr. BROWN. They agreed pretty well in this case.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the Senator from Vermont disagrees with the Senator from Michigan as to that. I do not know. But I wish to point out another fact. The Federal Government has now employed 12,000 economists.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator cannot blame that on me. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. But there they are.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator has the same responsibility in that respect that I have.

Mr. BAILEY. We would have been just as well off if we had employed 12,000 auditors, so far as any light on this question is concerned. This question is not one for economists. It is a great, profound question of sovereignties in this country, and the consequence of the Federal power to tax the State or city bonds, as well as the right of the State or city to tax the Federal bonds. That is a question, I think, that we as Senators may be able ourselves to think about, especially in view of the fact that we have some 12,000 economists in the Government, and if they have ever given us any economic light upon which the Senate could rely I do not know what it is.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not desire to take the time of the Senator to read Mr. Magill's testimony, but I wish to call attention to the yellow book entitled, "A Legal Defense of the Continued Integrity of the Fiscal Powers of the States," by the attorneys general of the States and counsel for certain of their municipal subdivisions, at page 263, and I should like to have inserted in the RECORD therefrom Mr. Magill's testimony on the proposition that he favored the constitutional method as distinguished from the legislative method in order to bring the income from State and municipal bonds within the income-tax law. I ask unanimous consent to have that extract inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

4. Tax-exempt interest: The subcommittee attempted to find some way whereby the interest on future issues of Federal, State, and municipal securities could be subjected to the income tax. It was agreed that effective action should be taken as promptly as possible to eliminate tax exemptions for the future. A good deal of attention was directed to the proposal made by Senator CARTER GLASS, then Secretary of the Treasury, that the interest on Federal, State, and municipal securities should be taken into account in determining the rates of tax applicable to the taxpayer's income from other sources. The subcommittee concluded, however, that the validity of a statutory provision of this character was very doubtful in the light of the reasoning in the line of Supreme Court decisions culminating in Fox v. Dravo Contracting Company (301 U. S. 665); and that it would be best to make the change by constitutional amendment rather than by a statute.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the insertion just requested by the Senator from Vermont there be inserted a short statement from John P. Wenchel, Chief Counsel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, contained in the hearings before our special committee, setting forth a letter from former Under Secretary Magill.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection. I do not know what that is.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF JOHN PHILIP WENCHEL, CHIEF COUNSEL, BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

Mr. WENCHEL. This committee has been most generous in listening to the arguments presented by the many persons appearing before it. I am fully aware that you are desirous of hastening your executive study and consideration of the material presented. I shall therefore endeavor to be as expeditious as possible.

In the legal brief filed with this committee by the States—the so-called Yellow Book—and in the arguments of some of the States' representatives, it has been stated that as late as last year the Treasury Department was of the opinion that a constitutional amendment is the only effective method of subjecting to income tax public salaries and income from public securities. This position, it is claimed, was registered through certain statements of former Under Secretary Magill. In order that the committee have the benefit of all the facts and circumstances incident to the making of those statements by Mr. Magill, I offer for the record the following correspondence. I wrote to Dr. Magill and asked him what his position in the matter was, my letter being as follows:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 11, 1939.

"Dr. ROSWELL MAGILL,

"35 Claremont Avenue, New York, N. Y.

"DEAR DR. MAGILL: Following our conversation this morning, I am transmitting you a copy of the so-called Yellow Book on the constitutional immunity of State and municipal securities, filed by the attorneys general of the States, and counsel for certain of their municipal subdivisions, before the Brown committee. Your attention is called to certain statements attributed to you as to the need for a constitutional amendment to eliminate tax immunity. These statements appear on pages 362, 363, and 364.

"I shall be greatly obliged to you if you will reexamine these statements and advise me whether in the light of the Gerhardt decision you are still of the opinion expressed in these statements.

"Sincerely yours,

"J. P. WENCHEL, Chief Counsel."

His reply is to this effect:

"COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY, SCHOOL OF LAW,
"February 14, 1939.

"DEAR MR. WENCHEL: You have asked me to give you a statement of my views regarding the proposed statute to end intergovernmental tax exemptions.

"I have always believed that the sixteenth amendment was intended to mean, and did mean, what it says—that income from any source whatever should be subject to tax. Dicta in the earlier Supreme Court decisions, however, indicated that the amendment did not enlarge the taxing power. I urged privately and officially that the Gerhardt case should be taken to the Supreme Court, in order to determine directly whether the present membership of the Court adhered to the earlier dicta. The decision itself and the reasoning whereby the decision is reached, are strong encouragements to the belief that the Court will now uphold the constitutionality of a statute subjecting the future salaries of State and municipal officials and the interest on future issues of State and municipal securities to the Federal income tax. I hope that such a statute will be passed.

"Sincerely yours,

"ROSWELL MAGILL."

THE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I had intended to devote this hour to the argument of the question upon the economic side, but the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and many other Senators have, I think, brought out the facts pretty well in our behalf, and I think I could pass on at least to the start of the constitutional arguments involved. I am sorry the Senator from Vermont devoted all his time to the immunity rule. The Senator has an hour, I understand, later on, when he can discuss the matter further; and do I understand that he will then discuss the application of the sixteenth amendment to this proposition?

Mr. AUSTIN. It is my intention to do so.

Mr. BROWN. I feel that I should devote the remaining 15 minutes I have at least to a preliminary discussion of that proposition, particularly in answer to what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] has said.

Of course, the Senator concedes that the people of the United States have a right to change a rule whether it be statutory or constitutional. I do not for one moment concede that the immunity rule defeats the amendment; in other words, that the amendment is unconstitutional because of the immunity rule. That matter I leave with the argument which we placed in the RECORD last Friday, which, I think, if this matter ever reaches the courts, would be considered in a determination of the legal question involved. But I say to the Senator from North Carolina that if the people of the United States felt that the application of immunity rule to a bond-tax proposal was wrong, if they felt that the principle which he has adverted to here should no longer rule in the United States, they had a right to change it, and it is my contention that they did change the rule.

As early as 1861 the Congress of the United States laid a tax upon the income from municipal bonds. In the first income tax we ever levied we provided that a tax should be laid upon—

> Income from any kind of property, from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States, or from any other source whatever.

The rates were increased in 1862, doubtless to carry on the financing of the Civil War, and there was written into the statute law of the United States again the phrase that income was to be taxed—

> From all kinds of property, rents, dividends, salaries, or from any other source whatever.

In 1864 the rates were again increased, and taxation was levied upon incomes from practically all sources by name—

> Rents, interest, dividends, salaries, income from profession, trade, employment, or vocation, or from any other source whatever.

In 1865 the law was again amended, the rates increased, and taxation levied upon—

> Income from any source whatever.

In 1867 and in 1870 the rates were again increased, and incomes were taxed upon—

> Any source of income whatever.

I am emphasizing the phrase which appeared in each one of these statutes—

> Income derived from any source whatever.

In 1894 we again passed an income-tax law, and an income tax was levied upon all forms of income except the income received by judges. That was done because of the decision in Collector against Day, in which it was said that the immunity rule prevented the taxation of State judges.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Marking the time so distinctly brings the point out very clearly, and I am glad the Senator has done so. His last date preceding 1873, I think, was 1867. Is that correct?

Mr. BROWN. March 7, 1867.

Mr. AUSTIN. I call attention to the fact that the United States Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Railroad Co. (17 Wall. 322) in 1873 held that the Federal Government is forbidden to tax income on bonds owned by the city.

The Senator referred to the date of 1894. That immediately preceded the case of Pollock v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S. 429; 158 U. S. 601), which was decided in 1895. State and municipal bonds were held to be immune from Federal income tax, and the income tax on the source of invested capital was held to be a direct tax, requiring apportionment. The tax on income from other sources was held not to require apportionment.

That probably can be accepted as the law, being the decision of the highest court of the land.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator merely states a fact which I was about to state. After Collector against Day, which was decided in the seventies, when the next income tax was levied, which was in 1894, in deference to Collector against Day, the salaries of judges were expressly excepted; but the 1894 act—which, as the Senator said, was the basis of the Pollock case, which will be the subject of considerable discussion—specifically laid a tax upon income of all kinds, with the one exception I have mentioned, including a tax upon the bonds of municipalities. There was no question in the mind of anyone who had anything to do with the enactment of the act of 1894 that a tax was to be levied upon the income from bonds. That was the subject of extended discussion which resulted in the decision in the Pollock case. I may say that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that when the 1894 act came before the Senate, Senator Hill, of New York, offered an amendment expressly exempting municipal bonds from the provisions of the 1894 act, and the Senate rejected that amendment. So there can be no question about the fact that in 1894 the Senate knew that it was levying a tax upon bonds, although it was not expressly so stated in the statute.

We come back to the proposition that that tax was levied in the same language to which I have repeatedly referred. It was levied under authority of the language "or from any source whatever." I cannot overemphasize the fact that in the six statutes, every one of which contained the phrase "or from any source whatever," a tax upon the income or interest from municipal bonds was levied by the Treasury Department, was paid by the people of the United States, and was recognized by the Senate, in view of the Hill amendment and its defeat, to which I have referred, as the basis for the tax upon municipal bonds. The importance of that phrase will appear very shortly.

Mr. Pollock was a stockholder in the Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., of the city of New York. The Bureau of Internal Revenue proposed to levy an income tax on the income earned by that bank. Mr. Pollock attacked the tax. He brought a suit for the purpose of preventing the corporation from paying the tax on the ground that it was illegal under the so-called immunity rule, also upon the ground that an income tax violated the provision in the Constitution which required that the tax, being a direct tax, be apportioned on a per capita basis.

There can be no question that the Pollock case had in it these two issues, among others: First, could the United States Government levy a tax upon the income from a municipal bond? Second, could the United States levy a tax which was not apportioned on a per capita basis according to population throughout the United States, as the Constitution provided?

The Pollock case was decided upon both propositions. It was before the Supreme Court twice, the second time upon rehearing, because on some of the issues in the first case the Court divided 4 to 4.

Mr. President, I wish to demonstrate to Senators who do me the honor of listening to me that the Pollock case was decided expressly upon the proposition that no constitutional power existed in the Congress to tax the income from a municipal bond, because such a tax was in violation of the immunity rule which stemmed from McCulloch against Maryland. All students of the Pollock case down to very recent times—and it was one of the most important cases decided in the history of the United States—have laid great emphasis upon the other side of the question, the apportionment issue, and the Court itself laid great emphasis upon that proposition; but in the majority opinion Mr. Justice Fuller said—and I am quoting his exact language—

> While as to the income from municipal bonds, that could not be taxed because of want of power to tax the source.

I wish to make it plain, and I repeat, that the Pollock case was not decided, as many Senators in subsequent debate in the Senate stated, upon the apportionment question alone. It was decided upon the proposition that the Federal Government had no power to tax the income from a municipal bond, because such a tax was a tax upon the bond itself and was thereby in violation of the immunity rule, which, stated briefly, is that one sovereignty shall not lay a tax upon the other.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Upon that point the Court was unanimous. There was no difference of opinion on that question.

Mr. BROWN. I am not sure as to that detail.

Mr. ADAMS. I am quite sure.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chief Justice Fuller decided that question.

Mr. ADAMS. One of the judges in his opinion referred to the fact that the opinion was unanimous on that point.

Mr. BROWN. I am very happy to concede that point, if I may do so, because it strengthens the position I am about to take.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to ask the Senator's view about the Pollock case in this respect: Does the Senator hold the view that the Pollock case allowed the Federal Government to tax certain things without apportionment, and did not allow the Federal Government to tax certain things at all, and that it was the element of the Pollock case which provoked the subsequent action on the sixteenth amendment? That is to say, did the Pollock case allow the Federal Government to tax without apportionment income from the source of salaries or offices, but not from the source of real or personal property; and are the words "from whatever source derived" intended to eliminate the need for apportionment as between the two types of tax?

Mr. BROWN. I will answer the Senator by asking him a question. Has he read the briefs in the Pollock case?

Mr. AUSTIN. No.

Mr. BROWN. I have read the briefs in the Pollock case. They are set forth in outline manner in the Supreme Court report itself. There were two principal grounds of attack: First, that the income-tax law of 1894 violated the rule of apportionment, the necessity of basing the tax on a per capita basis; second, that it violated the immunity rule by taxing the interest on bond issues of another sovereign in our form of government.

In direct answer to the Senator from Vermont, I say that the Court held, first, that the tax was not valid because it was not apportioned on a per capita basis. It also held that the tax was not valid because, insofar as the municipal bonds were concerned, it was a tax upon the source. On that proposition, if that is the answer the Senator desires from me, of course, the tax on municipal bonds was unconstitutional, in the opinion of the Court, on both bases, first, because of the immunity rule and, second, because the tax was not apportioned.

Does that give the Senator the answer he desires?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not think so. I understand that there were five principal issues before the Supreme Court in that case, and that the Supreme Court passed upon only two of those issues. One of the issues was passed upon directly, and that was the subject of the taxation of the interest on bonds of municipalities and States.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is correct about that. It directly passed upon the question of the immunity rule, and stated that municipal bonds could not be taxed because such taxation was in violation of the rule laid down in McCulloch against Maryland, in violation of the immunity rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the pending resolution, Senate Resolution 293, under the precedents, will be placed on the calendar, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I desire to state briefly my position in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]. I have been urging for many years that the issuance of tax-exempt bonds be stopped. I have introduced measures to that effect, session after session. I do not believe there is any substantial question as to the basic soundness of the proposal. The objections come from those who want to use tax-exempt bonds to escape paying income taxes and from those who believe that the immediate result would be, as it would be, to increase the rate of interest the Government, and also State and municipalities, will have to pay. Personally, I am not certain that would be an unmixed evil. I think entirely too much of the capital of the country is being invested in tax-exempt bonds, not enough in private industry.

To those who object to Government in business, I think the Senator from Michigan gave an excellent reason Saturday why they should support this amendment. He pointed out, on page 12189 of the RECORD, that to a man with $500,000 income, a 3-percent tax-exempt Government bond yields the same income as a corporation bond bearing 10.7 percent. In other words, tax-exempt bonds stand in the way of private investments in industry.

Let me remind the Senate that this measure certainly is not partisan in character. In January 1939, President Roosevelt sent a message to Congress urging this action. He stated the case very clearly, I thought, when he said:

> A fair and effective progressive income tax and a huge perpetual reserve of tax-exempt bonds could not exist side by side.

I call attention also to the fact that the No. 1 tax recommendation of the Republican program committee headed by the late Dr. Glenn Frank was this:

> Elimination of all tax exemptions of future issues of Federal, State, and municipal securities.

I believe it to be true that every President since Woodrow Wilson, and every Secretary of the Treasury since CARTER GLASS, of Virginia, have pointed out the inconsistency, the injustice, and the futility of levying a steeply graduated income tax and at the same time continuing to sell tax-exempt bonds to wealthy investors who want to escape the high taxes. Secretaries Glass, Houston, and Morgenthau, Democrats, took this position. So did Secretaries Andrew W. Mellon and Ogden Mills, Republicans.

I shall support the pending amendment. It should have been made the law of the land long ago. I sincerely trust the Senate will adopt it, and that the conference committee will keep it in the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I inquire if the Senator from Michigan desires to proceed further at this time?

Mr. BROWN. I do not. I feel I am getting to the real meat of my discussion, and I should very much prefer to yield the floor, if I have it, and make the remainder of my argument later in the day, after the Senator from Vermont shall have discussed the question.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the Senator from Georgia desires to speak for a few minutes.

Mr. BROWN. I do not understand that I have the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. I know the Senator does not have it, but I asked if he desired to continue his discussion at this time. I wish to say a few words generally on the pending bill, and on the contrary theory which has been presented as the method of computing excess profits, namely, the Excess Profits Tax Act of 1921.

There is no opposition to a true excess-profits tax. All of us who have the welfare of our country and the success of the national-defense program at heart recognize that such a tax must be made a temporary part of our revenue system. However, we also recognize that an excess-profits tax is an extremely delicate device. It can have consequences diametrically opposed to those desired and intended. The utmost care is necessary if it is to serve its true function, if contrary consequences are to be avoided.

For over 10 weeks the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Senate Committee on Finance have been engaged in an effort to frame a true excess-profits tax. This effort has been directed in large part to a correction of the innumerable defects of the excess-profits tax which was previously a part of our revenue system.

The foremost indefensible feature of the invested-capital method of computing excess profits alone, such as was carried in the acts of 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1921, is that it rejects all past experience as an alternative measure of normal profits and offers a flat 8-percent return on invested capital as the sole standard.

The difference of opinion lies not in any disagreement as to the inadequacy of the invested-capital method as a sole measure of normal earnings. It is quite frankly conceded that the result of the single invested-capital method will be to apply the extraordinary excess-profits rates in many cases to corporate profits arising from normal business in no way attributable, either directly or indirectly, to the national-defense program. Indeed, the application of the tax on such profits is openly advocated upon the ground that thereby competitive conditions in the field of corporate activity will be more nearly equalized.

This principle, Mr. President, from whatever source it may arise, carried to its logical conclusion, leads inevitably to the assertion of the doctrine of which we have sometimes heard, of the division of wealth in America.

The purpose of the excess profits tax provision of this bill, as I understand it and as I firmly believe it should be, is to prevent the creation of "war millionaires," or better, "national-defense millionaires," to prevent profiteering and runaway prices, and to make our national-defense program pay for itself, insofar as possible, out of the increase in profits which it will bring about without stifling normal business activity, from which the bulk of our revenues must be raised through the normal taxing procedure. The excessive spending due to the national-defense program should be the means of restoring prosperity in this country, and it may be the avenue through which we can take up unemployment in the country. But that can be true only if we meet the situation wisely so far as our tax measures are concerned.

Mr. President, the proposed excess-profits tax must be limited to this purpose and normal corporate profits must be exempted therefrom. Unless this be accomplished we will not discourage price increases and profiteering, but will invite them; we will not stimulate private investment, but will destroy it; we will not foster normal business activities, but will depress them; we will not hold out opportunity to our young people, but will only offer them more years of depression; we will not facilitate the defense program, but will jeopardize it.

No matter how heavily we may tax the profits derived from the defense program we know full well that it cannot pay for itself nor can the taxes on defense profits be made to pay the ordinary expenses of our Government. We cannot permanently solve the problem by borrowing, even by forced borrowing. The limit would inevitably be reached, with inflation or repudiation the consequences. If we are to close the gap between our expenditures and receipts, as we must, the national income from normal activities must be increased and we must adopt tax policies which will produce this result.

The extensive hearings before the two committees of Congress stand as conclusive proof of the fact that adoption of the single test of return on invested capital would fail in innumerable cases as a measure of normal profits and would result in serious inequities and hardships.

The profits earned by American business do not depend solely on capital, solely on the investment of money or property in enterprise, nor do they increase or decrease in proportion to increase or decrease in such investment. They depend in large measure on the energy, the imagination, the ingenuity, the courage, the perseverance, the skill, the unremitting effort, and hard work, and the honestly attained reputation of individuals.

This is particularly true in the case of small or relatively new concerns; of 75 percent, perhaps, of all American corporations.

In the opinion of both the House and Senate committees, the invested-capital method does not represent an adequate measure of normal profits when these important earning factors predominate over invested capital. They have, therefore, recommended the alternative average-earnings test as the most effective solution of this problem. It is their opinion that the American citizen should at least be entitled to earnings equal to his average earnings during a period antedating the inauguration of the defense program before the drastic excess profits tax rates apply. Thus, the average-earnings and invested-capital methods do not represent two opposing theories of excess-profits taxation. On the contrary, they are component parts of a fundamental policy, and a policy, I may say, which must be still further relieved by general exception or general relief provisions if we are not to work intolerable hardship, if not destruction, upon many types of business in our country. That policy is to impose a true excess-profits tax, to prevent excess profits, and concurrently to permit normal profits. This policy demands realistic measures of normal profits which will apply equally and fairly to all.

It is said that the alternative method of the bill will perpetuate monopolistic corporations in their monopolies. Exactly the contrary is true. By eliminating the average-earnings method, we would impose on the little-business man, trying to match his energies and abilities against the large capital of his old-established rival, a burden which would make it impossible for him to gain ground on that rival, to compete successfully with him, or to grow and become likewise an established business. The invested capital of the old-established business usually represents the accumulated earnings of the past. If a heavy burden is to be placed on new businesses so that they cannot accumulate capital themselves, how can they ever compete successfully with the old? This means the perpetuation of monopoly.

It is insisted that the invested-capital method only—that is, used as a single method of computing the excess-profits tax—recognizes the sound principle of ability to pay. On the contrary, the single method advanced is a complete departure from that principle. It would impose taxes upon a basis which has no relation whatever to ability to pay, except a possible political relation, easily stated, but not at all understandable when one is seeking the truth.

The burden of a tax measured by invested capital would be relatively easy for the large corporation to bear. The smaller corporation, however, would find itself shackled by the imposition of burdens out of all proportion to its ability to bear them.

I quite agree with the testimony of the members of the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense. It is of utmost importance to prevent improper price increases. Uncontrolled spiraling prices were one of the consequences of the last war. It must be admitted that our old excess-profits taxes contributed during the World War to inflationary price increases. A true excess-profits tax will assist in controlling, and will be designed to discourage improper price increases.

We believe that increased prices to consumers will create more damage, more loss of purchasing power, more suffering to the people of this country than can be or should be compensated for by whatever additional revenues, if any, will flow into the Treasury from unsound tax policies.

Perfection is not claimed for the amendments recommended by the committee. No one would have hoped to produce a perfect bill in the time available, assuming that a perfect excess-profits tax can ever be drafted. I do claim, however, that the bill, as reported by the Committee on Finance, with certain exceptions, is immeasurably better than a reenactment of the thoroughly discredited excess-profits laws of 1917 to 1922.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I thought the Senator was about through. In the Senator's time, before he takes his seat, I desire to put something in the RECORD.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be happy to have the Senator do so.

In the most generally accepted sense, the taxes which will result from the House bill and from the Senate bill, as it now stands, must be said to arise not from excess profits but from normal profits, since those taxes, which are in most instances material, result from net profit—after normal taxes—of no more than the particular corporation has already enjoyed during the base or normal period. As corporations begin to earn real excess profits, in excess of what they have enjoyed in the past, the taxes payable under either bill will greatly increase. In fact, 51.55 percent of every dollar of increased income after normal taxes would be taken away under the Senate bill as it now stands, and from 45 to 54.1 percent would be taken away under the House bill as it originally stood. I believe those figures to be approximately correct only.

Two of the principal discriminations eliminated from the bill, as it passed the House and came to the Senate, are the 4.1 percent of normal-tax income imposed by the House bill upon prior-earnings corporations, and the variable rate between the two elective bases. These two discriminations alone would have placed upon the prior-earnings corporations—that is to say, corporations taking their prior earnings as the base for computing the excess-profits tax—a disadvantage of at least 10 percent. Even though these two glaring discriminations have been eliminated, the ratio of taxes to earnings is still materially higher in the case of past-earnings companies than in the case of invested-capital companies.

It has been said by some that invested capital alone should be used as a base in order to place a floor upon all profits, whether normal or abnormal. Brushing aside the pregnant question as to whether or not this is a proper American objective, brief consideration will show that the method proposed is viciously unfair, even if the objective were desirable. The proposal entirely loses sight of the simple fact that the concept of invested capital, particularly when it does not provide for a fair present valuation of intangible assets, is completely at variance with the facts as we find them.

With the possible exception of comparatively new corporations, the individuals who today own our American corporations are of quite different identity from those who originally organized them. In almost every instance the present owners paid quite a different sum, either more or less, for their interest than their predecessors originally put up. A mere glance at the facts shows that the stock of many corporations is today worth many times their invested capital, and vice versa. Therefore a tax rested solely on invested capital would permit one individual owner of stock to earn a high percentage of the price he paid for his stock, whereas another could earn but a pittance on his actual investment.

To cite just two examples out of many—and I use these examples not for the purpose of raising an invidious comparison—the invested capital of the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. on December 31, 1939, was approximately $177,000,000, and the market value of its stock on the same date was only approximately $90,000,000, whereas on the same date the invested capital of the Air Reduction Co. was about $40,000,000 and the market value of its stock was about $146,000,000.

Therefore, if only invested capital were used, and an 8-percent return permitted, as in the Senate bill, a stockholder in Youngstown Steel & Tube could earn almost 16 percent on his actual money investment, whereas a stockholder in Air Reduction could earn only slightly more than 2 percent on his investment. Bear in mind that these examples are typical, are taken at random, and by no means represent abnormal situations. It must, therefore, appear to every reasonable man favorable to the American system of free enterprise that the elective base is vitally necessary.

Mr. President, if I may add a word, under the invested-capital method or rule the largest corporations in the United States, which will profit most directly from the national-defense program, will pay no excess-profits taxes whatever during this year and during next year. The railroads of the country, which will profit, will not, by virtue of their large invested capital, pay any excess-profits tax. The United States Steel Corporation will pay no excess-profits taxes, and so on. But the little corporations, in which men with limited capital have matched their energy and their courage against vast concentrations of wealth and have proposed to fight it out in the struggle to live, will pay tremendously high excess-profits taxes.

There appeared before the committee the Honorable William S. Knudsen, not to give the views of the National Defense Council upon the question of excess-profits taxes, but to give his own personal views, and they are stated so simply, out of the abundant experience of a businessman, so directly, so clearly, that I think I should conclude with a quotation from his testimony. He said:

> I assume that you intend this to be an excess profits tax law, as its name implies. That seems to me to mean a tax on the excess profits which may flow to various companies directly or indirectly as a result of the defense program. Consequently it seems fair that this should be a tax on earnings above their normal past record and not a tax based solely or largely on earnings above some arbitrary percent or standard. I do not think a penalty tax should be imposed on normal earnings.

Mr. President, in that brief statement Mr. Knudsen, out of the abundance of his rich experience as a man of action, has summed up the whole case for the basic theory upon which the pending bill is written.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator from Georgia for his generosity in giving me a few moments of his time.

I wish to have the RECORD contain a computation and opinion which I received this morning from a man whose judgment I consider worthy of reliance, and who has been named here under what I think are misleading circumstances. I refer to Harley L. Lutz, professor of public finance of Princeton University, who made a report for the comptroller of the State of New York, Hon. Morris S. Tremaine, on the fiscal and economic aspects of the taxation of public securities. This report I have in my hand, and Senators can observe that it is a substantial volume. It was submitted to the Congress of the United States by the comptroller of the State of New York through our special committee, and I assume that no one in the Senate except the members of the committee has read it.

The subject of financing national defense, of course, is of the greatest importance at the present time. Therefore I desired to ascertain the view of this expert on the effect of the pending amendment on the financing of national defense. This morning I received from him a memorandum from which I read the following:

The effect of subjecting national-defense bonds to Federal taxation will be to increase the effective interest cost of such borrowing by approximately $6 to $7 per $1,000 annually. An increase of $6 per $1,000 for interest means $6,000,000 annually per billion dollars. The total defense borrowing cannot now be predicted, but if it should be $20,000,000,000, the total annual increase in interest cost would be $120,000,000.

I ask unanimous consent that the memorandum be printed at this point in full.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The effect of subjecting national-defense bonds to Federal taxation will be to increase the effective interest cost of such borrowing by approximately $6 to $7 per $1,000 annually. An increase of $6 per $1,000 for interest means $6,000,000 annually per billion dollars. The total defense borrowing cannot now be predicted, but if it should be $20,000,000,000, the total annual increase in interest cost would be $120,000,000.

The taxation of the interest paid on these bonds will produce less in revenue than is paid in added cost. No precise estimate is made of the excess of cost over revenue.

The process of arriving at these conclusions is as follows:

(1) The average yield of long-term Treasury bonds, January–July 1940, equals 2.30 percent.

(2) Considering simply the corporate investors, since they hold the major portion of the Federal paper, we assume that they would want to buy the new taxable issues on a basis that would yield about the same net return as they now get on outstanding issues. The large supply of nontaxable bonds available will meet their needs and render the more likely a price differential against the defense bonds which reflects the tax.

(3) The rate of ordinary corporation tax, as proposed by the Senate Finance Committee, is to be 24 percent. In order to obtain a yield of 2.30 percent after a Federal tax of 24 percent, corporate investors would need to figure on a yield basis, before taxes, of approximately 3 percent.

(4) This is equal to a rise of 70 points in the yield rate as a result of the tax. It means added interest cost, in the case of long-term bonds of $7 per $1,000.

(5) To be conservative in this estimate, let us take added interest cost of $6 per $1,000. This equals an added cost of $6,000,000 per billion of debt. If the defense program results in total new taxable debt of $20,000,000,000, the added interest cost resulting from the tax will be $120,000,000 annually.

(6) The added Federal revenue will not equal this cost for these reasons:

(a) In any year many corporations will have no net income. In 1937, there were 192,028 corporations reporting net income, and 285,810 corporations reporting no net income. Those with no net income had 22 percent of the total Federal interest reported as subject to excess-profits tax. Had this plan been in effect in 1937, about one-fifth of the interest paid would not have been taxable because of corporate deficits.

(b) Some classes of corporate investors are exempt from Federal-income tax, notably mutual savings banks.

(c) Some of the defense bonds will be acquired by Federal agencies paying no taxes.

(7) None of the cases cited above (i. e., corporations incurring deficits, exempt institutions or Federal agencies) can afford, however, to buy the taxable bonds except at a price which will protect them against the tax. Any given corporation may be in the red this year, but it may have a taxable profit next year. The exempt institutions know that their exemption can be withdrawn at any time. Even the Federal agencies dare not disregard the market, for they may need to realize cash by selling their holdings, and if they should disregard the market situation in buying the bonds, they are likely to take a loss in selling them.

(8) The conclusion is that Federal interest cost will rise by more than the amount of the revenue gain to be expected. No estimate is given of this difference, but it will be enough to be worth thinking about.

(9) It would be possible, assuming that the market would go along, to save somewhat on interest costs by issuing large amounts of Treasury notes, which, because of their short maturity, are on a lower-yield basis than the long-term bonds.

This would be very dangerous. The buyer of Treasury notes accepts a lower yield because the short maturity keeps him closer to a liquid basis. By the same reasoning, the Treasury bill yields almost nothing at all, but its holders are never more than 90 days away from complete liquidity.

If the Treasury were to try to float the entire defense loans on a Treasury-note basis, the preferred position which the notes now enjoy would disappear. Higher coupon rates would be inevitable, for the great increase in short-term maturities would present serious refunding problems before the emergency had passed. Hence, while the Treasury notes may be increased somewhat, no material saving in interest cost is likely to occur by this means.

(10) The maturity schedule of the Federal debt should be considered by those who want to make Federal borrowing more difficult at this time.

As of July 31, 1940, there were fixed maturities, exclusive of Treasury bills, as follows:

1940 Treasury notes	$737,000,000
1941 Treasury notes	1,385,000,000
1941 Treasury bonds	834,000,000
Total fixed maturities to Dec. 31, 1941	2,956,000,000

The market must absorb the refinancing of this total by the end of 1941, in addition to the defense issues. To the end of 1943 this total of fixed maturities will be increased by $2,329,000,000, making a grand total of $5,285,000,000. (See Bulletin of the Treasury Department, August 1940, p. 21.)

The refinancing of $5,285,000,000 of tax-exempt bonds, in a period when the Treasury must put out many billions of taxable bonds, will produce a complicated, if not a chaotic, situation in the market. The result will be, possibly, even worse from the standpoint of the effect on the coupon rates and yield basis of the taxable bonds that has been suggested above.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a few days ago, following the President's message, taking into consideration the necessity of legislation on the social-security features of the tax law in reference to the war, and also with reference to legislation affecting the action of the Railroad Retirement Board and legislation affecting veterans, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] offered an amendment which he intended to make so broad as to get the matter in conference, where we could call in the representatives of the departments and have adequate legislation written. We adopted the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan, but we find that it is not quite broad enough to cover the matter. Therefore, the draftsmen have drafted an amendment, which I shall offer on behalf of the Senator from Michigan as a substitute for his amendment, which would broaden the provisions of the bill and enable us to look into the whole subject. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the Senator's amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, the vote is reconsidered, and the clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi on behalf of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment previously adopted.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

The President is hereby authorized to establish a system of allotments and allowances for the dependents of persons serving in the land or naval forces of the United States, to provide a modified system of insurance for persons serving in such land or naval forces, to provide unemployment allowances for such persons upon termination of their service, to preserve and modify benefit rights of such persons under the Social Security Act, as amended, and the Railroad Retirement Act, as amended. The President is authorized to call upon such agencies of the Federal, State, or local government as may be necessary to carry out the administration of such programs. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out such program. Any law or laws in conflict with Executive orders issued under the authority of this section shall be repealed or modified to the extent of such conflict.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from Michigan is not present. Is he familiar with the proposed amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. I am sure he is, because I discussed the matter with him. If he shall have any objection in the world, I shall ask for reconsideration of the vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Very well.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to propound an inquiry for his own information. Does the proposed amendment supplement existing law dealing with social security?

Mr. HARRISON. It carries out the suggestion made in the President's message a few days ago that Congress take such steps that while the boys are off in war, if war should come, they can be provided for through the appropriate legislative enactments.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi in the nature of a substitute for the amendment heretofore presented by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I wish to offer two other amendments, so that they may go to conference. They are merely offered for clarification, and also in order that the conferees may have the whole subject before them.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendments.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 88, after line 11, and before line 12, it is proposed to insert:

(F) Recoveries of bad debts: There shall be excluded income attributable to the recovery of a bad debt if a deduction with reference to such debt was allowable from gross income for any taxable year prior to January 1, 1940.

On page 91, after line 4, and before line 5, it is proposed to insert:

(I) Recoveries of bad debts: There shall be excluded income attributable to the recovery of a bad debt if a deduction with reference to such debt was allowable from gross income for any taxable year prior to January 1, 1940.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have the amendments acted on together?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. I first ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment of the committee was agreed to be reconsidered.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered. The question now is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I send another amendment to the desk which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the period in line 8, on page 102, in the amendment of the committee, it is proposed to insert the following:

The Commissioner may, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, permit in the computation of invested capital, the use of averages or ratios on a monthly, annual, or other appropriate basis, where in his opinion the circumstances do not require daily computations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING] has an amendment which he wishes to offer.

Mr. HERRING. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 106, before the period in line 16, it is proposed to insert a comma and the following:

Plus, in the case of a taxpayer having a contract (made before the expiration of 30 days after the date of the enactment of the Second Revenue Act of 1940) with a foreign government to furnish articles, materials, or supplies to such foreign government, if such contract provides for advance payment and for repayment by the vendor of any part of such advance payment upon cancelation of the contract by such foreign government, the amount which would be required to be so repaid if cancelation occurred at the beginning of such day.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to is reconsidered for the purpose of permitting the Senator from Iowa to offer the amendment.

Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the committee amendment is agreed to.

Without objection, the committee amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has no further clarifying amendments to offer, I should like to offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair inquire whether that relates to the committee amendment?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; it does. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to be reconsidered for the purpose of offering this amendment. But there is another amendment which I wish to offer to the same title.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 88, line 11, it is proposed to strike out the period and to insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "and", and the following new paragraph:

(F) Awards of the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany: There shall be excluded amounts received pursuant to an award of a Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, in respect of claims for loss or damage to persons or property sustained prior to November 11, 1918.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to is reconsidered for the purpose of permitting the Senator from Georgia to offer the amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. While this is covered in the general relief provision found on page 109 of the bill, section 721, I believe it is, nevertheless certain Senators, especially the distinguished senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], now absent on account of the death of the late Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Honorable William B. Bankhead, desire to have this amendment inserted in the bill. Since we have inserted one other specific amendment or relief provision very similar to it, there would seem to be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say that it was my belief that the matter referred to by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] was amply covered by the relief section of the bill. If it is felt that a specific provision should be written in, as desired by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], then I feel that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] should be adopted.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the committee amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I offer one other amendment, which I should like to explain.

Both the House bill and the committee amendment provide that taxpayers who choose the invested-capital method of computing their tax will not be taxed on any part of the dividends they receive from other corporations.

This provision seems eminently fair, since dividends from domestic corporations represent earnings which have been subjected to tax in the hands of the paying corporation, and dividends from foreign corporations represent earnings which have been subjected to tax in the country in which they are earned.

However, both the House bill and the committee amendment impose the excess-profits tax on 15 percent of domestic dividends and 100 percent of foreign dividends received by taxpayers who choose the average-earnings method. This is obviously an unfair discrimination, for which there is no justification whatever.

The proposed amendment, while it is in three parts, and should be inserted in three separate sections of the bill, excludes all dividends from the computation of income, both in the base period and in the taxable year, in cases where the average-earning method is selected.

Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be stated.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 88, after line 11, it is proposed to insert the following:

"(F) Dividends received: The credit for dividends received shall apply, without limitation, to dividends on stock of all corporations, except dividends (actual or constructive) on stock of foreign personal-holding companies."

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I offer a further amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 94, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

(H) Dividends received: The credit for dividends received shall apply, without limitation, to dividends on stock of all corporations, except dividends (actual or constructive) on stock of foreign personal holding companies.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I offer another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 101 it is proposed to substitute for paragraph (B), being lines 8 to 13, inclusive, the following:

(B) The aggregate of the adjusted basis (for determining loss upon sale or exchange) as of the beginning of such day, of stock of all corporations held by the taxpayer at the beginning of such day, except stock of foreign personal holding companies.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] will be laid aside temporarily in view of the understanding that has been reached by reason of the absence of certain Senators.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill the following amendment:

Subchapter C supplement A of the Internal Revenue Act, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. —. In the case of compensation paid by the United States for the use or infringement of patent rights for national-defense purposes, which has remained unpaid for a period of 15 years or more from the time of use or infringement of said patent rights, the tax attributable to such compensation assessed against any individual receiving the same in any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939, shall not be greater than the aggregate of the taxes attributable to such compensation had it been received in equal portions in each of the years during which the invention or inventions covered by such patent or patent rights had been under development and test prior to the issuance of the patents therefor."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course, the bill deals with corporations and not with individuals. The amendment offered by the Senator from Texas pertains to the case of Mr. Barlow, I understand—the gentleman who has appeared with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the newspapers a good deal of late. Mr. Barlow has been conducting experiments, in connection with which he has tried to kill goats and so on. After he shall collect the money which the Government, as I understand, owed him under a contract with the Government, the Government will take most of it back into the Treasury of the United States by way of taxes. I think the amendment is a meritorious one. Ordinarily I could not accept it because it pertains to an individual, but I think the matter should go to conference.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair inquire of the Senator from Texas—perhaps it is improper—whether the amendment is intended to repeal the statute of limitations with respect to any other cases than the one mentioned by the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It applies only to this one case.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not know how far we may proceed in connection with the pending amendment until the train bearing absent Senators arrives. I understand the train is a little late. Perhaps the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] desires to speak further on the pending matter, unless his time has expired. Does the Senator desire to go ahead now?

Mr. AUSTIN. I prefer not to go ahead until other Senators are present.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi suggest a recess for a few minutes?

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the bill be laid aside temporarily. I understand a conference report could be acted upon.

Mr. McNARY. What is the conference report about? When this matter was first called to the attention of the Senate a week ago in the present form of the report, someone requested that the matter go over until other Senators were present. It probably was the able Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. May I inquire if it was the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There are so few Senators present, and so many absent, that I do not believe action should be taken on the conference report at this time. There is considerable interest in the matter.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. On that point I may say that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] stated to me before he left with the funeral party that he was very anxious to be present when the conference report was taken up. I think he takes the opposite view from that taken by the Senator from Minnesota, and I think it might be somewhat unfair to him to take it up at this ime.

Mr. McNARY. I recall now that the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] also stated that he desired to be present when the report was acted on. I object to proceeding with it at this time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Does the Senator from Mississippi desire recognition to move a recess?

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to suggest that a recess be taken.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Subject to the call of the Chair?

Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator desire to move that a recess be taken until tomorrow?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I do not. I wish to continue further discussion of the pending bill after the return of the absent Senators. I gave them the assurance, however, that we would not have a vote until they returned. I think they will be here in 15 minutes. We cannot continue further with the bill now because we have about reached the end of our rope. So unless some Senator desires to discuss the matter——

Mr. DAVIS rose.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania desire to discuss the pending amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]?

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to place in the RECORD a few telegrams in opposition to the Brown amendment. One telegram is from the president of the State Association of Boroughs of Pennsylvania. Another telegram is from the mayor of McKeesport, Pa. Still another telegram is from Walter E. Greenwood, president, League of Cities of the Third Class in Pennsylvania. Another telegram is from William Burgess, chief burgess of Morrisville, Pa., and another telegram is from L. M. Shear, commissioner of finance, city of Lancaster, Pa. Those telegrams all voice their opposition to the Brown amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire that each telegram be set out in haec verba?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegrams are as follows:

HANOVER, PA., September 16, 1940.

Hon. JAMES DAVIS,
Member of the Senate:

The boroughs of Pennsylvania oppose Federal taxation of municipal securities.

T. F. CHROSTWAITE,
President, State Association of Boroughs.

McKEESPORT, PA., September 16, 1940.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,
United States Senator:

City council unanimously decided to ask you to oppose the Brown amendment which proposes a Federal tax on municipal securities. Council feels that it would increase future rates on sales of municipal bonds. Major improvements are as a rule financed by bond issues. This increased taxation would retard such major improvements.

GEORGE H. LYSLE, Mayor.

COATESVILLE, PA., September 16, 1940.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Respectfully urging on behalf of the 46 third-class cities of Pennsylvania that you use your influence and vote against the Brown amendment intended to impose a Federal tax on municipal securities. This tax will add largely to the expense of financing local municipal government and in our judgment in the long run will not add anything of value to the National Treasury. The effect of this bill is to place a tax on a taxing authority. Your support and influence against this bill will be greatly appreciated.

WALTER E. GREENWOOD,
President, League of Cities of the Third Class in Pennsylvania.

MORRISVILLE, PA., September 18, 1940.

Hon. JAMES DAVIS,
Senator from Pennsylvania, Washington, D. C.:

Brown amendment to excess-profits tax bill providing for taxation of Federal and municipal bonds will greatly increase interest rates which will have to be paid by any municipal subdivision which finds it necessary to issue bonds in the future. This increase in cost of financing will be burdensome to the taxpayers all over the country and also it will increase the interest cost of Federal refunding of present indebtedness and be a burden on the taxpayers. We trust that you will do everything possible to kill this measure.

WILLIAM BURGESS,
Chief Burgess of Morrisville, Pa.

LANCASTER, PA., September 16, 1940.

Senator JAMES J. DAVIS:

We urge and request you to vote against the Brown amendment to tax municipal securities.

CITY OF LANCASTER, PA.,
L. M. SHEAR,
Commissioner of Finance.

RECESS

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 3:15 p. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 3:15 o'clock p. m., when it reassembled and Mr. KING resumed the chair.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I have been conferring with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and some other Senators. I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of a noncontroversial matter which will take only 2 or 3 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Iowa thinks he will get through in 5 minutes.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am sure the matter will take less time than that.

Mr. HARRISON. And if the Senator cannot get through in that time he is, of course, willing to withdraw the matter.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am perfectly willing to do so.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. GILLETTE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3426, calendar No. 1800.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 3426) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, and as reenacted by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am much in accord with the request of the Senator from Iowa. I understand that he will eliminate two sections of the bill. Has the Senator made that statement?

Mr. GILLETTE. That is correct. I will say to the distinguished minority leader that I am about to offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. I did not know whether or not the Senator had made that statement. I shall retire from the floor for the present.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3426), which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That section 2 (1) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, and as reenacted by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, is amended by striking out the last two sentences thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The base period shall be the pre-war period, August 1909–July 1914, except that for those agricultural commodities and products thereof which are subject to the provisions of section 8c, the base period shall be the post-war period, August 1919–July 1929, or such part thereof as is determined pursuant to the provisions of section 8e."

SEC. 2. Section 8c (5) (A) is amended by inserting after the comma following the word "fixing", the words "either specifically or by formula," so that it will read: "* * * and fixing, either specifically or by formula, or providing a method for fixing * * *".

SEC. 3. Section 8c (5) (B) (i) is amended by striking out all of the provisions thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(i) for the payment to all producers and associations of producers delivering milk to the same handler of uniform prices for all milk delivered by them: Provided, That, except in the case of orders regulating the handling of milk products only, orders containing such provision shall not become effective unless the Secretary of Agriculture determines from a referendum that such provision is approved or favored by at least three-fourths of the producers who participated in the referendum and who, during a representative period determined by the Secretary, have been engaged in the production of milk for sale in the marketing area specified in such order, or by producers who participated in the referendum and who, during such representative period, have produced at least three-fourths of the volume of milk produced for sale within the marketing area specified in such order; the approval required hereunder shall be separate and apart from any other approval or disapproval provided for by this section; or"

SEC. 4. Section 8c (5) (C) is amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"Providing further (i) reasonable compensation (to be paid out of any pool or fund established under this paragraph (C) of subsection (5)), as determined by the Secretary, to bona fide cooperative marketing associations, all of whose operations are under the full control of milk producers, for services rendered to producers of milk or its products covered by the order by performing such marketing functions specified therein as the Secretary determines will tend to effectuate the declared policy of this act, including, but not by any way of limitation, handling of surplus milk or making available to the market a sufficient supply of milk at all times: Provided, however, That no such compensation shall be paid to any cooperative association which does not comply with the applicable provisions of the order; or (ii) reasonable compensation (to be paid out of any such pool or fund), as determined by the Secretary, to operators of plants where milk is received from producers and which are not equipped for manufacturing, for services rendered to the market in diverting and disposing of surplus fluid milk during periods of excess supply, and to operators of condensing, evaporating, or drying plants for services in furnishing fluid milk to the market during periods of insufficient supply: Provided, however, That no such compensation shall be paid to any such operator who does not comply with the applicable provisions of the order."

SEC. 5. Section 8c (7) (D) is amended by striking therefrom the letter "(D)" and inserting in lieu thereof the letter "(G)".

SEC. 6 (a) Section 8c (7) (C) is amended by adding thereto the following subparagraph:

"(v) To make recommendations to the Secretary of Agriculture in respect to surplus removal programs, and to advise and assist the Secretary in the development and operation of such programs."

(b) Section 8c (7) is amended by adding thereto after paragraph "(C)" thereof the following paragraphs:

"(D) Providing that handlers subject to the order shall submit to the agency or agencies established therein reports containing information necessary for proper administration of the order: Provided, That all information furnished to or acquired by the agency or agencies shall be kept strictly confidential by such agency or agencies, except that it may be used without identification of the person from whom it was received or acquired and that it may be submitted to the Secretary.

"(E) Providing that handlers subject to the order shall keep such adequate books and records as will enable the filing and verification of reports as required by such order.

"(F) The provisions required by section 10 (b) (2)."

SEC. 7. Sections 8c (8) (B), 8c (9) (B) (ii), and 8c (16) (B) are amended by striking out the word "sold" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words "produced for sale."

SEC. 8. Section 8c (12) is amended by striking out all of the provisions thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(12) Whenever, pursuant to the provisions of this section, the Secretary is required to determine the approval or disapproval of producers with respect to the issuance of any order, or any term or condition thereof, or the termination thereof, the Secretary shall consider the approval or disapproval by any bona fide producer-owned and producer-controlled cooperative association of producers, operated for the mutual benefit of the members thereof and conforming to the requirements of the act of Congress of February 18, 1922, as amended, known as the 'Capper-Volstead Act,' as to voting, dividends, and dealing in products of nonmembers, and bona fide engaged in marketing the commodity or product thereof covered by such order, as the approval or disapproval of the producers who are members of, or stockholders in, and under contract with, such cooperative association of producers. For the purpose of determining the status of any cooperative association of producers under this paragraph, the Secretary may require such cooperative association to furnish such information as he may consider necessary or desirable."

SEC. 9. Section 8c (16) (A) is amended by striking out the words "or suspend the operation of" and by adding thereto, after the word "thereof", the following: "or suspend such order or such provision thereof until such time as he finds that the reinstatement of such suspended order or suspended provision thereof will tend to effectuate such declared policy."

SEC. 10. Section 8c (16) (C) is amended by striking out the words "The termination or suspension" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The termination, suspension, or reinstatement."

SEC. 11. Section 8c (16) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraph:

"(D) Any order issued in accordance with section 8c shall not be affected by the withdrawal from the marketing agreement by any or all signers thereof in accordance with the provisions of such marketing agreement or by the termination or suspension of the marketing agreement by the Secretary with respect to any or all signers."

SEC. 12. Section 8e is amended by striking out all of the provisions thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 8e. In connection with the making of any marketing agreement or the issuance of any order, if the Secretary finds and proclaims that, as to any agricultural commodity or product thereof specified in such marketing agreement or order, the purchasing power during the entire base period specified in section 2 of this title cannot be satisfactorily determined from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture, the base period, for the purpose of such marketing agreement or order, shall be all that portion thereof for which the Secretary finds and proclaims that the purchasing power of such agricultural commodity or product thereof can be satisfactorily determined from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture. Such proclamation shall remain in full force and effect until amended or revoked by the Secretary."

SEC. 13. Section 10 (b) is amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(3) The Secretary, in the administration of this title, shall accord such recognition and encouragement to producer-owned and producer-controlled cooperative associations as will be in harmony with the policy toward cooperative associations set forth in existing acts of Congress, and as will tend to promote efficient methods of marketing and distribution. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make available to producers of agricultural, dairy, or horticultural commodities or the products thereof, where such service is requested by a cooperative association which is in good faith owned or controlled by producers or associations of producers of any such commodities or the products thereof, the facilities of the Department in helping such cooperative associations to establish stable market conditions."

SEC. 14. Nothing in this act shall be construed as invalidating any marketing agreement or order, or any regulation relating thereto, or any provision thereof, or any act of the Secretary of Agriculture in connection with any such agreement or order which has been executed, issued, approved, or done under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, or any amendment thereof, or under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, or any amendment thereof, but such marketing agreements, orders, regulations, provisions, and act, or any amendments thereto, are hereby expressly ratified, legalized, and confirmed.

SEC. 15. Subsections (8) and (9) of section 8c are amended by striking out the following wherever appearing therein:

(1) ", except that as to citrus fruits produced in any area producing what is known as California citrus fruits no order issued pursuant to this subsection (8) shall become effective until the handlers of not less than 80 percent of the volume of such commodity or product thereof covered by such order have signed such a marketing agreement";

(2) "(except that as to citrus fruits produced in any area producing what is known as California citrus fruits said percent shall be 80 percent)"; and

(3) "except that as to citrus fruits produced in any area producing what is known as California citrus fruits said order must be approved or favored by three-fourths of the producers)."

SEC. 16. (a) Section 8c (2) is amended by striking out all of the provisions thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 8c (2). Orders issued pursuant to this section may be applicable to any agricultural, dairy, or horticultural commodity or product thereof, or to any regional or market classification of any such commodity or product: Provided, That in no event shall such orders apply to apples except apples produced in the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho."

(b) Section 8c (6) is amended by striking from the beginning of the first sentence thereof to the word "orders" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "In the case of agricultural or horticultural commodities and the products thereof, other than milk and its products."

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, there are 16 sections in this committee amendment. Fourteen of them, so far as I know, have aroused no objection whatever. No objection was made to them in the extended hearings. Two of them, sections 15 and 16, meet with opposition. I move that sections 15 and 16 be stricken from the committee amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa to strike out sections 15 and 16 in the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In order that the record may be complete—and I feel that a bill of this importance should not be passed without a completion of the record—I should like to say for the benefit of the Senate that I was assigned to hold the hearings upon this bill. Very complete hearings were held, and I took particular care that notice should be given to every interest in the country which might have some concern with the proposed legislation. Ten days' full notice was given. We had many witnesses before us. There were objections, as the Senator has said, to sections 15 and 16, but there was complete unanimity of opinion concerning the first 14 sections. They were carefully studied by all the interests involved, and by the representatives of the Department, and were approved by everyone who contacted the committee in reference to the bill.

In order to complete the record, I should like to have printed in the RECORD an explanation of the first 14 sections.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COMPARISON OF AGRICULTURAL MARKETING AGREEMENT ACT OF 1937 BEFORE AND AFTER AMENDMENT AS PROPOSED BY S. 3426 TOGETHER WITH EXPLANATORY REMARKS

PRESENT LAW	PRESENT LAW WITH PROPOSED AMENDMENT—SEC. 1 OF S. 3426 (New language italicized; language stricken in brackets)
SEC. 2. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress—	SEC. 2. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress—
(1) Through the exercise of the powers conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture under this title, to establish and maintain such orderly marketing conditions for agricultural commodities in interstate commerce as will establish prices to farmers at a level that will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy, equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the base period; and, in the case of all commodities for which the base period is the pre-war period, August 1909 to July 1914, will also reflect current interest payments per acre on farm indebtedness secured by real estate and tax payments per acre	(1) Through the exercise of the powers conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture under this title, to establish and maintain such orderly marketing conditions for agricultural commodities in interstate commerce as will establish prices to farmers at a level that will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy, equivalent to, the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the base period; and in the case of all commodities for which the base period is the pre-war period, August 1909 to July 1914, will also reflect current interest payments per acre on farm indebtedness secured by real estate and tax payments per acre on farm on farm real estate, as contrasted with such interest payments and tax payments during the base period. The base period in the case of all agricultural commodities except tobacco and potatoes shall be the pre-war period, August 1909–July 1914. In the case of tobacco and potatoes, the base period shall be the post-war period, August 1919–July 1929.

PRESENT LAW WITH PROPOSED AMENDMENT, ETC.—con.

real estate, as contrasted with such interest payments and tax payments during the base period. [The base period in the case of all agricultural commodities except tobacco and potatoes shall be the pre-war period, August 1909–July 1914. In the case of tobacco and potatoes, the base period shall be the post-war period, August 1919–July 1929.] The base period shall be the pre-war period, August 1909–July 1914, except that for those agricultural commodities and products thereof which are subject to the provisions of section 8c, the base period shall be the post-war period, August 1919–July 1929, or such part thereof as is determined pursuant to the provisions of section 8e.

Section 1 of S. 3426 proposes a change in the base period that the Secretary may employ. Whereas the post-war—August 1919 to July 1929—period now applies only to tobacco and potatoes, the amendment would change this so that all commodities subject to marketing agreements and orders will have as their base period the post-war period, August 1919 to July 1929.

Reason: As a matter of actual practice, in the case of milk and its products, in the issuance of milk orders and amendments thereto under the law, the post-war period or a portion thereof has been used in every instance. This the Secretary is authorized to do under present section 8e of the law. There are three main reasons for this administrative practice:

1. The fundamental changes that have taken place in the fluid-milk industry since the pre-war period as the result of health and sanitary regulations;

2. The changes in the mechanics and methods of marketing fluid milk; and

3. Price-data-collection agencies for fluid milk have been principally of post-war origin.

As a result of the first enumerated reason, the quality and kind of product to which pre-war price data would apply is substantially different than that to which current data apply and necessitates correction or adjustment to account for these changes. Such corrections or adjustments to reflect this change are at best of questionable reliability.

As to the second stated reason, the price data available are largely in the form of flat prices without the related information concerning classified use of fluid milk. This latter information is necessary in order to translate such flat prices into comparable prices for various classes of milk based upon the use to which it is put. It is most difficult, if not impossible, to translate such data in terms comparable to present methods of pricing and marketing fluid milk.

With respect to the third assigned reason, it is a fact that price data for the pre-war period are fragmentary. This fact is even true in the case of the post-war period in some markets. Where the post-war period is involved, however, increased reliability can be found by taking a portion of the period (as section 8e of the law provides) and thus develop a reasonably good comparative price series.

Some of the foregoing assigned reasons, particularly the difficulty in adjusting pre-war prices, are no less true in the case of other commodities. Therefore, it is regarded as desirable that the post-war period be established as a base period by Congress.

PRESENT LAW

SEC. 8c. (5) In the case of milk and its products, orders issued pursuant to this section shall contain one or more of the following terms and conditions, and (except as provided in subsection (7)) no others:

(A) Classifying milk in accordance with the form in which or the purpose for which it is used, and fixing, or providing a method for fixing, minimum prices for each such use classification which all handlers shall pay, and the time when payments shall be made, for milk purchased from producers or associations of producers. Such prices shall be uniform as to all handlers, subject only to adjustments for (1) volume, market, and production differentials customarily applied by the handlers subject to such order, (2) the grade or quality of the milk purchased, and (3) the locations at which delivery of such milk, or any use classification thereof, is made to such handlers.

(B) Providing—

(ii) for the payment to all producers and associations of producers delivering milk to all handlers of uniform prices for all milk so delivered, irrespective of the uses made of such milk by the individual handler to whom it is delivered;

subject, in either case, only to adjustments for (a) volume, market, and production differentials, customarily applied by the handlers subject to such order, (b) the grade or quality of the milk delivered, (c) the locations at which delivery of such milk is made, and (d) a further adjustment, equitably to apportion the total value of the milk purchased by any handler, or by all handlers, among producers and associations of producers, on the basis of their marketings of milk during a representative period of time.

(C) In order to accomplish the purposes set forth in paragraphs (A) and (B) of this subsection (5), providing a method for making adjustments in payments, as among handlers (including producers who are also handlers), to the end that the total sums paid by each handler shall equal the value of the milk purchased by him at the prices fixed in accordance with paragraph (A) hereof.

PRESENT LAW WITH PROPOSED AMENDMENTS—SECS. 2, 3, 4 OF S. 3426

(New language italicized; language stricken in brackets)

SEC. 8c. (5) In the case of milk and its products, orders issued pursuant to this section shall contain one or more of the following terms and conditions, and (except as provided in subsection (7)) no others:

(A) Classifying milk in accordance with the form in which or the purpose for which it is used, and fixing, either specifically or by formula, or providing a method for fixing minimum prices for each such use classification which all handlers shall pay, and the time when payments shall be made, for milk purchased from producers or associations of producers. Such prices shall be uniform as to all handlers, subject only to adjustments for (1) volume, market, and production differentials customarily applied by the handlers subject to such order, (2) the grade or quality of the milk purchased, and (3) the locations at which delivery of such milk, or any use classification thereof, is made to such handlers.

(B) Providing—

(i) for the payment to all producers and associations of producers delivering milk to the same handler of uniform prices for all milk delivered by them: Provided, That, except in the case of orders covering milk products only, the Secretary determines from a referendum that such provision is approved or favored by at least three-fourths of the producers who, during a representative period determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, have been engaged in the production for market of milk covered in such order or by producers who, during such representative period, have produced at least three-fourths of the volume of such milk produced for market during such period; the approval required hereunder shall be separate and apart from any other approval or disapproval provided for by this section; or

(ii) for the payment to all producers and associations of producers delivering milk to all handlers of uniform prices for all milk so delivered, irrespective of the uses made of such milk by the individual handler to whom it is delivered;

subject, in either case, only to adjustments for (a) volume, market, and production differentials customarily applied by the handlers subject to such order, (b) the grade or quality of the milk delivered, (c) the locations at which delivery of such milk is made, and (d) a further adjustment, equitably to apportion the total value of the milk purchased by any handler, or by all handlers, among producers and associations of producers on the basis of their marketings of milk during a representative period of time.

or making available to the market a sufficient supply of milk at all times: Provided, however, That no such compensation shall be paid to any cooperative association which does not comply with the applicable provisions of the order; or (ii) reasonable compensation (to be paid out of any such pool or fund), as determined by the Secretary, to operators of plants where milk is received from producers and which are not equipped for manufacturing, for services rendered to the market in diverting and disposing of surplus fluid milk during periods of excess supply, and to operators of condensing, evaporating, or drying plants for services in furnishing fluid milk to the market during periods of insufficient supply.

EXPLANATION OF FOREGOING AMENDMENTS CONTAINED IN SECTIONS 2, 3, AND 4 OF S. 3426

The Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 provides at section 8c (5) for certain terms and conditions which the Secretary of Agriculture is required to incorporate in Federal orders regulating milk and its products. These terms and conditions are set forth in subparagraphs (A) to (E), inclusive. The remaining two paragraphs of this section of the statute, namely, paragraphs (F) and (G) are limiting provisos only and not terms and conditions which may be incorporated into an order.

The statute requires that one or more of these enumerated terms and conditions be placed in an order by the Secretary.

It is with respect to clarifying the language of these enumerated terms and conditions that sections 2, 3, and 4 of S. 3426 are proposed.

Section 2 of S. 3426

The first of these, section 2, provides for the insertion of the words "either specifically or by formula" following the word "fixing" in paragraph (A) of section 8c (5), which paragraph authorizes a term or condition in an order prescribing minimum prices distributors shall pay producers for milk purchased.

Reason: This change in language is designed to give a more precise meaning to the term "fixing" as the term is applied to practices prevailing in the dairy industry. For instance, the Secretary, in issuing an order regulating milk, classifies milk according to the form or purpose for which it is used and then prescribes the minimum price for each such designated classification. In the case of class I milk, for example, which in the industry is usually known in the market as all milk disposed of in the form of fluid milk, the Secretary has usually named an exact or specific minimum price that distributors (called handlers in the act), shall pay producers. For other use classifications, the Secretary oftentimes names a price which is specified in terms of a mathematical relationship to the price of butter on recognized markets and other associated commodities or factors.

This method of price fixing would, of course, be by formula method in contradistinction to the fixing of a specific price.

By way of specific example, the original order for the metropolitan New York market may be cited. The Class I price was specifically fixed. The class III–A price (class III–A being all milk supplying butterfat for evaporated milk, sweetened condensed milk, milk chocolate, etc.), on the other hand, was fixed at a level 10 cents higher than the average of prices paid at 18 evaporated-milk plants in Ohio, Michigan, and Wisconsin. However, in order to place a bottom on the minimum price for class III–A, the Secretary additionally provided in the order that in no event should the price be less than that arrived at by application of a formula related to the average price of 92-score butter at wholesale in the Chicago market. Such formula methods of pricing have developed over a period of years and are recognized within the industry itself.

It might well be contended that the language of paragraph (A) in its present form wherein it states "fixing, or providing a method for fixing, minimum prices" will suffice the purpose. On the other hand, it might logically be contended that this language is not sufficiently inclusive to embrace the authority to fix prices by formula method. Hence, the need for the amendment.

Not only will the amendment assure this authority and consequently provide a better basis on which to accommodate administrative practice to well-established industry usages, but will also avoid certain difficulties of interpretation encountered by the Secretary in endeavoring to adhere closely to the statute.

Section 3 of S. 3426

The second proposed amendment to section 8c (5) of the act being section 3 of S. 3426, calls for the insertion of new language in paragraph (B), subparagraph (i).

Some preliminary explanation as to the meaning of this subparagraph is apropos before dealing with the specific amendment. This subparagraph is the Secretary's authority to include in an order regulating milk and its products, a term or condition known as the "individual handler pool."

One of the major objectives of milk marketing agreements and orders is the proper proration among producers of the proceeds from sales of their milk to distributors. This, under the authority of the act, is accomplished by pooling producers' sales, either through the individual handler pool arrangement (authorized by par. (B) (i) or the market-wide pool (authorized by par. (B) (ii)).

In the amendment proposed by section 3 of S. 3426 we are concerned only with the former, viz, the individual handler pool arrangement of pooling producers' sales. Such type of pool simply means that the total volume of milk sold to an individual distributor by producers is pooled and all producers supplying milk to that particular distributor are paid the pool price by such distributor. The pool price would be the composite price of all use classifications of milk supplied to the particular distributor, as computed by the market administrator from reports of receipts and sales by the distributor. A particular distributor may, however, pay producers a lower pool price than that paid by another distributor, depending upon the uses of the milk handled by him.

For example, under the individual handler pool arrangement, suppose there are two distributors supplying a given market. Distributor A maintains class I (fluid milk) sales of 70 percent and class II sales of 30 percent. Distributor B maintains 50 percent class I sales, 30 percent class II sales, and 20 percent class III sales. The pool price of distributor A payable to producers supplying him with milk would represent 70 percent based on the minimum price prescribed in the marketing order for class I milk and 30 percent based on the minimum price prescribed for class II milk. Obviously his composite pool price will be higher than distributor B whose price will be the composite of 50 percent based on the minimum price prescribed for class I, 30 percent for class II, and 20 percent for class III. If the minimum price for class I in the market is $3 per hundredweight, for class II, $2 per hundredweight, and $1.50 for class III, then on the basis of 100 pounds of milk delivered to distributor A the pool price for distributor A would be $2.70 and that for distributor B, $2.40.

Before the Secretary of Agriculture can include the individual handler pool provision in a marketing order regulating milk and its products, he must ascertain that such provision is approved by either three-fourths of the producers of milk covered by the order or three-fourths of the producers by volume of milk produced for market covered by the order. This likewise is provided for in section 8c (5) (B) (i). However, the existing language of the law is indefinite as to the method whereby the Secretary determines the required producer approval of the individual handler pool. It reads:

"Provided, That, except in the case of orders covering milk products only, such provision is approved or favored by at least three-fourths of the producers * * *."

The proposed amendment would change this language to read:

"Provided, That, except in the case of orders covering milk products only, the Secretary determines from a referendum that such provision is approved or favored by at least three-fourths of the producers * * *."

With such an amendment the result accomplished would be—

(1) Definite provision for the conduct of a referendum among producers in order to enable the Secretary to ascertain the extent of producers' approval for the inclusion of the individual handler pool provision in the marketing order; and

(2) Definite provision for a basis for the Secretary's determination that the required number of producers have approved this type of pooling arrangement, namely, the result of the referendum, which is conclusive for the purposes of administrative action.

Furthermore, this amendment makes certain that the same procedure and method of determining the results of such a referendum can be followed in this particular instance as that used in connection with the issuance of an order itself as is provided for in section 8c (19) of the act.

Section 4 of S. 3426

The third proposed amendment to section 8c (5) of the act, being section 4 of S. 3426, adds new language to the present law which makes clear and definite the authority to provide in a marketing order regulating milk and its products for the payment of cooperative and market service differentials.

The proposed amendment while embraced in a single paragraph expresses two independent authorizations—one designated (i) and the other designated (ii).

That part designated (i) refers to payments to cooperatives for rendering services to the market. Such payments are authorized in the present law by virtue both of section 8c (5) (B) and section 8c (7), the former being quoted hereinbefore and section 8c (7) providing:

"(7) In the case of the agricultural commodities and the products thereof specified in subsection (2), orders shall contain one or more of the following terms and conditions:

* * * * * * *

"(D) Incidental to, and not inconsistent with, the terms and conditions in subsections (5), (6), and (7) and necessary to effectuate the other provisions of such order."

Reason: In order to make definite and certain the Secretary's authority in this regard and to settle the question that insufficient standards are spelled out in the act to guide the Secretary, it is regarded as essential that the law be amended in the respects contemplated by section 4 of S. 3426.

The market services for which these payments may be made to a qualifying cooperative are clearly set forth in the brief of the United States Government in the case of United States v. Rock Royal Co-operative, Inc., et al. (307 U. S. 533, 59 S. Ct. 993, pp. 158 et seq.), which may be paraphrased as follows:

(1) Service performed in supplying class I milk to the marketing area in times of short supply;

(2) Service performed in the utilization of milk in times of long supply in such manner as to insure the greatest possible return to producers;

(3) Service performed by the maintenance throughout the year of facilities for handling the seasonal surplus even though these facilities can be employed only during the flush season;

(4) Service performed for the market by the employment of measures during flush periods of production to secure the utilization in fluid form of milk near to the market, and the utilization in manufactured form of milk produced at the edge of the milkshed, thus reducing transportation charges which must be shared by all producers;

(5) Miscellaneous services performed for the benefit of the entire market with respect to weights, tests, market outlets, etc.

The amendment proposed in section 4 of S. 3426, namely, part (i) thereof, will make it clear and certain that the Secretary of Agriculture in his discretion has full power to fix differentials in favor of cooperative associations which are rendering these or similar services and which services tend to effectuate the public policy of the Marketing Agreement Act. By the amendment the Secretary will have authority to fit such payments appropriately to the value of the service rendered.

It is to be noted further that as a prerequisite to receiving any such payment the cooperative must be bona fide and under the exclusive control of its member-producers. Furthermore, it must be in full compliance with all provisions of the marketing order which govern it.

That part of the amendment contained in section 4 of S. 3426 designated "(ii)" provides for a different type of payment, not limited, however, to cooperative associations. Actually two distinct types of payment are provided, one to meet a situation existing during heavy production seasons and the other to meet the market situation during periods of low production.

Employing the New York order (No. 27) as an example, therein two types of "market service payments" were provided for: (a) Payments to handlers operating fluid-milk shipping plants without manufacturing facilities who, except in periods of low production, divert milk to plants which utilize the milk for manufacturing milk products; and (b) payments to handlers who operate condenseries, or dried-milk factories, who manufacture dairy products in months of heavy production and during low-production periods divert their milk for use in the fluid market, where it is needed because of high consumption demands.

These types of market-service payments are spelled out in part (ii) of section 4 of S. 3426, notwithstanding existing authority in the law to provide for them in a marketing order.

Reason: The importance of these market services should not be minimized. They go to the very crux of one of the most troublesome problems in every milk market, the problem of surplus milk, which, if not properly taken into account, may disrupt the entire marketing program, with resulting detriment to producer, consumer, and distributor.

In order to insure against the dumping of surplus milk in heavy seasons on the market and thereby demoralize the market by the resulting depressed price, compensation for market services which obviate such a practice appears to be the solution. That the service cannot be performed without compensation to the one giving the service is apparent by an illustrative example set forth in the brief of the Government in the Rock Royal case, supra. At page 163, wherein these type payments are discussed, a footnoted example is given, as follows:

"Let it be assumed, for example, that during the month of September handler A received large quantities of milk in excess of the amounts necessary to meet his own requirements. Handler B operates a plant equipped for handling milk in class III–D, 10 miles from handler A's plant. The class III–D price for September was $1.01. If handler A sold his milk to handler B at the class price or a few cents over the class price, he has incurred a substantial loss on the operation unless he can be reimbursed for expenses incurred in diverting the milk. The average cost of handling milk at a country plant is 15 to 30 cents per hundredweight. If we assume that handler A operates with average efficiency, his handling cost is 23 cents per hundredweight. The trucking allowances contained in section 6 represent the average cost of trucking milk. Therefore, the net cost of the milk per hundredweight to handler A would be 23 cents for handling, plus 5¼ cents for trucking, plus $1.01, the price at which he must account to the pool for the milk, or a total of $1.29¼. If he sold the milk to handler B at the class price, his net loss would be 28¼ cents. To avoid this loss, he has no alternative but to refuse to accept the milk from producers unless he can obtain reimbursement."

The amendment contemplates that both types of payment will be paid to the qualifying beneficiaries out of a settlement fund prescribed for the marketing area under the provisions of section 8c (5) (C) of the act, which presently provides:

"In order to accomplish the purposes set forth in paragraphs (A) and (B) of this subsection (5), providing a method for making adjustments in payments, as among handlers (including producers who are also handlers), to the end that the total sums paid by each handler shall equal the value of the milk purchased by him at the prices fixed in accordance with paragraph (A) hereof."

PRESENT LAW

(7) In the case of the agricultural commodities and the products thereof specified in subsection (2) orders shall contain one or more of the following terms and conditions:

(A) Prohibiting unfair methods of competition and unfair trade practices in the handling thereof.

(B) Providing that (except for milk and cream to be sold for consumption in fluid form) such commodity or product thereof, or any grade, size, or quality thereof shall be sold by the handlers thereof only at prices filed by such handlers in the manner provided in such order.

(C) Providing for the selection by the Secretary of Agriculture, or a method for the selection, of an agency or agencies and defining their powers and duties, which shall include only the powers:

(i) To administer such order in accordance with its terms and provisions;

(ii) To make rules and regulations to effectuate the terms and provisions of such order;

(iii) To receive, investigate, and report to the Secretary of Agriculture complaints of violations of such order; and

(iv) To recommend to the Secretary of Agriculture amendments to such order.

No person acting as a member of an agency established pursuant to this paragraph (C) shall be deemed to be acting in an official capacity, within the meaning of section 10 (g) of this title, unless such person receives compensation for his personal services from funds of the United States.

(D) Incidental to, and not inconsistent with, the terms and conditions specified in subsections (5), (6), and (7) and necessary to effectuate the other provisions of such order.

PRESENT LAW WITH PROPOSED AMENDMENT—SECTIONS 5 AND 6 OF S. 3426

(New language italicized; language stricken in brackets)

(7) In the case of the agricultural commodities and the products thereof specified in subsection (2) orders shall contain one or more of the following terms and conditions:

(A) Prohibiting unfair methods of competition and unfair trade practices in the handling thereof.

(B) Providing that (except for milk and cream to be sold for consumption in fluid form) such commodity or product thereof, or any grade, size, or quality thereof shall be sold by the handlers thereof only at prices filed by such handlers in the manner provided in such order.

(C) Providing for the selection by the Secretary of Agriculture, or a method for the selection, of an agency or agencies and defining their powers and duties, which shall include only the powers:

(i) To administer such order in accordance with its terms and provisions;

(ii) To make rules and regulations to effectuate the terms and provisions of such order;

(iii) To receive, investigate, and report to the Secretary of Agriculture complaints of violations of such order; and

(iv) To recommend to the Secretary of Agriculture amendments to such order.

No person acting as a member of an agency established pursuant to this paragraph (C) shall be deemed to be acting in an official capacity, within the meaning of section 10 (g) of this title, unless such person receives compensation for his personal services from funds of the United States.

(D) Providing that handlers subject to the order shall submit to the agency or agencies established therein reports containing information necessary for proper administration of the order: Provided, That all information furnished to or acquired by the agency or agencies shall be kept strictly confidential by such agency or agencies, except that it may be used without identification of the person from whom it was received or acquired and that it may be submitted to the Secretary.

(E) Providing that handlers subject to the order shall keep such adequate books and records as will enable the filing and verification of reports as required by such order.

(F) The provisions required by Section 10 (b) (2).

[D] (G) Incidental to, and not inconsistent with, the terms and conditions specified in subsections (5), (6), and (7) and necessary to effectuate the other provisions of such order.

EXPLANATION OF FOREGOING AMENDMENTS CONTAINED IN SECTIONS 5 AND 6 OF S. 3426

Section 5 of S. 3426

Section 5 of S. 3426 simply changes the lettering of present paragraph "(D)" of section 8c (7) of the act so that it will read paragraph "(G." This is made necessary by reason of the amendments contained in section 6 of S. 3426.

Section 6 of S. 3426

This section of the amendments contained in S. 3426 adds three new paragraphs to section 8c (7) of the statute. In order that they may properly be incorporated into the context of section 8c (7) of the act these three new paragraphs are labeled "(D)", "(E)", and "(F)".

In considering the proposed amendatory language it should be borne in mind that section 8c (7) of the Marketing Agreement Act specifies certain terms and conditions, one or more of which the Secretary is required to incorporate in an order regulating any agricultural product for which the act authorizes marketing orders. In other words, this section of the law is not confined solely to milk and milk products.

New paragraph "(D)" as proposed in section 6 of S. 3426 adds to these specified terms and conditions a further term and condition which would require that—

"* * * handlers subject to the order shall submit to the agency or agencies established therein reports containing information necessary for proper administration of the order * * *."

By new paragraph "(E)" that—

"* * * handlers subject to the order shall keep such adequate books and records as will enable the filing and verification of reports required by such order."

And by paragraph "(F)" the term and condition that handlers pay their pro rata share of administrative expense in connection with the enforcement of the order as is presently stipulated in section 10 (b) (2) of the law.[1]

Reason: While authority to include the authorizations of new paragraphs "(D)" and "(E)" in a marketing order is regarded as presently existing in the provisions of section 8c (7), paragraph (D), and in section 8d (1) of the Marketing Agreement Act,[2] yet it is deemed essential to amend the law in the manner proposed in order to make definite and clear the Secretary's authority to include these requirements as terms and conditions in an order. That such terms and conditions are essential to the effective administration of the law is apparent on its face, and any uncertainty in the existing law in this respect commands clarification.

Thus new paragraph (D) specifically authorizes the inclusion in orders covering agricultural commodities of a provision requiring handlers to submit to the agency established under such orders reports containing information essential to the proper administration of the order. The paragraph further provides for the confidential treatment of such information in harmony with well-established governmental practices.

New paragraph (E) is a companion to new paragraph (D) in that it authorizes the Secretary to include in orders a provision which would insure that handlers will keep adequate records to facilitate the filing of and enable the verification of reports on the part of the market administrator by the order.

New paragraph (F) is self-explanatory. It is important to point out, however, that this proposed amendment does away with what appears to be a contradiction in the present wording of the Marketing Agreement Act. For instance, at section 8c (5) it is stated that orders for milk and its products "shall contain one or more of the" terms and conditions therein set forth "and except as provided in section 8c (7) no others." Section 10 (b) (2) of the act, on the other hand, states that handlers shall pay their pro rata share of the expense of administration and that an order shall contain a provision requiring them to do so. This possible conflict in language will be remedied by the amendment proposed in new paragraph (F), which incorporates by reference the language of section 10 (b) (2) in section 8c (7).

"Each order issued by the Secretary under this title shall provide that each handler subject thereto shall pay to any authority or agency established under such order such handler's pro rata share (as approved by the Secretary) of such expenses as the Secretary may find will necessarily be incurred by such authority or agency, during any period specified by him, for the maintenance and functioning of such authority or agency, other than expenses incurred in receiving, handling, holding, or disposing of any quantity of a commodity received, handled, held, or disposed of by such authority or agency for the benefit or account of persons other than handlers subject to such order. The pro rata share of the expenses payable by a cooperative association of producers shall be computed on the basis of the quantity of the agricultural commodity or product thereof covered by such order which is distributed, processed, or shipped by such cooperative association of producers. Any such authority or agency may maintain in its own name, or in the names of its members, a suit against any handler subject to an order for the collection of such handler's pro rata share of expenses. The several district courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction to entertain such suits regardless of the amount in controversy."

[2] SEC. 8d. (1) All parties to any marketing agreement, and all handlers subject to an order, shall severally, from time to time, upon the request of the Secretary, to furnish him with such information as he finds to be necessary to enable him to ascertain and determine the extent to which such agreement or order has been carried out or has effectuated the declared policy of this title, and with such information as he finds to be necessary to determine whether or not there has been any abuse of the privilege of exemptions from the antitrust laws. Such information shall be furnished in accordance with forms of reports to be prescribed by the Secretary. For the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of any report made to the Secretary pursuant to this subsection, or for the purpose of obtaining the information required in any such report, where it has been requested and has not been furnished, the Secretary is hereby authorized to examine such books, papers, records, copies of income-tax reports, accounts, correspondence, contracts, documents, or memoranda, as he deems relevant and which are within the control (1) of any such party to such marketing agreement, or any such handler, from whom such report was requested or (2) of any person having, either directly or indirectly, actual or legal control of or over such party or such handler or (3) of any subsidiary of any such party, handler, or person.

PRESENT LAW

SEC. 8c (8). Except as provided in subsection (9) of this section, no order issued pursuant to this section shall become effective until the handlers (excluding cooperative associations of producers who are not engaged in processing, distributing, or shipping the commodity or product thereof covered by such order) of not less than 50 per centum of the volume of the commodity or product thereof covered by such order which is produced or marketed within the production or marketing area defined in such order have signed a marketing agreement, entered into pursuant to section 8b of this title, which regulates the handling of such commodity or product in the same manner as such order, except that as to citrus fruits produced in any area producing what is known as California citrus fruits no order issued pursuant to this subsection (8) shall become effective until the handlers of not less than 80 per centum of the volume of such commodity or product thereof covered by such order have signed such a marketing agreement: Provided, That no order issued pursuant to this subsection shall be effective unless the Secretary of Agriculture determines that the issuance of such order is approved or favored:

(A) By at least two-thirds of the producers who (except that as to citrus fruits produced in any area producing what is known as California citrus fruits said order must be approved or favored by three-fourths of the producers), during a representative period determined by the Secretary, have been engaged, within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, in the production for market of the commodity specified therein, or who, during such representative period have been engaged in the production of such commodity for sale in the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement or order, or

(B) By producers who, during such representative period, have produced for market at least two-thirds of the volume of such commodity produced for market within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, or who, during such representative period, have produced at least two-thirds of the volume of such commodity sold within the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement or order.

SEC. 8c (9). Any order issued pursuant to this section shall become effective in the event that, notwithstanding the refusal or failure of handlers (excluding cooperative associations or producers who are not engaged in processing, distributing, or shipping the commodity or product thereof covered by such order) of more than 50 per centum of the volume of the commodity or product thereof (except that as to citrus fruits produced in any area producing what is known as California citrus fruits said per centum shall be 80 per centum) covered by such order which is produced or marketed within the production or marketing area defined in such order to sign a marketing agreement relating to such commodity or product thereof, on which a hearing has been held, the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the President, determines:

(A) That the refusal or failure to sign a marketing agreement (upon which a hearing has been held) by the handlers (excluding cooperative associations of producers who are not engaged in processing, distributing, or shipping the commodity or product thereof covered by such order) of more than 50 per centum of the volume of the commodity or product thereof (except that as to citrus fruits produced in any area producing what is known as California citrus fruits said per centum shall be 80 per centum) specified therein which is produced or marketed within the production or marketing area specified therein tends to prevent the effectuation of the declared policy of this title with respect to such commodity or product, and

(B) That the issuance of such order is the only practical means of advancing the interests of the producers of such commodity pursuant to the declared policy, and is approved or favored:

(i) By at least two-thirds of the producers (except that as to citrus fruits produced in any area producing what is known as California citrus fruits said order must be approved or favored by three-fourths of the producers) who, during a representative period determined by the Secretary, have been engaged, within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, in the production for market of the commodity specified therein, or who, during such representative period, have been engaged in the production of such commodity for sale in the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement, or order, or that, notwithstanding the refusal or failure of handlers (excluding cooperative associations or producers who are not engaged in processing, distributing, or shipping the commodity or product thereof covered by such order) of more than 50 per centum of the volume of the commodity or product thereof [(except that as to citrus fruits produced in any area producing what is known as California citrus fruits said per centum shall be 80 per centum)] covered by such order which is produced or marketed within the production or marketing area defined in such order to sign a marketing agreement relating to such commodity or product thereof, on which a hearing has been held, the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the President, determines:

(A) That the refusal or failure to sign a marketing agreement (upon which a hearing has been held) by the handlers (excluding cooperative associations of producers who are not engaged in processing, distributing, or shipping the commodity or product thereof covered by such order) of more than 50 per centum of the volume of the commodity or product thereof [(except that as to citrus fruits produced in any area producing what is known as California citrus fruits said per centum shall be 80 per centum)] specified therein which is produced or marketed within the production or marketing area specified therein tends to prevent the effectuation of the declared policy of this title with respect to such commodity or product, and

(ii) By producers who, during such representative period, have produced for market at least two-thirds of the volume of such commodity produced for market within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, or who, during such representative period, have produced at least two-thirds of the volume of such commodity [sold] produced for sale within the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement or order.

Section 7 of S. 3426

Section 7 of S. 3426 amends three separate sections of the Marketing Agreement Act but in the same manner. At this point we consider only the effect of this amendment on section 8c (8) and (9) of the law.

The amendment proposes to strike the word "sold" wherever appearing in section 8c (8) and (9) and inserting in lieu thereof the words "produced for sale."

The particular language to be amended in this manner is that dealing with the approval of a marketing order by producers.

Reason: As the law now reads, the results of a referendum based upon the volume of the commodity produced for market would have to be determined, using milk as an example, on the basis of the volume of milk "sold" in the marketing area. However, by reason of the language in paragraph (B) of section 8c (8) and paragraph (B) (ii) of section 8c (9), the producers who are eligible to vote in such a referendum are those who actually produced milk for sale in the marketing area.

If a literal construction were to be placed upon this provision of the law, it would be impossible to determine the results of a referendum based upon volume because it is not known and can never definitely be determined how much of each producer's milk is actually sold in the marketing area.

Therefore, in order to do away with an administrative difficulty arising by virtue of this impossible situation and yet preserve the alternative method of ascertaining producer approval, viz, producers by number or producers by volume, this particular amendment is regarded as most essential.

PRESENT LAW

SEC. 8c (12). Whenever, pursuant to the provisions of this section, the Secretary is required to determine the approval or disapproval of producers with respect to the issuance of any order, or any term or condition thereof, or the termination thereof, the Secretary shall consider the approval or disapproval by any cooperative association of producers, bona fide engaged in marketing the commodity or product thereof covered by such order, or in rendering services for or advancing the interests of the producers of such commodity, as the approval or disapproval of the producers who are members of, stockholders in, or under contract with, such cooperative association of producers.

PRESENT LAW WITH PROPOSED AMENDMENTS, ETC.

(New language italicized; language stricken in brackets)

SEC. 8c. [(12). Whenever, pursuant to the provisions of this section, the Secretary is required to determine the approval or disapproval of producers with respect to the issuance of any order, or any term or condition thereof, or the termination thereof, the Secretary shall consider the approval or disapproval by any cooperative association of producers, bona fide engaged in marketing the commodity or product thereof covered by such order, or in rendering services for or advancing the interests of the producers of such commodity as the approval or disapproval of the producers who are members of, stockholders in, or under contract with, such cooperative association of producers.]

(12) Whenever, pursuant to the provisions of this section, the Secretary is required to determine the approval or disapproval of producers with respect to the issuance of any order, or any term or condition thereof, or the termination thereof, the Secretary shall consider the approval or disapproval by any bona fide producer-owner and producer-controlled cooperative association of producers, operated for the mutual benefit of the members thereof and conforming to the requirements of the act of Congress of February 18, 1922, as amended, known as the "Capper-Volstead Act", as to voting, dividends, and dealing in products of nonmembers, and bona fide engaged in marketing the commodity or product thereof covered by such order, as the approval or disapproval of the producers who are members of, or stockholders in, and under contract with, such cooperative association of producers. For the purpose of determining the status of any cooperative association of producers under this paragraph, the Secretary may require such cooperative association to furnish such information as he may consider necessary or desirable.

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENT

The amendment here proposed is designed to clarify the provisions of the existing law wherein cooperative associations are given the right to vote their members in a referendum conducted by the Secretary, and further is designed to spell out certain standards to which the Secretary must look in determining the qualifications of any such an association for this purpose.

Reason: Pseudo-cooperative associations, complying usually in skeleton form to State cooperative-marketing statutes and the definitive provisions of the Capper-Volstead Act, have sprung up and have held themselves out to represent their members within the contemplation of section 8c (12). In reality their policies have been distributor or handler dictated and their control the antithesis of producer ownership and producer control.

From this fact it is apparent that if sufficient of such pseudo organizations operated in a particular market so that their vote could control or have an important bearing in the control over the issuance of a marketing order the very object of the act would be defeated. Whereas under the act producers determine whether or not a marketing order shall issue for their market, actually distributor or handler determination would be substituted through this subterfuge, the bogus cooperative, which is contrary to the letter and spirit of the law.

The amending language makes definite and clear the type of cooperative association which may vote in the producer referendum as the representative of its producer members. In addition the Secretary of Agriculture is given authority to call upon a cooperative association for information regarding its character and operations to enable him to determine whether or not it is such a cooperative as may voice the approval or disapproval of its producer members.

PRESENT LAW	PRESENT LAW WITH PROPOSED AMENDMENTS, SECTIONS 7, 9, 10, AND 11 OF S. 3426 (New language italicized; language stricken in brackets)
SEC. 8c (16) (A). The Secretary of Agriculture shall, whenever he finds that any order issued under this section, or any provision thereof, obstructs or does not tend to effectuate the declared policy of this title, terminate or suspend the operation of such order or such provision thereof.	SEC. 8c (16) (A). The Secretary of Agriculture shall, whenever he finds that any order issued under this section, or any provision thereof, obstructs or does not tend to effectuate the declared policy of this title terminate [or suspend the operation of] such order or such provision thereof, or suspend such order or such provision thereof until such time as he finds that the reinstatement of such suspended order or suspended provision thereof will tend to effectuate such declared policy.
(B) The Secretary shall terminate any marketing agreement entered into under section 8b, or order issued under this section, at the end of the then current marketing period for such commodity, specified in such marketing agreement or order, whenever he finds that such termination is favored by a majority of the producers who, during a representative period determined by the Secretary, have been engaged in the production for market of the commodity specified in such marketing agreement or order, within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, or who, during such representative period, have been engaged in the production of such commodity for sale within the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement or order: Provided, That such majority have, during such representative period, produced for market more than 50 per centum of the volume of such commodity produced for market within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, or have, during such representative period, produced more than 50 per centum of the volume of such commodity sold in the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement or order, but such termination shall be effective only if announced on or before such date (prior to the end of the then current marketing period) as may be specified in such marketing agreement or order.	(B) The Secretary shall terminate any marketing agreement entered into under section 8b, or order issued under this section, at the end of the then current marketing period for such commodity, specified in such marketing agreement or order, whenever he finds that such termination is favored by a majority of the producers who, during a representative period determined by the Secretary, have been engaged in the production for market of the commodity specified in such marketing agreement or order, within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, or who, during such representative period, have been engaged in the production of such commodity for sale within the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement or order: Provided, That such majority have, during such representative period, produced for market more than 50 per centum of the volume of such commodity produced for market within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, or have, during such representative period, produced more than 50 per centum of the volume of such commodity [sold] produced for sale in the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement or order, but such termination shall be effective only if announced on or before such date (prior to the end of the then current marketing period) as may be specified in such marketing agreement or order.
(C) The termination or suspension of any order or amendment thereto or provision thereof, shall not be considered an order within the meaning of this section.	(C) [The termination or suspension] The termination, suspension, or reinstatement of any order or amendment thereto or provision thereof, shall not be considered an order within the meaning of this section. (D) Any order issued in accordance with section 8c shall not be affected by the withdrawal from the marketing agreement by any or all signers thereof in accordance with the provisions of such marketing agreement or by the termination or suspension of the marketing agreement by the Secretary with respect to any or all signers.

Section 7 of S. 3426

The amendment of section 8c (16) (B) contained in section 7 of S. 3426 is the third instance of the same amendment, namely, the substitution of the words "produced for sale" in lieu of the word "sold" wherein provision is made for a producer referendum by volume. The explanation of this amendment has already been discussed in connection with section 8c (B) of the act, page 22, supra.

Section 9 of S. 3426

The amendment contemplated by this section of S. 3426 specifically authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to reinstate either a suspended order or provision thereof whenever he finds that such action will tend to effectuate the declared policy of the act. In other words, it is the counterpart of the authorization already appearing in paragraph (A) of section 8c (16) which provides for the termination or suspension of an order or provision of an order when the same does not tend to effectuate the public policy of the act.

Reason: The wording of the law at present simply provides for a termination or suspension of an order or provision thereof where the Secretary determines that the order or a provision thereof obstructs or does not tend to effectuate the declared policy of the law. This power in all probability carries with it the power to reinstate a termination or suspended order or provision. The authority so to do, however, has been contested in some quarters. The flexibility in administration, which an unquestioned authorization of this kind would give, is of sufficient importance in keeping an order properly adjusted to changing marketing conditions to warrant statutory clarification on this point.

The amendment proposed by this section of S. 3426 is a companion amendment to the previous one. It will place the process of reinstatement of a suspended order or provision thereof on the same procedural basis as the termination or suspension of an order or provision thereof.

Reason: In order to have consistency in context as between paragraphs (A) and (C) of section 8c (16), the particular amendment contained in section 10 of S. 3426 is necessary. As in the case of section 9 of S. 3426, this amendment works a clarification of the existing law insofar as the reinstatement of an order or provision of an order is concerned.

The amendment contemplated by section 11 provides for the insertion of a new paragraph in present section 8c (16) of the act which is to be labeled paragraph (D).

It should be borne in mind that a marketing order under the provisions of section 8c (8) of the act can become effective only in the event (1) handlers of the commodity covered by the order to the extent of 50 percent of the volume thereof enter into a marketing agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture, and (2) two-thirds of the producers of such commodity, either by number or volume approve the issuance of an order.

Section 8c (9) on the other hand permits the issuance of an order in event the required number of handlers fail to sign a marketing agreement, provided the approval of the President is procured and also producer approval.

Section 11 of S. 3426 is designed to amend the law in such way as to clarify the relationship between a marketing agreement as contemplated in section 8c (8) and a marketing order. It accomplishes this by providing that a marketing order, once it is properly issued in accordance with the applicable provisions of the act, namely, handler agreement to a marketing agreement and producer approval of the marketing order, shall not be affected by the withdrawal of any handler as a signatory to the marketing agreement or by the termination or suspension of the marketing agreement by the Secretary of Agriculture as to one or all of the handlers who are parties to the marketing agreement.

Reason: Efforts have been made by handlers in some markets to do by indirection that which the law expressly makes it impossible for them to do directly, namely, withdraw from a marketing agreement so that those who remain or do not withdraw do not constitute the required percentage (50 percent) necessary to the issuance of an order in the first instance. They expect by such procedure to force the termination of the marketing order on the theory that the order is no longer legally operative since one of the requirements of the law under section 8c (8) is not complied with.

While the accomplishment of such an objective appears to be entirely inconsistent with and contrary to the letter as well as the spirit of the Marketing Agreement Act, yet doubt even if by implication should not be left to exist that the act prevents such an accomplishment.

The proposed amendment would definitely preclude an interpretation of the act which renders an order inoperative simply because handlers who are signatories to the marketing agreement withdraw in such number as to leave less than 50 percent of them by volume remaining signatories to the marketing agreement.

It would indeed be an anomalous situation in any market if handlers could sign a marketing agreement and a corresponding order thereafter issue and subsequently a sufficient number of handlers withdraw from the agreement and thereby render the marketing order ineffective because less than 50 percent of the handlers by volume remained in the marketing agreement.

PRESENT LAW

SEC. 8e. In connection with the making of any marketing agreement, or the issuance of any order, if the Secretary finds and proclaims that, as to any commodity specified in such marketing agreement or order, the purchasing power during the base period specified for such commodity in section 2 of this title cannot be satisfactorily determined from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture, the base period, for the purposes of such marketing agreement or order, shall be the post-war period, August 1919–July 1929, or all that portion thereof for which the Secretary finds and proclaims that the purchasing power of such commodity can be satisfactorily determined from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture.

PRESENT LAW WITH PROPOSED AMENDMENT, SECTION 13 OF S. 3426

(New language italicized; language stricken in brackets)

[SEC. 8e. In connection with the making of any marketing agreement or the issuance of any order, if the Secretary finds and proclaims that, as to any commodity specified in such marketing agreement or order, the purchasing power during the base period specified for such commodity in section 2 of this title cannot be satisfactorily determined from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture, the base period, for the purposes of such marketing agreement or order, shall be the post-war period, August 1919–July 1929, or all that portion thereof for which the Secretary finds and proclaims that the purchasing power of such commodity can be satisfactorily determined from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture.]

SEC. 8e. In connection with the making of any marketing agreement or the issuance of any order, if the Secretary finds and proclaims that, as to any agricultural commodity or product thereof specified in such marketing agreement or order, the purchasing power during the entire base period specified in section 2 of this title cannot be satisfactorily determined from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture, the base period, for the purpose of such marketing agreement or order, shall be all that portion thereof for which the Secretary finds and proclaims that the purchasing power of such agricultural commodity or product thereof can be satisfactorily determined from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture. Such proclamation shall remain in full force and effect until amended or revoked by the Secretary.

This section of S. 3426 substitutes an entire new section for existing section 8e of the Marketing Agreement Act.

Reason: The real necessity for this amendment arises by reason of the amendment proposed in section 1 of S. 3426 which changes the base period from the pre-war span of years to the post-war.

As the law presently reads the base period for commodities except tobacco and potatoes is the pre-war period. Under section 8e, however, the Secretary is authorized to employ the whole or a part of the post-war period where satisfactory statistics for the pre-war period are unavailable.

By reason of the change of base period to the post-war span of years, there is no longer need for section 8e in its present form. However, to preserve the authority therein conferred upon the Secretary, it is deemed advisable to amend and reenact the section in the manner proposed.

The section as redrafted will preserve to the Secretary the right now granted to use such portions of the base period for which he finds and proclaims that the purchasing power of the commodity involved can be satisfactorily determined from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture.

The mechanism for using the same remains intact, namely, a finding and proclamation by the Secretary.

Furthermore, the redrafted language provides that such finding and proclamation shall remain in full force and effect until amended or revoked by the Secretary. In this connection it should be pointed out that because of some ambiguity of language, certain litigants have pressed for an interpretation of present section 8e which would impose upon the Secretary repetitious administrative duties, namely, the making of new findings and the issuance of a new proclamation in case of any reinstatement of a suspended order or any amendment of an order. It is essential that this ambiguity be removed and section 13 of S. 3426 accomplishes this purpose.

PRESENT LAW

SEC. 10 (i). The Secretary of Agriculture, upon the request of the duly constituted authorities of any State, is directed, in order to effectuate the declared policy of this title and in order to obtain uniformity in the formulation, administration, and enforcement of Federal and State programs relating to the regulation of the handling of agricultural commodities or products thereof, to confer with and hold joint hearings with the duly constituted authorities of any State, and is authorized to cooperate with such authorities; to accept and utilize, with the consent of the State, such State and local officers and employees as may be necessary; to avail himself of the records and facilities of such authorities; to issue orders (subject to the provisions of section 8c) complementary to orders or other regulations issued by such authorities; and to make available to such State authorities the records and facilities of the Department of Agriculture: Provided, That information furnished to the Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to section 8d (1) hereof shall be made available only to the extent that such information is relevant to transactions within the regulatory jurisdiction of such authorities, and then only upon a written agreement by such authorities that the information so furnished shall be kept confidential by them in a manner similar to that required of Federal officers and employees under the provisions of section 8d (2) hereof.

PRESENT LAW WITH PROPOSED AMENDMENT—SEC. 13 OF S. 3426

(New language italicized; language stricken in brackets)

SEC. 10 (i). The Secretary of Agriculture, upon the request of the duly constituted authorities of any State, is directed, in order to effectuate the declared policy of this title and in order to obtain uniformity in the formulation, administration, and enforcement of Federal and State programs relating to the regulation of the handling of agricultural commodities or products thereof, to confer with and hold joint hearings with the duly constituted authorities of any State, and is authorized to cooperate with such authorities; to accept and utilize, with the consent of the State, such State and local officers and employees as may be necessary; to avail himself of the records and facilities of such authorities; to issue orders (subject to the provisions of section 8c) complementary to orders or other regulations issued by such authorities; and to make available to such State authorities the records and facilities of the Department of Agriculture: Provided, That information furnished to the Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to section 8d (1) hereof shall be made available only to the extent that such information is relevant to transactions within the regulatory jurisdiction of such authorities, and then only upon a written agreement by such authorities that the information so furnished shall be kept confidential by them in a manner similar to that required of Federal officers and employees under the provisions of section 8d (2) hereof: And provided further, That for purposes of ascertaining the approval of favor of producers, required by section 8c, all milk to which the State order and the complementary Federal order apply shall be regarded as the milk covered by the order.

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENT

Provision is made in the present law at section 10 (i) for uniformity of regulation between Federal and State authorities in those markets which may come under the jurisdiction of both governmental authorities by reason of State control programs authorized under State enabling legislation.

The amendment contemplated by section 15 of S. 3426 would amend this section of the act in such way as to definitely specify what group of producers may be considered as eligible to express approval or disapproval of a marketing order in a referendum conducted by the Secretary.

The amendment expressly provides that where a complementary Federal marketing order is up for consideration for a particular market producers covered by both the State marketing order and the proposed complementary Federal order may vote on the issuance of the Federal order.

Reason: As the law is presently drafted a real administrative difficulty is presented by reason of the lack in the law of an adequate proviso prescribing the eligibility of producers who may vote in a referendum conducted for the purpose of ascertaining approval of the issuance of the Federal order. No direction whatsoever appears. Yet in those sections of the law which provide for producer approval, viz, sections 8c (8) and (9), the producers referred to are those who have been engaged in producing the particular commodity covered by the order within the production area covered by the order, or who have been engaged in the production of such commodity for sale in the marketing area. This conceivably embraces producers who are subject to the State marketing order. Therefore, in order to correlate activities and to make for uniformity in the formulation, administration, and enforcement of complementary Federal and State programs, it is deemed essential to incorporate a provision in the law such as the proposed amendment.

PRESENT LAW

SEC. 4. Nothing in this act shall be construed as invalidating any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any regulation relating to, or any provision of, or any act of the Secretary of Agriculture in connection with, any such agreement, license, or order which has been executed, issued, approved, or done under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, or any amendment thereof, but such marketing agreements, licenses, orders, regulations, provisions, and acts are hereby expressly ratified, legalized, and confirmed.

PRESENT LAW WITH PROPOSED AMENDMENT—SEC. 16 OF S. 3426

(New language italicized)

SEC. — Nothing in this act shall be construed as invalidating any marketing agreement or order, or any regulation relating thereto, or any provision thereof, or any act of the Secretary of Agriculture in connection with any such agreement or order which has been executed, issued, approved, or done under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, or any amendment thereof, or under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, or any amendment thereof, but such marketing agreements, orders, regulations, provisions, and act or any amendments thereto are hereby expressly ratified, legalized, and confirmed.

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENT

Section 16 of S. 3426 incorporates into this amendatory bill a section similar in most respects to section 4 of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937.

Reason: This section is incorporated for the same reason that section 4 of the 1937 act was enacted, that is, to negative any implication that the effect of S. 3426, if enacted into law, invalidates or casts doubt on any action heretofore taken under the marketing agreements and orders provisions of the 1937 act.

This section, as was the case of section 4 of the 1937 act, expressly ratifies, legalizes, and confirms action taken under the 1937 law. Judicial sanction for such a provision is to be found in the following, among other judicial decisions: Mattingly v. District of Columbia ((1878), 97 U. S. 687, 690); United States v. Heinzen (206 U. S. 370, 382); Rafferty v. Smith, Bell & Co. ((1921), 257 U. S. 226, 232); Isbrandtsen-Moller Company, Inc., v. United States et al. (No. 307, October term, 1936, U. S. Supreme Court, decided Feb. 1, 1937); and Swayne & Hoyt, Ltd., et al. v. United States (No. 494, October term, 1936, U. S. Supreme Court, decided Mar. 1, 1937).

PRESENT LAW

SEC. 8c (2). Orders issued pursuant to this section shall be applicable only to the following agricultural commodities and the products thereof (except products of naval stores), or to any regional, or market classification of any such commodity or product: Milk, fruits (including pecans and walnuts but not including apples, other than apples produced in the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho, and not including fruits, other than olives, for canning), tobacco, vegetables (not including vegetables, other than asparagus, for canning) soybeans and naval stores as included in the Naval Stores Act and standards established thereunder (including refined or partially refined oleoresin).

PRESENT LAW WITH PROPOSED AMENDMENT—SEC. 18, PAR. (A) OF S. 3426

(New language italicized; language stricken in brackets)

[SEC. 8c (2). Orders issued pursuant to this section shall be applicable only to the following agricultural commodities and the products thereof (except products of naval stores), or to any regional, or market classification of any such commodity or product: Milk, fruits (including pecans and walnuts but not including apples, other than apples produced in the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho, and not including fruits, other than olives, for canning), tobacco, vegetables (not including vegetables, other than asparagus, for canning) soybeans and naval stores as included in the Naval Stores Act and standards established thereunder (including refined or partially refined oleoresin.)]

PRESENT LAW WITH PROPOSED AMENDMENT, ETC.—CON.

Sec. 8c (2). Orders issued pursuant to this section may be applicable to any agricultural, dairy, or horticultural commodity or product thereof, or to any regional, or market classification of any such commodity or product: Provided, That in no event shall such orders apply to apples except apples produced in the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho.

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENT

Section 18, paragraph (a), of S. 3426 amends section 8c (2) of the Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 by striking all of the section which limits the issuance of marketing orders to certain specified agricultural commodities and the products thereof. It would substitute therefor new language giving permissive authority to issue marketing orders for any agricultural, dairy, or horticultural commodity, or products thereof.

The amendatory language is intended to cover all of the commodities covered by existing law and to add to such coverage all other agricultural commodities, including dairy and horticultural commodities. It, therefore, enlarges upon existing law by making it possible for producers and growers of all agricultural commodities to utilize the order provisions of the Marketing Agreement Act. In the case of fruits and vegetables, for example, such amendment extends the existing law to these commodities whether they be marketed in their fresh or canned forms.

Reason: The Marketing Agreement Act is designed to enable producers and handlers of agricultural commodities to work out by agreement advantageous working rules to facilitate orderly marketing. The act is permissive in form and character. The enactment of this amendment making possible the extension of order provisions of the act to additional commodities does not of itself extend the Department of Agriculture into the broad field of regulation of all agricultural commodities. It does make possible, if a sufficient number of growers and producers demand the utilization of the powers provided in the act, that the Secretary use such powers under the standards provided therein. Thus, the amendment merely gives to growers and producers at present excluded by the specific language of the act this privilege of utilizing its provisions when found desirable under its terms.

Many growers and producers have indicated their desire for this legislation in conferences, meetings, and numerous expressions of farm-organization witnesses before the Agricultural Committees of Congress.

The proviso contained in the proposed amendment is a typographical error which should be deleted from the proposed amendment. It so happens that this language did not take into account the bill enacted by the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, Public, No. 98, chapter 157, approved May 31, 1939, which amended the law to provide that orders may be issued for apples produced in the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho.

Sections 8c (8) and (9) of the Marketing Agreement Act are additionally amended by section 17 of S. 3426. This amendment proposes to amend the existing law by eliminating the clauses which require a greater percentage of handler signatures to the marketing agreement and of grower approval to the issuance of an order in the case of California citrus fruit than in the case of any other commodity. These provisions were inserted in the present law by amendments offered by Senator McAdoo at the time the amendments of 1935 were enacted. The reason given for the McAdoo amendment was that in California one organization controlled about 70 percent of the citrus production of the State (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 74th Cong., 1st sess., vol. 79, line 11, p. 11655). The minority were unwilling to rely upon the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture but desired that a veto power be given to 20 percent of the handlers (i. e., shippers as distinguished from growers) or to 25 percent of the growers. The McAdoo amendments were unopposed at the time in the hope that if the minority were given this veto money they would feel a greater responsibility for a successful operation of any citrus-marketing-control program that might thereafter be adopted.

In the case of all other commodities, the requirement is that 50 percent of the handlers sign the marketing agreement and that two-thirds of the growers approve the issuance of an order. The effect of the proposed amendment contained in section 12 of the pending bill will be to make California citrus fruit subject to the same provisions as citrus fruit from other producing areas and as all other commodities on which marketing orders may be issued. It will eliminate the discriminatory provisions of the present law, which are applicable alone to California citrus fruit.

Under the provisions of the act as now written, the desire of a large majority of the citrus industry for effective regulation of marketing may be frustrated by a small minority of handlers. By reason of their veto power through refusal to sign the marketing agreement, such a minority can dictate the terms of the marketing agreement and order. This is true, because unless the signature of at least 80 percent of the handlers can be obtained no marketing agreement or order can be put into effect. This results in a most undemocratic situation.

The elimination of these discriminatory provisions relating to California citrus fruit will simply mean that two-thirds of the industry will make recommendations to the Secretary of Agriculture. The authority to decide and determine what provisions the marketing agreement or order relating to California citrus fruit should contain will be vested entirely in the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary will afford the minority group or groups the opportunity for hearing before him so that all matters recommended by the majority of the producers will be reviewed, and, if necessary, changed for the general good of the industry. It must be clearly apparent that even with the change in the law proposed the Secretary is not in any way required to issue any particular agreement or order that the majority of the producers may desire. The Secretary has complete discretion, within the limits of the law, as to what provisions shall be placed in any marketing agreement or order. The two-thirds of the producers merely have a veto against a proposed regulation becoming effective; they do not have dictatorial powers as to what such a regulation shall provide.

The California Fruit Growers' Exchange is a federation of 198 local associations. Each of the local associations is considered an individual shipper for the purposes of signing a marketing agreement and in the operation of a marketing order. The local association acts on its own initiative in determining whether or not to sign a marketing agreement and may so act in determining whether or not to approve a proposed marketing order. The grower members of the local associations will by their actions finally determine the approval or disapproval of an agreement and order.

Because the citrus industry in California and Arizona is fortunate in having a large cooperative association to handle the marketing problems of producers, it should not be discriminated against in connection with the issuance of Federal programs. Like all true cooperative organizations, grower membership is on a voluntary basis. Each grower and each association has a withdrawal privilege which may be exercised annually. Authority is delegated only upon authorization by the growers.

For the foregoing reasons, the existing provisions of the statute which discriminate against California citrus fruit are unjust. They should be eliminated in the manner proposed.

PRESENT LAW	PRESENT LAW WITH PROPOSED AMENDMENT—SEC. 16, PARA. (B) OF S. 3426 (New language italicized; language stricken in brackets)
SEC. 8c (6). In the case of fruits (including pecans and walnuts but not including apples, other than apples produced in the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho, and not including fruits, other than olives, for canning) and their products, tobacco and its products, vegetables (not including vegetables, other than asparagus, for canning) and their products, soybeans and their products, and naval stores as included in the Naval Stores Act and standards established thereunder (including refined or partially refined oleoresin), orders issued pursuant to this section shall contain one or more of the following terms and conditions, and (except as provided in subsection (7)) no others:	SEC. 8c (6). [In the case of fruits (including pecans and walnuts but not including apples, other than apples produced in the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho, and not including fruits, other than olives, for canning) and their products, tobacco and its products, vegetables (not including vegetables, other than asparagus for canning) and their products, soybeans and their products, and naval stores as included in the Naval Stores Act and standards established thereunder (including refined or partially refined oleoresin)], In the case of agricultural or horticultural commodities and the products thereof, other than milk and its products, orders issued pursuant to this section shall contain one or more of the following terms and conditions, and (except as provided in subsection (7)) no others:
(Hereafter in section 8c (6) is enumerated the terms and conditions.)	(Hereafter in section 8c (6) is enumerated the terms and conditions.)

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENT

The amendment contemplated by section 18, paragraph (b), of S. 3426 is simply to harmonize the context of the law as it will read after amendment.

Reason: Section 8c (6) of the law, at paragraph 1, repeats the language of section 8c (2) of the law which specifies the agricultural commodities for which marketing orders may be issued. By reason of the amendment of section 8c (2) in the manner proposed by paragraph (a) of section 18 of S. 3426, namely, to embrace all commodities rather than the limited few in the present law, present section 8c (6) at paragraph 1 would be thrown out of balance. This is necessarily so for the reason that section 8c (6) pertains to terms and conditions which may be incorporated into marketing orders for products other than milk and its products. If left to read as it presently does, then section 8c (6) becomes applicable to milk and its products which is not the sense of the present law. Hence, it is necessary to revise paragraph 1 of section 8c (6) to exclude specifically milk and its products from the operation thereof and thereby preserve the present intent of the law.

Respectfully submitted.

NATIONAL COOPERATIVE MILK PRODUCERS' FEDERATION.
AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION.
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF FARMER COOPERATIVES.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, in that connection I desire to state that the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], who has just spoken, worked long and faithfully, day after day, as chairman of the subcommittee, giving everyone interested in this measure ample opportunity to be heard. Five farm organizations were particularly interested in the proposed legislation. They are still interested in the enactment of the two sections which I have asked to have eliminated from the bill. They have prepared a statement in which they join in the request that these two sections be dropped from the bill, and have requested me to reintroduce them as a separate measure, which I have now done.

I ask unanimous consent that the statement of these organizations—the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, the National Grange, the National Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation, and the California Fruit Growers' Exchange—be included in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 17, 1940.

Hon. GUY M. GILLETTE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GILLETTE: In view of the anticipated adjournment of Congress and the extreme necessity of securing the early passage of certain perfecting amendments to the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 contained in the bill S. 3426, the major farm groups supporting this legislation now recommend that the first 14 sections of the bill be segregated from sections 15 and 16 thereof and acted upon immediately.

The first 14 sections of the bill relate either to marketing agreements and orders for milk or to general administrative procedure. They are urgently needed to perfect the law against further costly and extended litigation. No objection was made to these amendments in committee hearing.

Our recommendation is made with the sincere hope that these sections of the bill may receive the immediate consideration of the Senate. We consider favorable action on these amendments to be vitally essential to insure the continued effective operation of the law with respect to milk and specialty crops now marketed under agreement and order programs.

With respect to sections 15 and 16 of the bill, we desire to again urge that these amending provisions be enacted into law by Congress at an early subsequent date. These sections provide as follows: Section 15 deals with the elimination of that proviso in the law which requires 80 percent handler approval of marketing agreements and 75 percent producer approval of marketing orders in the case of California citrus fruits. Section 16 provides for the extension of the orderly marketing provisions of the law to all agricultural commodities.

In other words, while we recommend that the first 14 sections of the bill be acted upon at once in order to insure the passage of amendments needed to perfect the machinery of the law against legal attack and unfortunate administrative delays, we wish to stress the fact that the other proposed amendments should be adopted at the earliest possible date in order to give the benefits of the legislation to many producers who cannot now take advantage of the legislation, as well as to remove the discrimination existing in the case of California citrus fruits. The committee hearing record is replete with illustrations of the need for orderly marketing programs in the field of many agricultural commodities not now covered by the law. We believe that the marketing problems confronting such farmers should receive timely consideration by Congress.

Respectfully yours,

EDW. A. O'NEAL.
Representing American Farm Bureau Federation.
EZRA T. BENSON,
Representing National Council of Farmer Cooperatives.
FRED BRENCKMAN,
Representing the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry.
CHAS. W. HOLMAN,
Representing the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation.
KARL LOOS,
Representing California Fruit Growers Exchange.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator give a brief statement of what is in the bill?

Mr. GILLETTE. I shall be very glad to do so.

The 14 sections which remain in the bill deal entirely with the marketing of milk or with changes in administrative procedure which have been made necessary because of litigation. Their only purpose is to avoid the expense of litigation and the expense of administration. As to the two sections which have been dropped, which are controversial, section 15 deals entirely with the marketing of citrus fruits in the State of California, and applies to no other section of the country. Section 16, which deals with an extension of the right to make marketing agreements and orders with reference to all agricultural commodities, met with considerable opposition, and is one of the sections which on my motion has just been stricken from the bill. To the 14 sections which remain, there is no objection whatever. They all deal with technical matters of administration in the marketing of milk.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair be pardoned for asking a question of the Senator? Does the bill interfere with any reasonable regulation which is put into effect by municipalities for the marketing of milk?

Mr. GILLETTE. By municipalities?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am convinced that it does not, Mr. President.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVITATION TO SENATOR SCHWARTZ TO ATTEND WILLKIE MEETING

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a communication from the Minnehaha County Republican Committee, Sioux Falls, S. Dak., dated September 14, 1940, reading as follows:

DEAR MR. SCHWARTZ: I am taking it for granted that you will be with us here in Sioux Falls on September 26 when Wendell Willkie will be our honored guest. It is bound to be a red-letter day for Sioux Falls and South Dakota and we want you to participate with us in this event.

Present arrangements call for Mr. Willkie's appearance and talk at the Howard Wood Field between 11 and 11:30 a. m. Since this hour is the most convenient of any of his stops in our State, we are anticipating an overflow crowd.

I will look forward to seeing you personally here in Sioux Falls on the 26th.

Sincerely yours,

CLAUDE A. HAMILTON, County Chairman.

Mr. President, the energetic Republican county chairman of Minnehaha County is coursing far afield, geographically and politically, in mailing me, postage paid, an invitation to attend the Willkie séance at Sioux Falls, S. Dak. All my recollections of Sioux Falls are pleasant, and I assume the invitation is but one expression of the boundless hospitality of that fine city.

However, Mr. President, none could profit by my listening to the seductive voice of Mr. Willkie. I am confirmed in my belief that the reelection of President Roosevelt is best for our country. If I were wavering in that belief, listening to Mr. Willkie would only resolve my doubt and confirm anew my allegiance to the President, and that would not please Republican County Chairman Hamilton.

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have a clerical amendment to offer. On page 151, line 9, after the word "any", I move to insert "facility." It is a clarifying amendment. The amendment is proposed so as to include, for the purposes of amortization, drydocks, channels, airports, and similar facilities which are not strictly buildings, or do not constitute the installation of equipment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 151, line 9, after the word "any", it is proposed to insert the word "facility."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I have another technical, clerical amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 134, line 10, in the committee amendment, after the word "exchange", it is proposed to insert "multiplied by the number of days in the taxable year remaining after the day of the exchange."

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered for the purpose of passing upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz
Andrews	Ellender	King	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Frazier	La Follette	Sheppard
Austin	George	Lee	Shipstead

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], are necessarily absent.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is absent on account of sickness.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], are necessarily absent.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the barriers between the State and the Federal Governments are reciprocal. The one is equally binding as the other upon its proper government. I think the distinction and the description of the field in which each government is supreme are very tersely and exactly stated by Attorney General Staples, of Virginia, when testifying before the special committee. He said:

The supremacy of the Federal Government in its own proper sphere and field is delineated in the Constitution, we most cheerfully concede, but just as earnestly do we insist upon the supremacy of the government of our State in its proper field as established by that instrument.

The necessity of keeping that distinction is very well illustrated in some testimony which appeared in the hearings before the House Committee on Ways and Means in 1939, dealing with the subject of tax-exempt securities. On page 109 thereof appears the statement of Frederick Hollowell, secretary to Morris S. Tremaine, comptroller of the State of New York, whose experience and special study qualified him as an authority on the subject. From the statement I quote the following:

There are, for example, more than 900 townships in New York State, as well as over 500 villages and several thousand school districts, all of them potential issuers of bonds.

But even the names of these units, many of them with only a few hundred inhabitants, are unfamiliar in the financial markets. What investor, for example, could be expected to know anything about the capacity or willingness of such towns as Niskayuna, Horicon, or Coeymans, N. Y., to pay their debts? For this reason, tax exemption is virtually the only trade-mark that gives such bonds any market at all. Therefore, if the tax-exempt feature is removed many of them may be unable to do any public financing, even though intrinsically they may be just as much entitled to credit as some of our big cities.

Take the large cities. I read from the testimony of Mayor LaGuardia, a short extract appearing on page 309:

I have not changed my views on this subject. You gentlemen will recall—and most of you were here—that in February 1924 this matter was up before the House. I at that time had had an experience of 2 years as a municipal official, having left the Sixty-sixth Congress to serve an unexpired term as president of the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York.

With that brief experience I could readily see how impracticable and destructive any plan would be to suddenly tax these securities, and I opposed the resolution.

In that opposition I was not alone. I followed the great men of the House in that instance. I followed the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. DOUGHTON, who voted against the resolution. The present Speaker of the House, Mr. Bankhead, voted against the resolution. The present majority leader, Mr. RAYBURN, voted against the resolution. Mr. STEAGALL, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, voted against the resolution. HATTON SUMNERS, now the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, voted against the resolution. LEA, of California, now the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, voted against the resolution. VINSON of Georgia, now the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, voted against it. MARVIN JONES, now the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, voted against the resolution. OTIS BLAND, of Virginia, now chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, voted against it. Mr. MANSFIELD, now chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, voted against it. JOHN RANKIN, now chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, voted against it. FRITZ LANHAM, of Texas, now chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, also voted against it. They and other outstanding Members of the House, such as DREWRY, CROSSER, COLLINS, JOHNSON of Texas, SULLIVAN, WEAVER, CANNON, and WOODRUM of Virginia all voted against it.

Among our colleagues at the time who also voted against this, and who are now Members of the Senate, are such men as BARKLEY, of Kentucky; HAYDEN, of Arizona; HILL, of Alabama; BYRNES, of South Carolina; CONNALLY, of Texas; THOMAS of Oklahoma; and TYDINGS, of Maryland.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas intends to vote now as he did then.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. He has had no other intention at any time.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no doubt at all that the Senator from Texas will vote that way.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if this is to be turned into an experience meeting, I desire to say that I shall vote the same way I voted at that time.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am glad to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. We might as well make it unanimous. I wish to say that I intend to vote now as I did then.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator from Maryland. I continue to read:

I recall the debate very distinctly. That was a sort of soak-the-rich movement headed by Andrew Mellon. But we all remember what was the real purpose.

This is what happened, gentlemen; this is how the whole thing started.

Just prior to the World War, I mean in 1914, just about that time, or before that time, municipalities were in good financial condition. The science of municipal government had developed, and new types of administrators were taking office here and there in the United States. Many cities that were being exploited by private water companies, by private utilities, power and transit companies, were seeing the light and were taking over these utilities.

Just about that time there was an epidemic of the taking over of waterworks, followed by the Ohio cities taking over their trolley systems.

Then the war came along and sort of interrupted this movement. We came back after the war, and got back into civil activities, and we are taking it up again. There was a movement in my city at the time to take over the rapid transit, and the utilities conceived the idea that they would block the market for the municipal securities. That was the origin of the resolution which we considered on February 7 and 8, 1924, and this talk at the time of soaking the rich was just plain, absolute "bunk."

Mr. President, necessity is the mother of the rule. The immunity of each of these governments from taxation by the other is the result of dire necessity that an essential function of government shall not be under the control of a distinct and separate and different government. It is of the very essence of sovereignty, that a government be able to control its own financing and be not subject to interference by some other government in performing that particular function.

The Court has recognized continually this equality of supremacy between the States, each being supreme in its own political field.

In Education Films Corporation against Ward, Mr. Justice Stone explained:

The necessity for marking those boundaries occurs out of our constitutional system under which both the Federal and the State Governments exercise their authority over one people within the territorial limits of the same State. The purpose is the preservation to each government within its own sphere of the freedom to carry on those affairs committed to it by the Constitution without undue interference by the other. As a matter of fact, in McCulloch v. Maryland, in which Chief Justice Marshall has announced the immunity of the Federal Government, he also recognizes the possibility of the reciprocal constitutional barrier to Federal taxation of the State immunity.

The Pittman case is the last word. It is known as the case of Pittman against Home Owners' Loan Corporation, a very suggestive name. It brings to mind at once the question what the effect of the taxation of governmental securities would be upon the social activities of the Government. How will these agencies of government carry on if their burden is to be increased by taxation of all their borrowing power? In the case to which I refer, Mr. Justice Hughes speaks of the protection of the law over the different governments and governmental agencies in this manner:

In the exercise of this power to protect the lawful activities of its agencies, Congress has the dominant authority—

Notice that word "dominant"— which necessarily inheres—

In what, Mr. President?—

in its action within the national field. (Citing cases.) The exercise of this protective power in relation to State taxation has many illustrations. (Citing cases.) In this instance—

That is, in the case of Pittman against Home Owners' Loan Corporation—

Congress has undertaken to safeguard the operations of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation by providing the described immunity. As we have said, we construe this provision as embracing and prohibiting the tax in question.

That decision was rendered November 6, 1939, and is a reapplication of the principle which was first enunciated in McCulloch against Maryland, and which has been subsequently enunciated many times.

I comment upon the peculiar condition in which a State or municipality would be if we should treat the sixteenth amendment as extending the power to tax to something which was not taxable before that amendment was adopted, namely, the securities or loans of States and municipalities. What kind of security would there be if that immunity were only permissive, or if it existed solely by the grace of Congress? What possible plans could there be for long-term bonds, or for the continued existence of a municipality or any other political subdivision, such as a school district, if it always had to make its sales of bonds and other securities with the possibility that tomorrow Congress might levy a tax—first, the original tax, the first one ever to be levied, and then such taxes as it might see fit to levy in the future? Once the camel's nose is under the tent, his whole body can get in. If we now say by our vote on this amendment that Congress, by a mere majority, may so far amend the Constitution as to permit such taxation at all, we admit a principle which would enable Congress to tax all such securities—not only future securities, but also securities of the past.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is the Senator aware that many Senators are now contending that we have the power to tax, and ought to tax, outstanding issues of securities?

Mr. AUSTIN. I was not aware of that fact.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I recall, I have heard Senators express such views.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator for suggesting it. The state of mind which can accept the idea of an act of Congress imposing a burden upon a promise to pay money which was issued in the form of a bond some years ago is utterly intolerable to me. It seems to me that the absurdity of the position that the sixteenth amendment added any new taxing power is still further emphasized when we see it through to its logical effect. If the contention be sound that it added the power to tax what was not before taxable, merely because it added the words "from whatever source derived," then, of course, it is an admission that the Federal Government may tax the revenue of a State. It may tax the taxes of a State. It may tax the revenue of a municipality.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I make this remark because several Senators have recently come into the Chamber who were not here earlier in the day. Of course, the Senator does not wish to leave the impression that the pending amendment in any way proposes a tax on presently outstanding issues of States or municipal governments, or of the Federal Government. I think the Senator will readily agree with me when I say that the special committee unanimously reported against any tax of that kind.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am glad to have that statement by the distinguished Senator. I do not think my remarks would quite bear that interpretation.

What we do here today will not bind the Congress of tomorrow. If we once break through the barrier which for 150 years has been supposed to exist, the Congress of tomorrow may tax bonds and securities which were issued in the past. I interpret the amendment as taxing an existing obligation in this way: I refer to an obligation which is not yet due. Perhaps it is to become due in 5 years. A municipality sees fit to refund it for 50 years, and thus gain the advantages of refunding. The amendment would tax the old debt after the maturity of the old bond. That is, the old bond would be exempt from taxation up to the date of maturity; but after that time the same debt would have to bear this burden.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. It would tax the same debt in its refunded form.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct. I thank the Senator from Maine.

My time is passing, and I wish to try to cover the point that the sixteenth amendment does not add a new power of taxation. That amendment reads:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Never has it been allowed to be interpreted as now claimed. In all the cases which have gone up to the Supreme Court, not one single judgment has given it that interpretation. Those who have discussed it have made it perfectly clear that the words "from whatever source derived" modify the phrase "without apportionment."

Let me hastily list the cases which have been decided on this subject since the sixteenth amendment was adopted.

Evans v. Gore (253 U. S. 245 (1920)), opinion by Mr. Justice Van Devanter. Income tax on salary of Federal judge held an unconstitutional diminution of his salary.

Of course, that part of it has been overruled since; but the point is that as to the sixteenth amendment it held: Sixteenth amendment carefully examined and held not to remedy this defect despite words "from whatever source derived." No new power conferred by amendment.

The next case is that of Metcalf and Eddy v. Mitchell (269 U. S. 514 (1926)). The opinion was written by Mr. Justice Stone. It held: Federal taxation of income of independent contractors derived from contracts from State government held unconstitutional; burden on State held too indirect.

The next case is that of National Life Insurance Co. v. United States (277 U. S. 508 (1928)). I am taking the cases in chronological order. Held unconstitutional to deny deduction from gross income to the extent that taxpayer received income from exempt securities; refers to immunity of State bonds as a "settled doctrine." Mr. Justice Brandeis said:

> The tax-exempt privilege is a feature always reflected in the market price of bonds. The investor pays for it.

I am told that it was recently so reflected in St. Louis, Mo., where a bond issue, on the basis of bids submitted to the city, cost that municipality $48,000 more than it would have cost had not this amendment been pending. The uncertainty created by the pendency of the amendment caused the owner of a little home in St. Louis, in addition to taxes, to contribute to the $48,000 burden on this one transaction.

That was in 1928. In 1931 Willcutts v. Bunn (282 U. S. 216), Hughes, Chief Justice; constitutional to tax profit on sale of exempt municipal bonds, distinguished taxation of income.

New York ex rel. Cohn v. Graves (200 U. S. 308 (1937)), opinion by Justice Stone—Justice Hughes, Brandeis, and Roberts concurring—State tax on income of resident for realty located in another State held unconstitutional. Pollock case distinguished and reaffirmed.

Hale v. Iowa State Board (302 U. S. 95 (1937)), Cardozo, J.—Hughes, Stone, Brandeis, Roberts, Black concurring—State tax on income from its own bonds held constitutional, though bonds were issued as exempt. Decision based on point that exemption was intended only from property taxes and not income taxes. Pollock case distinguished and reaffirmed.

James v. Dravo Contracting Co. (302 U. S. 134 (1937)), Hughes, Chief Justice—Stone, Brandeis, Cardozo, Black concurring—Federal tax on gross income of one company contracting independently with State government held constitutional. Bond immunity very clearly reaffirmed.

> Vital considerations are * * * involved respecting the permanent relation of a government to investors in its securities and its ability to maintain its credit.

Now we come to Helvering v. Mountain Producers' Corporation (303 U. S. 376), decided in 1938. We are getting down pretty near to the present time, and, certainly since 1913 when the sixteenth amendment was adopted, every case I have read denies the interpretation that the words "from whatever source derived" added to the taxing power.

Helvering against Mountain Producers' Co. holds, in effect, that Federal tax on income from a lease with a State government is constitutional.

Helvering v. Gerhardt (304 U. S. 405 (1938)), Stone, J.—State employees held subject to Federal income tax. Burden indirect and conjectural. Bond immunity distinguished.

> To tax income received by a private investor from State bonds, and thus threaten impairment of the borrowing power of the State.

Graves v. New York ex rel. O'Keefe (306 U. S. 466) (1939), Stone, judge, rendering opinion of the court—State tax on salary of Federal employee held constitutional. Burden indirect and conjectual.

O'Malley v. Woodrough (307 U. S. 277) (1939), Frankfurter, judge, overruling; Evans against Gore insofar as that case held that an income tax on a judge's salary is an unconstitutional diminution. Not on ground of sixteenth amendment.

And finally Pittmann v. H. O. L. C. (308 U. S. 21 (1939), Hughes, Chief Justice—State recording tax on H. O. L. C. mortgage held unconstitutional. Federal statute included express exemption.

> A power to create implies a power to preserve (and) the power to protect.

That is what the immunity is for.

I wish to refer again to the Helvering-Gerhardt case for a more complete statement of the principle enunciated by

Mr. Justice Stone. It is as follows, and appears on page 8 of this advance opinion of May 16, 1938:

In tacit recognition of the limitation which the very nature of our Federal system imposes on State immunity from taxation in order to avoid an ever-expanding encroaching upon the Federal taxing power, this court has refused to enlarge the immunity substantially beyond those limits marked out in Collector v. Day, supra.

Note this—

It has been sustained—

What has been sustained? This immunity, this protective power.

It has been sustained where, as in Collector against Day, the function involved was one thought to be essential to the maintenance of a State government, as where the attempt was to tax income received from the investments of a municipal subdivision of a State, United States v. Railroad Corporation (17 Wall. 322)—

Which I have cited—

to tax income received by a private investor from State bonds and thus threaten impairment of the borrowing power of the State, Pollock v. Farmer's Loan and Trust Co. (157 U. S. 429); cf. Weston v. Charleston, supra (465–466); or to tax the manufacture and sale to a municipal corporation of equipment for its police force, Indian Motocycle Co. v. United States (283 U. S. 570).

That is an excellent exposition of the principle involved here. What is the immunity?

In James v. Dravo Contracting Co. (302 U. S. 134, 152–153), by Chief Justice Hughes, with Justices Stone, Brandeis, Cardozo, and Black concurring, there is a statement to similar effect:

There is no ineluctable logic which makes the doctrine of immunity with respect to Government bonds applicable to the earnings of an independent contractor rendering services to the Government. That doctrine recognizes the direct effect of a tax which "would operate on the power to borrow before it is exercised" (Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., supra) and which would directly affect the Government's obligation as a continuing security. Vital considerations are there involved respecting the permanent relations of the Government to investors in its securities and its ability to maintain its credit—considerations which are not found in connection with contracts made from time to time for the services of independent contractors.

To what does the immunity extend? It extends to that function or activity of government that is essential to its existence as a State, and, when it substantially burdens that function or activity, it is a violation of the immunity. All have conceded without exception, witnesses supporting the views of the majority as well as those holding the views of the minority, that taxation of future issues of States and municipalities and their political subdivisions is a burden upon the essential function of government. Now, I should like to take a short time——

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired. The Senator has 30 minutes more on the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Chair.

Now I should like to spend a little time on a familiar practice, which many times I have heard being employed; and that is when we want to find out what a Congress that preceded us had some time meant by its words, to go into the record of what took place and try to get a current and practical interpretation of it by those who were its sponsors.

The first question that was raised respecting the meaning of the sixteenth amendment was raised by the then Governor of the State of New York, Mr. Hughes, our present Chief Justice, whom we all respect and for whose judgment we have the greatest reverence. Governor Hughes, in a message to the New York Legislature, voiced certain fears regarding the possible future interpretation of the amendment. He pointed out that if the words "from whatever source derived" were read in cold literality, and stripped from the context and constitutional framework, they might be interpreted so broadly as to indicate an intention to tax State and municipal bonds. What he voiced was a fear that a very careful and prudent lawyer acting as the chief executive of the State of New York might very well express. They were considering then the ratification of the sixteenth amendment. Today, 30 years later, we find that the fears then expressed by the Governor have become real. We see Congress considering to a tax bill an amendment advanced by those who support the very theory that the sixteenth amendment added new power to tax and enabled the Congress to tax the securities of States and municipalities. But also today we are witnesses of the fact that the fears voiced by Governor Hughes are not regarded by him as well founded. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States now makes it certain to us that his fears were unfounded, and that the principle of immunity of the two governments from interference by each other in this essential field of their respective operations still lives; it has been respected by each of them through all these years and sustained by the Supreme Court which has passed on this question.

I will later refer to some of the very distinct language of the Chief Justice covering that very point, but I wish to deal with the utterances provoked in Congress by those fears which were expressed by the Governor of New York. Immediately afterward, Senator Borah rose on the floor of the Senate and challenged and controverted the fears voiced by Governor Hughes. In a speech which is famous, made on February 10, 1910, found in volume 44 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at pages 1694–1695, Senator Borah stated, among other things, as follows:

The words upon which the Governor lays stress are "from whatever source derived," he believing them to include incomes from the sources I have suggested.

I submit for the consideration of the Senate, first, that this amendment, if adopted, will add nothing to the power of the National Government to lay and collect taxes in the way of power; that the power of the National Government at the present time, as I have said, is full, complete, unlimited, and unfettered, save as to exports from the States, which has nothing to do with the argument here.

It is true that there are two rules with reference to the manner in which the Congress will exercise the power—that of uniformity and that of apportionment—but as to the power itself, putting aside for the moment the manner of its exercise, I submit that the power is at the present time vested in Congress without any limitation, unfettered in every sense of the term.

The Senator specifically denied that the amendment dealt with a grant of new power, in the following language:

The amendment did not deal, does not purport to deal, and was not intended to deal with the question of power. It intended to deal, and does deal, alone with the manner of exercising that power which is already complete, that which is already without any limit. The sole obstacle to be removed by those who sought to change the Constitution was that of apportionment. No one has ever contended that it was not within the power of Congress to lay a tax upon incomes. That power has belonged to Congress from its organization, under the original taxing power of Congress. Whether apportioned or unapportioned was a matter of discussion, and concerning which courts and lawyers differed; but the power to impose an income tax upon all property, "from whatever source derived," was never doubted, so far as I know, by either court or lawyers in this country.

In summing up, Senator Borah said:

That the proposed amendment adds nothing to the taxing power of the National Government. This power was complete, unfettered, plenary before. It can be no more than that should this proposed amendment be adopted.

This is directly contrary to what the Department of Justice now argues.

Continuing, Senator Borah said:

The words "from whatever source" add nothing to the force of the amendment. It would, in constitutional parlance, be just the same if it said "to lay and collect taxes on incomes without apportionment," for who could then say that you would not have the right to lay taxes upon all incomes? The present taxing power would not be a particle stronger if it stated "to lay and collect taxes upon all property from whatever source."

To construe the proposed amendment—

Mr. President, I want to have this statement gain all the probative force that it can have. This is the meat of the thing. Senator Borah said:

To construe the proposed amendment so as to enable us to tax the instrumentalities of the State would do violence to the rules laid down by the Supreme Court for a hundred years, wrench the whole Constitution from its harmonious proportions, and destroy the object and purpose for which the whole instrument was framed.

That is a true Borahesque description of the probable consequence of this breaking down of the barrier which maintains a Federal system here, and helps to maintain an indestructible union of indestructible states.

I shall not weary the Senate by reading further from that memorable address. I merely wish to comment, in passing, that this was a current interpretation, made at the time the instrument was being considered by the several States.

Lately, on October 17, 1938, we have from Senator Borah, not long before his unfortunate passing, a letter to the attorney general of Connecticut, as follows:

DEAR GENERAL MCLAUGHLIN: I understand from the press that you are greatly interested in a matter which will come before the next Congress, to wit, the taxing of State securities and the instrumentalities of the States. I also understand that some 39 attorneys general have formed an organization in the way of opposing this proposition.

I am very much interested in the subject and have been for years.

Can you advise me as to this organization and who its president, or chairman, may be? I should like to cooperate with any organization, or movement, of that kind.

In the first place, I do not think Congress would have the power to tax these securities and instrumentalities of the States without a constitutional amendment. In the second place, as a matter of policy, aside from the constitutional question, it is unsound and would be a disaster to the States and, I am quite sure also, a disappointment to the National Government.

Will you advise me whether there is an organization seeking to deal with this matter; and if so, who its chairman, or president, may be?

Thanking you in advance, I am,

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM E. BORAH.

Mr. President, the evidence, fairly considered, relating to the economic effect—to say nothing about the political effect—and the social effect of this amendment, if carried into operation, shows that it would indeed be disappointing to the Federal Government. The evidence shows that it would cost immense sums of additional operating expense to the Federal Government for many years. It is, of course, theoretically possible that in a long period of time we should work ourselves into a position in which the added cost would be less than the income from interest.

There were others. What did the author of the bill, Mr. Norris Brown, the Senator who introduced the resolution leading to the sixteenth amendment, say about his own resolution? Having been excited to say something about it for the first time by this query raised by the Governor of New York—mind you, nobody theretofore had had any thought that the interpretation could be put upon it that it added any power to tax—he said, after quoting the message of Governor Hughes:

Before entering upon a discussion of the question it is encouraging to recall that, so far, of all the Governors of the States who have up to this time addressed their legislatures—

And that time was February 23, 1910—

on the subject, Governor Hughes stands alone in his fight against the amendment. Alabama, Ohio, Virginia, New Jersey, and other States have Governors who not only favor conferring the power but favor the proposed amendment which, if adopted, confers the power.

Like Senator Borah, Senator Norris Brown suggested that Governor Hughes' fears were ill-founded, saying:

It is a very significant fact that this amendment which was pending in Congress for days and was the subject of discussion by Congress and the press should never have met this criticism while it was pending. In its present form it had the support of a unanimous Senate and a practically unanimous House of Representatives, who were all, judged by their votes, in favor of conferring this power on Congress, and yet no one in Congress ever suggested any change in the language of the resolution or proposed an amendment thereto to cover the objection now made.

Nor did any distinguished Governor from any of the 46 States, all of whom are now very loud in their protestations that the Government should have the power to tax incomes without apportionment, ever suggest that the amendment should have been modified in form in any respect. In this body the State of New York enjoys representation of the very highest character and most eminent ability, and yet New York on the roll call, as shown in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, was in favor of this amendment as it passed Congress, and was silent as to any suggestion that the language was faulty. I would say in passing that I have greater regard for New York in the Senate than I have for New York out of the Senate on this question.

And then the introducer of the amendment made this statement:

The legal effect of the amendment as to whether or not it will allow, if adopted, incomes arising from State and municipal securities to be taxed was argued in the Senate the other day with great force by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah]. I will not reopen that phase of the subject at this time further than to say that his conclusion, in the judgment of many able lawyers, is sustained by a fair interpretation of the Constitution construed as a whole. * * *

The amendment does not alter or modify the relation today existing between the States and the Federal Government. That relation will remain the same under the amendment as it is today without the amendment.

It is conceded by all that the Government cannot, under the present Constitution, tax State securities or State instrumentalities.

That is very definite

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator from Idaho made the principal argument at the time of the consideration of the Senate joint resolution, along the lines the Senator from Vermont now takes, but it is rather strange and singular that in 1933, when the Clark amendment to the National Recovery Act was before the Senate, the Clark amendment being one which imposed a tax not only on State and Federal bonds, to be issued in the future, but also on then outstanding bonds, the amendment received the affirmative vote of the senior Senator from Idaho, Mr. Borah.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont is not able to respond to what appears like a claim of inconsistency, and, of course, I am not going to undertake to account for that vote. It may be that the Senator from Idaho was fully aware of the import of his act at that time, and it is of course possible that his vote was cast at such a juncture in the parliamentary proceedings that the significance given to it may not have been what he intended.

Mr. President, I have only a few moments, and I desire to call attention to others who currently interpreted the amendment in the same way. Senator Elihu Root said:

Much as I respect the opinion of the Governor of the State, I cannot agree with the view expressed in his special message of January 5, and as I advocated in the Senate the resolution to submit the proposed amendment, it seems appropriate that I should state my view of its effect.

Then he read the amendment, and further on stated:

The objection made to the amendment is that this will confer upon the National Government the power to tax incomes derived from bonds issued by the States or under the authority of the States and will place the borrowing capacity of the State and its governmental agencies at the mercy of the federal taxing power.

I do not find in the amendment any such meaning or effect. I do not consider that the amendment in any degree whatever will enlarge the taxing power of the National Government or will have any effect except to relieve the exercise of that taxing power from the requirement that the tax shall be apportioned among the several States. The effect of the amendment will be, in my view, the same as if it said, "The United States may lay a tax on incomes without apportioning the tax, and this shall be applicable whatever the source of the income subjected to the tax," leaving the question "What incomes are subject to national taxation?" to be determined by the same principles and rules which are now applicable to the determination of that question.

There is more of what Senator Root said, but I must omit it. I think I have about 3 minutes left. How much time have I left, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 9 minutes left.

Mr. AUSTIN. In a message to the New Jersey Legislature, dated February 7, 1910, John Franklin Fort, Governor of New Jersey, said:

Nor am I inclined to accept the statement that the Supreme Court of the United States might construe the words "from whatever source derived," as found in the pending amendment, as justifying the taxing of the securities of any other taxing power.

On February 10 Senator Brown, referring to the message of Governor Fort of New Jersey, said:

It cheers our hearts to read in the press that President Taft agrees with the Governor of New Jersey (Fort), who, in a message to his legislature February 7, and since the New York message was transmitted, took immediate and direct issue with the Governor of New York.

Mr. President, in my own opinion, if I had doubts about this matter, I would give considerable weight to the current and practical interpretation made by the men who were engaged in enacting the legislation, and I feel I must consider the distinguished character of these men. They were statesmen of the highest quality; these men are famous in our history; their word has attached to it that thing in logic which we call the "illusion of a great name"; but, better than anything else, their reasoning is probative. This did not increase the power of the Federal Government in any way at all; it merely determined the question about apportionment and settled a question which was raised by some of the Court decisions.

In the Pollock case the Court said:

The evil to be remedied was avowedly and manifestly the incapacity of the National Government resulting from the decision that income practically could not be taxed when derived either from real estate or from personal property, although it could be taxed when derived from business or occupation.

The terms of the amendment are apt to cure the evil and to take away from the different classes of income considered by the Court a practical immunity from taxation based upon the source from which they were derived.

Thus we see that Senators Borah and Root, both exceedingly able constitutional lawyers and ardent proponents of the amendment, challenged and controverted the fears expressed by Governor Hughes. Moreover, we find that Senators Borah and Root were joined by Senator Brown, who introduced the amendment, and even Professor Seligman of Columbia University, who ardently urged Congress to enact the income-tax amendment, joined in explaining that the interpretation of the amendment feared by Governor Hughes was ill founded.

The Court has already interpreted the sixteenth amendment. Let no man doubt that. All one has to do is to read the case of Brushaber against Union Pacific Railroad Co., Stanton against Baltic Mining Co., Peck & Co. against Lowe, Willcutts against Bunn, Eisner against Macomber, Metcalf against Mitchell, Evans against Gore, and National Life Insurance Co. against United States.

As recently as 1937 Roswell Magill, former Under Secretary of the Treasury, said of these precedents:

The Court has many times indicated, however, that in its opinion the sixteenth amendment did not extend the taxing power to new subjects, but simply put at rest the contention that an income tax, being a direct tax on property, must be apportioned.

In an article in the Yale Law Journal, Professor Magill said:

Whether its expressions (i. e., the Supreme Court's in Brushaber, Evans against Gore, etc.), are dicta or decisions, the Court has come to the conclusion, thoughtfully considered, that if these items were not taxable by the Federal Government before 1913, they were not taxable after.

In the Stanton case, the court said:

The provisions of the sixteenth amendment conferred no new power of taxation.

In the Peck case, a unanimous Court said:

As pointed out in recent decisions, it—the sixteenth amendment—does not extend the taxing power to new or excepted subjects, but merely removes all occasion, which otherwise might exist, for an apportionment among the States of taxes laid on income, whether it be derived from one source or another.

Citing the Brushaber and Stanton cases.

Even more pertinent language appears in the Willcutts case, Chief Justice Hughes stating:

In the case of the obligations of a State or its political subdivisions, the subject held to be exempt from Federal taxation is the principal and interest of the obligations.

He cited the case of Pollock against Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. He continued:

These obligations constitute the contract made by the State, or by its political agency pursuant to its authority, and a tax upon the amounts payable by the terms of the contract have therefore been regarded as bearing directly upon the exercise of the borrowing power of the Government.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it the Senator's contention that the sixteenth amendment did not confer on the Federal Government power to levy an income tax; that it already possessed that power——

Mr. AUSTIN. It already possessed that power.

Mr. CONNALLY. But merely removed the ban against apportionment?

Mr. AUSTIN. Apportionment was the whole point.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is, it did not spread the field of taxation——

Mr. AUSTIN. No; it merely dealt with the method.

Mr. CONNALLY. It merely removed the bar?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. The Court held in the Eisner case:

As repeatedly held, this did not extend the taxing power to new subjects but merely removed the necessity which otherwise might exist for an apportionment among the States of taxes laid on income.

In the Metcalf case, Mr. Justice Stone said:

The sixteenth amendment did not extend the taxing to any new class of subjects.

In Evans against Gore, a majority of the Court, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Van Devanter, said, after discussing the Pollock case and the nature of direct taxes:

The purpose of the amendment was to eliminate all occasion for such an apportionment because of the source from which the income came—a change in no wise affecting the power to tax but only the mode of exercising it.

In the National Life case, the Court said:

The United States may not tax State or municipal securities.

Mr. President, can there be any doubt whatever that the immunity which constitutes the most essential barrier between the Federal Government and the State governments, and which was declared in McCulloch against Maryland, and in all that line of cases, including the Pollock case, and finally down to the Pittman case, has been maintained without deviation? Here we have no question of fact. Every one, including, I believe, every Senator who speaks upon this subject, will testify that taxation of the issues of a municipality is a burden upon an essential function of the municipality. Once that is admitted, then this reciprocal barrier between the governments of the States and the Government of the United States protects the independence, security, and the very life of those governments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz
Andrews	Ellender	King	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Frazier	La Follette	Sheppard
Austin	George	Lee	Shipstead
Bailey	Gerry	McKellar	Smathers
Barkley	Gillette	McNary	Stewart
Bilbo	Glass	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Bridges	Green	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Guffey	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Gurney	Neely	Tobey
Burke	Hale	Norris	Townsend
Byrd	Harrison	Nye	Tydings
Byrnes	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Capper	Hayden	Overton	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Herring	Pepper	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Hill	Pittman	Walsh
Connally	Holt	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Danaher	Hughes	Reed	White
Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Russell	Wiley

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have some suggestions to offer with respect to the amendment. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] or the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] as to what the disposition is with respect to how much longer it is desired to remain in session today.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Mississippi suggested we ought to continue until 5:30, and try to complete, as nearly as possible, consideration of the bill so we can vote on it finally tomorrow. If the Senator from Colorado is willing to go ahead, I should be glad if he would do so.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the problem presented by the amendment is to me one of very great importance, both as a matter of financing and as a matter of governmental policy. It has been recognized throughout practically the history of the United States that there was a basic immunity which forbids the Congress of the United States from taxing the securities of the States and forbids the States from taxing the securities of the Federal Government, these immunities not being contained in the Constitution itself, but being necessarily implied in the dual system of Government. They have been recognized in the courts repeatedly. Originally this immunity extended not only to the taxation of securities, interest, and property, but to the taxation of salaries. The Supreme Court of the United States has modified this immunity. The Supreme Court said that it felt that the salary of a public official—except, perhaps, in certain exceptional cases—could be taxed without imposing a burden upon the other government. The Court drew that line very clearly in the O'Keefe case, in Three Hundred and Sixth United States Reports; and in the discussion the Court as now constituted lays down the doctrine which I think very clearly reenforces the immunity of State securities from taxation, because there is no question that if we tax the interest upon the bonds of a State, we do affect the borrowing capacity of the State. That is conceded by the proponents of the amendment. The only argument is as to the extent. It is conceded that if the amendment is adopted, we may expect an inevitable increase in interest rates upon State bonds, municipal bonds, and the bonds of local communities. The argument is as to the extent of the increase. It is not denied that the value of the bonds of local communities of States will be lessened.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I always try to be very frank in any legal or constitutional argument I may make. I will say that the evidence is overwhelming that there will be an increase in the interest which will have to be paid by State and municipal governments in the event the amendment we are now discussing becomes law; but I do not agree, and I do not want my failure to speak to be construed as an agreement, that such a slight increase in the interest charges which the States and municipalities may have to pay constitutes an interference on the part of the Federal Government with the sovereignty of the States.

Mr. ADAMS. I can assure the Senator that no question of estoppel will be raised against him.

Mr. BROWN. That is the test which is laid down by the immunity rule.

Mr. ADAMS. It is very difficult to draw the line. The test which the Supreme Court laid down was the question whether or not there was the imposition of a tangible economic burden. The words are "a tangible economic burden." If we increase the interest cost one-half of 1 percent, or one-quarter of 1 percent, it is obviously a tangible economic burden, and the percentage of increase is much greater than seems to be implied. If we increase a 2-percent interest rate by one-half of 1 percent, we increase it very perceptibly. The lowest estimate is one-quarter of 1 percent, and the estimates have run as high as three-quarters of 1 percent, or even 1 percent.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I deny that the test which the Senator now states is the true test on that question. Many taxes have been laid upon contracts between a State and a corporation which burden the State by requiring a larger amount to be paid in contracts between the State and contractors than would be the case if there were no tax. In my judgment, the question is whether or not there is an interference with the sovereignty of the State by the Federal Government, and not the mere imposition of the burden. Certainly the tax on the salary of an official is a slight burden. It is not serious.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I wonder if it would be agreeable to the Senator for me to submit a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. ADAMS. It would.

Mr. HARRISON. We have had a long day. Some Senators have been riding on the train, while others have been sitting here listening to speeches.

I ask unanimous consent that not later than 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon the Senate proceed to vote on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto or substitutes therefor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, what is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that not later than 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon the Senate proceed to vote on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto or substitutes therefor.

Mr. HARRISON. That agreement contemplates that the Senator may proceed with his speech when the Senate reconvenes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the Senator contemplate the reconvening of the Senate at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON TAXATION OF GOVERNMENTAL SECURITIES AND SALARIES (REPT. NO. 2140)

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I now submit the report of the special committee of the Senate on the question of reciprocal taxation of governmental bonds. It contains the views of the majority of the Special Committee on Taxation of Governmental Securities and Salaries, created pursuant to Senate Resolution 303, Seventy-fifth Congress, and a digest of the cases which pertain to the question. It also embodies the minority views presented earlier today by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

I may say, Mr. President, that your committee was authorized to spend $5,000 in this work. I do not know whether or not it is according to the rules, but we are returning $2,250 to the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have the report printed?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed, under the rules.

TRADE-AGREEMENT BENEFITS TO AMERICAN FARMERS—STATEMENT BY SENATOR BARKLEY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the circulation of pamphlets distorting the facts as to what transpired under the trade-agreement pacts, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the body of the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a statement which has been prepared at my request, definitely setting forth the advantages to American agriculture and the farmers under the trade-agreement pacts.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRADE-AGREEMENT BENEFITS TO AMERICAN FARMERS CANNOT BE DENIED BY DISTORTING THE FACTS

In the 7 years of this Democratic administration with its economic-recovery programs, including the reciprocal trade agreements program, American agriculture has risen far from the depths of bankruptcy and ruin where the Republican administration left it in 1932. The following table shows for itself how farm prices, income, and buying power have risen since 1932 and how false are the assertions of partisan opponents that these programs have hurt American farmers:

	Calendar year—		Percent increase
	1932	1939
United States farm cash income from marketings, excluding Government payments	$4,682,000,000	$7,733,000,000	65.2
United States average farm price for all products, index (1909-14=100)	65	93	43.1
Ratio of prices farmers receive to prices they pay	61	77	26.2
United States average farm prices received by farmers for—
Wheat, cents per bushel	38.8	63.6	63.9
Corn, do	28.1	47.6	69.4
Beef cattle, dollars per hundredweight	4.25	7.03	65.4
Hogs, do	3.34	6.23	86.5
Butterfat, cents per pound	17.9	23.9	33.5
Wool, do	8.6	22.3	159.3
Cotton, do	5.82	8.66	48.8
Tobacco, do	9.3	15.6	67.7

Not only have farmers' prices and incomes risen, but their average per-acre taxes on farm land have been reduced by nearly one-sixth since 1932.

CONDITIONS IN 1932 NOT BASED ON AVERAGES

Opponents of this administration try desperately to avoid comparisons between 1932 and 1939. A favorite trick is to scramble up some artificial boom years of the late twenties with the terrible years following the collapse of 1929, and thus seek to divert attention from the disastrous conditions in 1932, that were the results of false tariff and other policies. But in 1933 the Roosevelt administration found on its doorstep awful conditions that had to be remedied, not some vague averages with conditions in the booming twenties.

These opponents unhesitatingly resort to distortion and misleading use of facts and figures in attacking the trade-agreements program. The spearhead of a recent and typical attack inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is a table purporting to show total imports of certain selected agricultural commodities into the United States during the 7 New Deal years 1933–39.

The primary and wholly false foundation of this argument is that the American farmer is hurt by any and all agricultural imports except of products such as rubber and coffee which cannot be grown in this country. That is not true.

EMBARGO TARIFFS WRECK FARM PROSPERITY

When the United States, on this false theory, tried under the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act of 1930 to shut out every trace of such imports, American farmers were severely injured. They found that they could not get embargo tariffs on farm products without accepting such tariffs on industrial goods as well. The inevitable result was embargo tariffs all around; collapse of foreign purchasing power for our exportable farm and other surpluses; foreign tariff retaliation against our exports; and, finally, shrunken markets, ruinously low prices, and severe losses to farmers.

The facts are, as Secretary of Agriculture Wallace has pointed out, that if we excluded from this country all the agricultural commodities that we might possibly produce here, we should sacrifice much greater foreign markets for our own crops and leave 4 American acres idle for every 1 we put to work.

OPPONENTS JUGGLE FIGURES

Furthermore, honest examination of the figures themselves as they appear in the RECORD discloses that barely one-twentieth of the total imports there listed have actually entered the United States at tariffs reduced under trade agreements. The makers of the table lumped all forms, types, grades, and classes of agricultural products together in a total which, it is deliberately implied, was imported at tariffs reduced under trade agreements. That implication is 95 percent untruthful.

Sixty percent of the imports on the list in question consist of beef, wool and mohair, hides and skins, barley malt, and flaxseed. No tariff on any of these products has been lowered in any trade agreement.

Again, the list includes all imports of live cattle for 7 years, although in 3 of those years there were no tariff reductions in live cattle and in the remaining 4 years less than half the imports have come in at reduced duties, while prices and incomes to American cattle producers have been rising steadily.

Likewise, all dairy imports for 7 years are added in, although little more than one-fourth of them have entered at trade-agreement rates, none of which were in effect in 3 of the 7 years.

Even the total 7-year imports of corn go to swell the total although these imports, except for a few bushels from Cuba alone, paid the full 1930 tariff rate. The American corn-hog industry is and always has been normally on a heavy export basis so that tariffs on corn and on pork products ordinarily mean nothing.

Such tactics of distortion cannot change the fact that the American farmer is better off under the programs of the democratic New Deal than he was under the indifference and incompetence of the Republican old deal.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of James F. T. O'Connor, of California, to be district judge for the southern district of California, vice William P. James, deceased.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of several general officers of the National Guard of the States to be brigadiers general in the National Guard of the United States.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion in the Regular Army.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment or promotion in the Navy.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Marion Speed Boyd to be United States district judge for the western district of Tennessee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, September 19, 1940, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate September 18, 1940

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Marion Speed Boyd to be United States district judge for the western district of Tennessee.

SENATE

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful and gracious God, who art the comrade of our pilgrim way, we desire to begin, to continue, and end this day with Thee. May we enter upon its duties and responsibilities serenely and courageously, for the Lord of hosts is with us and the God of righteousness is our refuge.

Grant that Thy divine spirit may so illumine and clarify our minds that we shall come to know the truth and follow it without fear. Open our eyes that we may see that faith, hope, and love are the mightiest weapons in the shaping of our human world. May these virtues be the guiding light of our lives.

Give us a more kindly understanding of each other and a spirit of good will toward men everywhere. Wilt Thou so warm our hearts that we shall gladly respond to the call of human need? May our sympathy be as wide as the world's horizon and our longing for universal brotherhood as deeply rooted as the passion for life itself. We pray that at eventide, when the shadows fall, we may have Thy benediction of peace. In Christ's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. HARRISON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

By Mr. MALONEY:

S. 4362. A bill to provide for the completion of certain local protection works at East Hartford, Conn.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

S. 4363. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the department of highways and the county of Big Stone, State of Minnesota, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Whetstone Diversion Channel at or near Ortonville, Minn.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri:

S. 4364. A bill to provide for necessary facilities for the District of Columbia National Guard Air Corps Squadron; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 4365. A bill to create the grade of aviation cadet in the Air Corps, Regular Army, and to prescribe the pay and allowances therefor, and for other purposes; and

S. 4366. A bill to provide for an extension of the conditions under which a money allowance for quarters may be paid to certain noncommissioned officers of the Army of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL

On motion by Mr. SHEPPARD, the bill (S. 4175) to amend section 61 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, by adding a proviso which will permit States to organize military units not a part of the National Guard, and for other purposes, was ordered to be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PROVISION FOR NATIONAL-DEFENSE HOUSING—AMENDMENT

Mr. TAFT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR DEFENSE IMPROVEMENT BILL—EAST HARTFORD, CONN.

Mr. MALONEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION—AMENDMENT PERTAINING TO CREDITS AGAINST UNEMPLOYMENT-COMPENSATION TAXES

PRINTING OF PRAYERS OFFERED BY CHAPLAIN OF THE SENATE

Mr. NEELY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 315), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 2,500 copies of the prayers offered by the Reverend ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate, at the opening of the daily sessions of the Senate during the Seventieth to the Seventy-sixth Congress, inclusive, be printed and bound for the use of the Senate.

PROGRAM FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC, UNDERGROUND, BOMB-PROOF SHELTERS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a simple Senate resolution. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and then be printed and lie upon the table.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 316) was received, and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Whereas the United States is taking steps to increase and strengthen our several military defense units, and

Whereas in the prosecution of this program it is deemed advisable to give major consideration to defenses against airplanes and airplane warfare, and

Whereas the European war discloses that the major part of the military activities are conducted in the air and take the form of airplane attacks against cities, railways, water supplies, and such military establishments as airplane factories and factories engaged in the production of ammunition and military supplies, and

Whereas in the present attack upon England, planes of a bomber type are used to transport bombs to be released over vital points, and

Whereas in this kind of warfare it is necessary to protect the civilian population against bomb attacks by the construction of bomb retreats consisting of underground rooms and spaces, and

Whereas in order to perfect our military defense program it is deemed advisable to give consideration to the construction of rooms and spaces underground, so that in case of an air attack the civilian population may find places of comparative safety against such attacks: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the United States Senate that our military authorities and those in charge of developing our defense program should give consideration to the location and construction of adequate public retreats and shelters to accommodate the people: Be it further

Resolved, That our military authorities and those in charge of our military defense program be requested to consult and confer with the constituted legal authorities of the States and cities located along the border of the United States to the end that they may be advised and induced to take proper steps in cooperation with the Government in the establishment of such retreats and shelters: Be it further

Resolved, That in the event legislation and funds are found to be necessary in carrying out this program, the said War Department and those in charge of our defense program be and are hereby requested to prepare and submit to the Congress appropriate recommendations on this subject.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Following the printing of the resolution, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD copy of a telegram which I am sending to the mayors of the largest cities on the seaboard. I am asking the mayors a question, and for the information of the Senate I ask that the telegram be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The telegram was read, as follows:

The MAYOR, New York City:

The Congress and administration are developing and strengthening our military defense units. It is obvious that in addition to developing military defense units we should provide air-raid shelters for the public. Please advise if any steps looking toward the construction of such shelters have been taken or are contemplated in your city.

ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senator, Oklahoma.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4088) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and peanuts; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. FULMER, Mr. BEAM, Mr. PACE, Mr. HOPE, and Mr. KINZER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 607) making additional appropriations for the Military Establishments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 88), in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 60,000 additional copies of Public Law No. 785, current Congress, entitled "Transportation Act of 1940," of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room and 50,000 copies shall be for the use of the House document room.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 2991. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States certain lands in the city of National City, Calif.;

H. R. 4031. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim or claims of the Recording & Computing Machines Co., of Dayton, Ohio;

H. R. 8551. An act for the relief of Xenophon George Panos;

H. R. 10026. An act to provide for the disposition of certain photographed records of the United States Government, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10176. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands held under color of title;

H. R. 10438. An act to extend the age limits for applicants for appointment as midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy;

H. J. Res. 445. Joint resolution to establish a Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Thomas Jefferson; and

H. J. Res. 596. Joint resolution to authorize Commander Howard L. Vickery to hold the office of a member of the United States Maritime Commission.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 607) making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRINTING ADDITIONAL COPIES OF TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1940

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 88, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 60,000 additional copies of Public Law No. 785, current Congress, entitled "Transportation Act of 1940," of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room, and 50,000 copies shall be for the use of the House document room.

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate concur in the House resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, at the time of the recess yesterday I was starting a discussion of the pending amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]. Today, without going back to the subject of municipal and State bonds, I desire first to make a suggestion or two in reference to the Federal phase of the matter.

Of course no legal or constitutional question is involved in the taxation of Federal bond interest. Only one question is involved, as to whether or not it is an advisable thing to do. I very seriously doubt its advisability. The argument which has been made in favor of the taxation of Federal bond interest has largely been based upon a claim that certain economic injustices are being done; that certain very wealthy men are taking advantage of the immunity afforded by the exemptions to evade the payment of their fair share of taxes—a thing which obviously ought to be stopped if the remedy is not worse than the disease. I am inclined to think that in the effort to reach that evil we may perpetrate a more serious evil on the country.

The determination of the question should be upon the basis of the welfare of the country as a whole. The fact that some individual is deriving a benefit from a particular provision of law does not justify us in taking action which would injure the country as a whole. We had better tolerate the present evil than inflict a greater evil upon the country.

As a matter of fact, the men who have been the basis of the argument are very few in number. They are rather insignificant in their financial consequences. Individuals in the United States, including the wealthy, hold less than 4 percent of the Federal bonds.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. The principal cause of this unjust situation is not the Federal bonds; it is the State bonds. The State bonds are totally tax-exempt.

Mr. ADAMS. I am speaking of the Federal bonds at this time.

Mr. BROWN. Municipal bonds are totally exempt, and of those, $20,000,000,000 worth are in the hands of individual investors, who take advantage of the tax exemption.

Mr. ADAMS. I am speaking of the Federal bonds. Individuals in the country hold less than 4 percent of the outstanding Federal bonds. Of that 4 percent, a relatively limited number are held by those who derive great advantage from the exemption features. Men with incomes of over $500,000 receive one-half of 1 percent of the national income. Loose statements have been made from time to time at variance with that, but the statistics furnished me show that men with incomes of over $500,000 receive one-half of 1 percent of the national income. Therefore we should be a little careful in laying down a rule to apply to 99½ percent of the national income in order to cure an evil limited to one-half of 1 percent.

I am entirely in accord with any method which will obviate the unfairness and the injustice now existent; but what is our practical problem? We have today $45,000,000,000 of national indebtedness. At this session Congress has authorized expenditures which will bring the national indebtedness up to at least $65,000,000,000. We will have to sell $20,000,000,000 worth of bonds. We are entering upon a course of procedure which will still further increase our need for purchasers of our bonds. If we increase by one-half of 1 percent the interest which the country must pay on $65,000,000,000 of bonds, the additional cost to the Government on the bonds by way of interest will be between three and four hundred million dollars a year.

It does not sound formidable to say that the interest will be increased only one-half of 1 percent, but that means a 25-percent increase in interest costs. The bonds at the present time are paying about 2 percent. We will increase that certainly to 2½ percent, some experts say to 2.65, some to 2.75, but we will have to assume the increased interest charge, and the interest charge today is eleven hundred million dollars. In other words, of the Nation's income, which today is about $6,000,000,000, we are spending on interest alone $1,100,000,000. If we add a 25-percent increase in the interest rate and figure the inevitable increase in outstanding bonds, we will run the interest charges to $1,400,000,000 a year. I do not believe we would get back from taxes on present tax-exempt bonds enough to counterbalance the increased cost. It is a pure matter of dollars and cents at that point.

Of course, we have to project the whole picture into the future, because we have existing tax-exemption provisions which cannot be taken away. It is rather difficult to carry on the discussion with two things in mind—the immediate situation and the situation when all the tax-exempt features will have been taken away. But I am uneasy about the future financing of the country. As I have said on the floor of the Senate heretofore, I am more apprehensive of danger to our country from internal financial catastrophe than from foreign foes. I think we are in far greater danger from expenditures we have already made and from those we are making.

We will have $20,000,000,000 of bonds to put on the market as a result of authorizations made at this session, we will have other billions to put on the market, and we must have purchasers. The catastrophe comes the day when the bonds of the United States are put on the market and do not sell. Today the credit of the United States is at the peak of all credit in the world, public and private.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. When the time comes, if it ever shall come, when the bonds of the United States will not sell, what will be the only course left open to the Government?

Mr. ADAMS. I have a very definite idea as to that, but I do not care to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. HATCH. I withdraw the question. I think I know what the Senator's idea is, and I really thought it would be helpful to have it explained. But I withdraw the question.

Mr. ADAMS. My apprehension is very great. I think the problem which confronts us is tremendously serious. There are in the banks of the United States $18,000,000,000 of bonds of the United States. Insurance companies hold large amounts. If we impose a tax on the interest on Government bonds, we decrease the value of the bonds. In other words, they produce less of a money return, and therefore they have less value. They will be less attractive to the banks, to the insurance companies, and to other investors.

I know the great Senator to whom we all look in banking matters and finance matters, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], shares the apprehensions I have as to the bond situation. He knows the extent to which the banks have invested their funds in Government securities, $18,000,000,000 today, almost as much money as the banks have out on loans. A decline of a very few points in the market value of the bonds would mean disaster to many banks. I do not go as far as does the Senator from Virginia as to what would come about, but there is the possibility of disaster, and I think the Congress should hesitate to do anything which might jeopardize the safety of the banks, which might jeopardize the securities of the insurance companies, all because approximately 2 percent, or less than 2 percent, of the taxpayers are getting an individual advantage because some man with a large income buys tax-exempt bonds.

We have observed on the floor of the Senate a thing which we all rather enjoy—the shining rapier sunk into the body of the rich man and brought out dripping with his blood. That is a very popular picture, but it is a picture which underlies and supports much of the argument to remove the tax exemption from Government bonds, to make the United States pay more for its money than it now pays, and to make the States pay more for their money than they now pay.

I am not concerned one way or the other with single individuals or groups. I am concerned with 130,000,000 individuals, and it is in the light of their welfare that this matter should be determined.

There are 40,000,000 individual depositors in the banks of the Nation. They are all concerned in the value of the bonds of the United States. The bonds of the United States are worth more with the tax-exempt feature than without it. There is a market for the bonds today. Remove the tax-exempt feature and the bonds must compete with corporate bonds. There have been times in history when the bonds of a nation went down while corporate bonds stood up. Sometimes the industrial, the economic, and the financial structure stands when the national structure falls, and we will find banks and investors choosing between the returns on corporate bonds and Federal bonds, inasmuch as there will be no advantage with respect to the tax feature. I know that many banks and insurance companies are concerned because of the situation.

Let us consider the rich man. In my section of the country a man who has an income of $100,000 is a rich man. In other sections people talk in figures I do not understand, but any man in my State who has an income of $100,000 is rich. If such a rich man in my State invested his money so as to have $100,000 income from Government bonds, what would be the fabulous income from those bonds which would be exempt from taxation? He would get an exemption of $2,000 a year. That is the terrible picture before us—$2,000 of his income of $100,000 would be exempt.

The investor, be he rich or poor, is allowed only 2-percent exemption on income from Government bonds. The outrage of which we hear so much is that 2 percent is exempt, and Senators are told that the 2-percent exempted interest is the equivalent of 10 percent on a taxed bond in the hands of some people. Whether that be true or not is immaterial. The fact is that the investor gets an exemption of about 2 percent. Furthermore, Mr. President, the Government has outstanding a large amount of Treasury notes and Treasury bills, running up toward $10,000,000,000, and what interest does the investor receive upon those securities? He receives upon some of them as much as three-tenths of 1-percent interest. Upon the better of them he receives six-tenths of 1-percent interest. There are from eight to ten billion dollars worth of this kind of short-term Government securities, upon which the interest yield will average less than one-half of 1 percent, and we are desperately worried lest some person receives an exemption of this one-half of 1 percent.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to yield at this point?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly. I merely wish to say to the Senator that I have not a great deal of time, and I use it rather recklessly.

Mr. BROWN. The opposition to this measure which appeared before the committee was very intense, very well financed, and I think that it may be safely said that those opposed to it drummed the country to get people to come here and testify against the measure. The Senator seems to be disturbed about the insurance companies and the banks. The American Bankers' Association has a representative in Washington who appears continually before various committees of Congress, and the insurance companies are well represented in Washington. Not one representative of the American Bankers' Association appeared before our committee, the hearings of which were well publicized. Not one representative of the insurance companies appeared before our committee, and its hearings were well publicized and printed in the financial stories of the committee's actions and hearings in the city of New York and Philadelphia. Only two men representing the banking fraternity appeared before the committee. Both of them represented that particular branch of the banking fraternity known as the investment bankers, who are interested in the sale of municipal bonds.

I now ask the Senator, if the insurance companies would be hurt by this measure—and they would not be—and if the banks would be hurt by this measure—and they would not be—will he point out to me or tell me why no representations were made by these two large sectors in our financial picture?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I could not tell the Senator that any more than I could tell why the Senator from Michigan, able and brilliant as he is, has reached the unsound conclusion he has reached with respect to parts of this measure. I have no contact with those people, and I do not know why they did not appear before the committee, and I would not attempt to hazard a guess. I know that the fact is that if we strike down the tax exemption of Federal bonds we do some damage to the banks, but I am not so much concerned about that. What I am concerned about is the damage it will inflict on the United States. I am only concerned about the fact that the banks may not be as ready purchasers as they now are. I do not care so much about the banks and the insurance companies, but there are 130,000,000 people whose welfare is involved in this question.

Mr. BROWN. Of course, the point is that none of the present investments of large banks and insurance companies at the present time will be affected adversely. It is very easy to argue that they will be affected the other way—that the remaining bonds, which are gradually getting fewer in number as the full effect of this amendment comes closer and closer, will be more valuable, rather than less valuable, and that a gain will be made rather than a loss.

Mr. ADAMS. As I said to the Senator, we have had the difficulty of discussing at the same time the immediate picture and the ultimate picture, and we cannot help confusing them. We are trying to think of what will happen if the tax-exempt feature of Government bonds disappears. We cannot help considering that. The Senator is quite right in saying that today there are available all the tax-exempt securities the rich men of the country could possibly want. There is no lack of them; we are not depriving them of anything today. But there comes a new issue of bonds, and the question is what will the Government get for them? Those bonds will go onto a market where they are at a disadvantage. In other words, they are less valuable than the bonds that are now outstanding. What we are concerned with is the price at which we shall be able to sell the bonds which will be issued tomorrow and the next day and the next year and the year after that. When those bonds cease to find a ready market, down goes the defense program as well as the economic structure of the country. That is the apprehension I have.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield on that point?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I assure the Senator I will be as generous in yielding to him later on as he is now to me. Evidently the Treasury Department of the United States does not share the apprehension expressed by the Senator from Colorado. Many times I have taken his opinion in preference to that of the Treasury Department; but I think in this particular instance the Treasury Department has made a more thorough and exhaustive examination into the facts, and the Secretary of the Treasury told the Finance Committee that he was going to finance the defense program with bonds which are fully taxable. He will not issue tax-exempt bonds for that purpose.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, normally, of course, I submerge my individual judgments to those of public officials, provided they are looking at the same thing I am. I am afraid the Treasury officials are looking into a much narrower field than I am trying to look into, and in this matter I am forced to follow what is my own conviction, after such study as I have made, and after reading the testimony adduced before the Senator's committee. It is not the first time I have failed to follow——

Mr. BROWN. The Senator always follows his own conviction.

Mr. ADAMS. I try to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. KING. The views expressed by the Senator from Michigan with respect to the attitude of the Secretary of the Treasury do not greatly impress me. I am receiving many communications from small bondholders, widows and orphans, who have small holdings in bonds, representing perhaps all that was left in the estate of the husband or father, and they are very much concerned, as evidenced by the communications I have received, as to the decline in the price of bonds, which would, of course, materially interfere with and imperil their holdings. They are afraid if the Government issues more bonds the price of their present bonds will go down until finally we have a deluge of bonds, as they had in Germany and Russia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Colorado on the amendment has expired.

Mr. ADAMS. I shall take my time on the bill.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Colorado has stated that we are to sell $20,000,000,000 of bonds. Does not the Senator know that we are not going to sell them at all? We have not been selling them for years. We have been allocating them to the banks, and we have maneuvered the banks into such a position that they are afraid not to take the bonds when they are allocated to them. It has been stated by competent authority that a depreciation of the bonds 10 percent below par would ruin 90 percent of the banks of the country, and that is true.

Mr. ADAMS. I thank the Senator from Virginia. Of course, I know that the oversubscriptions which are reported in the newspapers are slightly——

Mr. GLASS. Oh, it is mere humbug. It is misleading. There is no oversubscription at all. The Senator himself has already indicated that a small percentage of individuals in this country own United States bonds.

Mr. ADAMS. Whenever there is an active market for bonds or securities and there is an oversubscription, this is what happens: A bank decides it wants to get $10,000 of a new issue. It is told that the issue of bonds will probably be oversubscribed 10 to 1, "so you had better apply for $100,000 worth." That is the common thing. The figures are exaggerated, but they all show that the credit of the United States today is most excellent. I am concerned with keeping it in that condition and preserving a market. I am inclined to think that the tax-exempt feature will stimulate the market for our bonds at a time when it will be absolutely needed. That market, in terms of dollars, is far greater than the small amount we could collect by taxing certain individuals.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I observed the colloquy between the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], which obviously had for its aim to give the impression that in the study of this matter we have not heard any apprehension expressed by the banks themselves. I call attention to the contrary fact. Representatives of banks which are especially interested in the purchase and sale of securities from municipalities and States did appear and did register their protest. One witness who appeared was Mr. John S. Linen, a vice president of the Chase National Bank. That particular vice president had dealt with municipal bonds for the bank for 18 years. The bank was greatly concerned that the Congress should not undertake to make this change in Government policy without an amendment of the Constitution. If it were to be made at all, the bank insisted that it be made by means of an amendment to the Constitution in order to safeguard against the possibility of Congress, having taken this step, afterward taxing already existing obligations. I call attention to page 159 of the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, where such testimony appears.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to discuss what to me is a more vital matter, involving a fundamental principle of our Government. I refer to the proposal in the Brown amendment to tax the securities of the States and their subdivisions.

During the life of our Government a basic immunity has been conceded, namely, that the Federal Government may not tax the instrumentalities of the States, and that the States may not tax the instrumentalities of the Federal Government. That immunity has been reduced by the decision as to salaries, but it has not been changed as to the taxation of the interest on State securities. The argument of the Court in the Helvering case and the O'Keefe case clearly points out that the Court recognizes, and will continue to recognize, the existence of the basic immunity of the borrowing capacity of the States from the imposition of taxes by the Federal Government. It is conceded that if we tax State securities we force the States to pay more in order to obtain their money, a most tangible and obvious interference with the States' basic necessities in obtaining money to do the things which they must do.

Next, we are confronted with the literal interpretation of the sixteenth amendment, to the effect that we may tax income "from whatever source derived." It is said that the words "from whatever source derived" must mean what they say. The Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly said that that language is to be read in connection with the history of the amendment and the language of the amendment as a whole, saying that there is no longer the requirement of apportionment among the States of income taxes, no matter from what source derived.

The Supreme Court of the United States has definitely taken that position. So, we are confronted with the situation that a law of the Congress which seeks to tax the interest on State bonds defies the present rulings of the Supreme Court of the United States. If we think such a law is valid, we must be placing our confidence in the hope that the Supreme Court will change its rulings. I question whether the Congress should base essential legislation upon the belief that the Supreme Court will reverse a series of cases—not old cases, not obsolete cases, but modern cases. We have a very able committee. I have not read the report of the committee, but I assume that two members take the position that the proposed tax would be unconstitutional. So, we have the Supreme Court and two members of the committee on one side, with three members of the committee against the Court. I have rather felt that notwithstanding my great admiration and respect for the three members of the committee, I should go along with the Supreme Court and the very able minority of the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator take the position that there is a tie vote as between the three Senators on the one hand, and the Supreme Court and two Senators on the other? Does that constitute a tie vote? [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. I leave that question to the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think the Senator from Kentucky was present when the earlier part of the constitutional argument took place. The Supreme Court has never passed upon the question raised by this amendment. Certain statements in the opinions of the Court point in one direction, and other statements point in another direction; but any fair examination of all the opinions—and I have them all here; they are printed in the report—will show a great diversity of opinion, but never an instance in which the question raised by this amendment has been presented to the Court. That is obvious from the fact that since the sixteenth amendment was adopted we have never passed an income tax effective on income from municipal bonds.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield. I will say to the Senator that my time is running, and I hope he will be lenient with me.

Mr. LEE. I shall be very brief.

The nearest the Supreme Court has come to passing judgment on that point is in the decision with reference to the income of an employee of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Judge Stone, speaking for the Supreme Court, said:

> The present tax is a nondiscriminatory tax on income applied to salaries at a specified rate. It is not in form or substance a tax upon the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or its property or income, nor is it paid by the corporation or the Government from their funds. It is laid upon income which becomes the property of the taxpayer when received as compensation for his services; and the tax laid upon the privilege of receiving it is paid from his private funds and not from the funds of the Government, either directly or indirectly. The theory, which once won a qualified approval, that a tax on income is legally or economically a tax on its source is no longer tenable.

Mr. ADAMS. There is no question about that.

Mr. President, how much time have I left?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Senator has 15 minutes left.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not mind being interrupted, but I have only 15 minutes left, and I have some additional things to say.

The decisions which have been referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma have to do with the salary situation; and that question has been definitely settled in several cases. The reciprocal immunities which may have existed have been wiped out as to salaries. The reciprocal immunities as to the taxation of securities have not been wiped out. My position goes to this point: If we concede that the sixteenth amendment gives to the Congress power to tax the securities of the States, I think the exercise of that power would be most unwise, most disastrous, and in violation of the fundamentals of this Government. I do not want to rest my views merely upon legal questions or upon legal decisions; but in this land we have two coexisting forms of government—the Federal Government and the governments of the States. It is vital to us to maintain them. The State governments have been tremendously weakened. Conferring upon the Federal Government power to tax State securities and State revenues means breaking down one of the vital essentials which must be maintained if the States are to exist as something more than mere Federal counties.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I hope the Senator from Colorado will offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan which will take out from under the amendment of the Senator from Michigan and exempt from its operation State securities and securities of subdivisions of the States.

Mr. ADAMS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, if the sixteenth amendment is to be used as a basis of this tax, and if under that amendment the interest on State bonds and city bonds can be taxed, it is necessary to give a literal interpretation to the words "from whatever source derived," and when that is done there is given to the Federal Government not only the power to tax the interest on the bonds but to lexy a tax upon the taxes levied by the States for their support; to levy a tax upon license fees and upon every bit of revenue upon which the State depends. In other words, if a literal interpretation is to be given to the sixteenth amendment, not merely individuals and corporate holders but the States, the cities, and the counties themselves become subject to taxation, and the Federal Government is left unrestricted as to the rate. The Federal Government may proceed to enact a statute levying 10 or 20 percent upon the revenues derived by the State from gasoline sales, from taxes upon real and personal property. So and if the sixteenth amendment is to be given its literal meaning, which some seem to desire to give to it, the States and their subdivisions will be placed absolutely at the mercy of the Federal Government.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, what the Senator says suggests to me that it might be timely to remark that there are no limitations with respect to taxation under the sixteenth amendment. In the taxing section of the Constitution proper the taxing power of Congress is specifically limited to purposes set forth, such as the national defense, the public debt, and the general welfare. But in the sixteenth amendment there is not only no limitation as to the rates but there is no limitation as to the application; that is to say, under the broad construction of the sixteenth amendment Congress can tax income from whatever sources derived for whatever purposes the Congress may choose. I do not know that attention has been called to that.

While I am on my feet I should like to make a further remark. None of us ever knows what the present Supreme Court will decide on any subject. That is said respectfully. The Court has abandoned the great historic standards which guided it for 150 years, and it has tied itself to the principle of construing acts of Congress liberally, with a view to enlarging the powers of Congress. I think that is a statement which will not be denied. That being so, it is all the more incumbent upon Members of the Senate of the United States to maintain a very deep and abiding regard for the Constitution itself. The Court seems to be disposed to leave it to us, and the responsibility to maintain the Constitution falls upon us now in greater measure than at any time in the whole history of this Government. If it is not maintained in the Senate, I can give no guaranty that it will be maintained elsewhere.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I appreciate the very apt suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina.

It is said that there is reciprocity in this provision, that the Federal Government can tax State securities and the States can tax Federal securities. What is the reciprocity? The Federal Government claims unlimited power both as to time and amount, and the authority of the States is what the Congress sees fit to give them. In other words, the Congress may give them the power today and withdraw it tomorrow. There is no reciprocity.

Let me point out another thing as to reciprocity applied to my own community. I live in a community of workingmen, steel workers, railroad workers, and farmers. There are no accumulations of great wealth in my community. What would be the effect of the adoption of the amendment on that community? We have to borrow money in our community to build our schools and our courthouses; we have to protect our cities from flood. A number of years ago we had a disastrous flood, and we borrowed the money ourselves and expended many million dollars for flood protection. That was before the day when the Federal Government undertook such obligations. As a result the community has a bonded indebtedness. Now if a Federal tax be imposed upon the interest upon the bonds issued in our community, it means we will get less for our bonds. The interest money is raised by taxation. In my community there are 12,000 homes which furnish the larger part of the taxation. They are the homes of steel workers, railroad workers, and clerks. This extra tax would not fall upon the Federal Government; it would fall upon the moderate-circumstanced people in my community, which is now a highly taxed community. There is no reciprocity there. The tax would not fall upon anybody but the local people. As a matter of fact, taxes for local purposes are paid, not by the rich but by the relatively poor. So my community would have to pay a penalty if this amendment were adopted; we would have to pay to the Federal Government doubly. As taxpayers, we would have to pay more money to the Federal Government because the tax rates would go up, and we would have to pay more money to the city, the county, the State, and the school district because the interest on their bonds would go up. I say it will be the homes, it will be the farmers, it will be the little local business that would pay that penalty.

It is not fair; it is not just; and I do not think the Congress, whether it has the authority or not, should exercise the authority.

Why is this tax proposed? It is argued that somewhere there are men or groups of men who are buying these securities in order to avoid taxation. Therefore it is proposed to put more taxes on the home owners in my community because someone, a rich man in New York or Boston or Chicago, is escaping his fair share of taxes. Is it not a fine way to make him pay his share of taxes by making my neighbors pay more than their share? That, it seems to me, is not equitable; it is destructive of the independence of the States.

I think this is not the time nor this bill the place to attempt this form of taxation, which, at best, is of doubtful constitutionality. To give an illustration of the effect on the States, there are, roughly, $20,000,000,000 of outstanding bonds of States and their subdivisions. It is proposed to increase their interest rate. They are now paying on an average 2½ percent interest. Smaller communities, such as the one in which I live, pay more than that but the strong communities are paying 2½ percent, while the Federal Government is paying 2 percent. By this amendment the interest rate would be increased one-half of 1 percent, which is equivalent to an increase of 20 percent, which means States and their subdivisions which are now paying $500,000,000 in interest will have to pay $600,000,000. That is a minimum according to the testimony before the committee. The increase was figured higher than that, but taking the minimum figure a burden of at least $100,000,000 would be imposed upon the States and communities. It is said, "Well, that should not matter, because the Federal Government would get the money." The advocates of the proposal want to balance the income which the Federal Government receives against the increased cost to the States, the cities, and the counties. We have heard generalized statements of that kind, but the fact that they would have to pay more taxes and that somebody else, some place perhaps, would pay less would not afford much comfort to the people of my community.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Colorado has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a number of telegrams I have received from State officials, mayors of cities in the State of New York, and others, opposing the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan which is now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALBANY, N. Y., September 16, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate:

Respectfully call your attention to my testimony before the Brown Senate Finance Committee opposing taxation of State and municipal bonds on the ground that it would increase State and local financing costs without producing any appreciable revenue to the Federal Government for years to come.

MORRIS S. TREMAINE.

ALBANY, N. Y., September 16, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
The Senate:

As 1 of more than 40 attorneys general in the conference on State defense I urge that no action be taken on proposal to tax State and municipal securities this session. Report of special committee of Senate cannot show any immediate need by amending excess-profits tax bill. This important issue should be separately considered and thoroughly debated. Its consequences to New York State and New York City will be serious.

JOHN J. BENNETT, Jr.,
Attorney General, New York State.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., September 16, 1940.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER:

The Senate debate on Brown amendment to impose a Federal tax on municipal securities is now before the Senate. I urge that you aggressively oppose any such action. Such a tax will affect the value, interest rates, and ready salability of municipal bonds. Our cities are already heavily burdened, and with the defense program requiring our sharing a larger burden of the general tax burden we must do everything to keep our municipal financing structure liquid. You will be doing your State and its municipalities a great service if you oppose and defeat this class of legislation.

WILLIAM H. SCHRAUTH,
Mayor of City of Poughkeepsie.

ALBANY, N. Y., September 16, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate:

On behalf of conference on State defense urge that no ill-considered action be taken on precipitate proposal of Senator BROWN for taxation of State and municipal securities. Effect on New York State and New York City would be most harmful. Mayor LaGuardia testimony before Senate confirms this. Urge that you oppose action now pending.

HENRY EPSTEIN, Chairman.

ALBANY, N. Y., September 13, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Office Building:

Municipalities of New York State are decidedly opposed to proposed amendment to excess profits tax bill taxing State and municipal securities.

NEW YORK STATE CONFERENCE OF MAYORS,
WILLIAM P. CAPES, Executive Secretary.

YONKERS, N. Y., September 16, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Strongly urge you vote against Brown amendment imposing tax on municipal securities. Such tax would greatly increase interest rate on city bonds and consequence burden on taxpayers and tend to disastrously reduce real-estate value. Yonkers would undoubtedly suffer greatly. Please show your friendship for Yonkers by voting against measure.

JOHN J. CONDON,
Mayor of Yonkers.

ALBANY, N. Y., September 18, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Washington, D. C.:

Albany port district commission protests the amendment to excess tax bill proposed by Senator BROWN, of Michigan. Taxing bonds of the Albany port district would impose unjust burden upon this State agency and the taxpayers supporting it. Imposition of tax on new bonds of the commission would undoubtedly raise interest rates and render bonds less attractive. Added costs would increase the net deficiency of the commission each year in the cities of Albany and Rensselaer would be called upon to raise the money. We respectfully ask your voting against the Brown amendment.

DWIGHT BLADU.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I rise to speak in favor of this amendment.

I was a little surprised—not much, either—to hear the old "widows and orphans" argument dusted off and brought out in opposition to this effort to place taxation on a fair and equitable basis. The "poor widows and orphans" are certainly used for arguments in legislative matters of this kind, particularly if there is a question of placing a fair and equitable tax on the income of somebody who has enough money to buy bonds and have an income from those bonds.

Let us suppose the case of a man working for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. He has an income of $1,800 from his salary, and has an income of $1,800 from tax-exempt bonds which he perhaps inherited or purchased in some way or other. When he gets that income he has a total income of $3,600. He puts it in the bank. Which part of that income comes from the salary, and which part comes from other sources? What is the earmarking which separates the $1,800 he receives from tax-exempt bonds so that it is in a sacred trust, so to speak, and cannot be taxed? That man has an income of $3,600. He ought to pay an income tax on the basis of an income of $3,600; and yet, as matters stand, he pays an income tax on $1,800. What is right or fair about that?

A man ought to be able to see that. No one would say that man's income was not $3,600; and yet we are going to place a tax on the basis of ability to pay. His ability to pay is in the $3,600 bracket, and yet we place on him an income tax which we say is levied on the basis of ability to pay, and we place it on the basis of $1,800 instead of $3,600.

Take even a better example: Here is a man who is one of these "lily" businessmen. You know what "lily" businessmen are. They toil not, neither do they spin, and yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Well, this one has an income of $50,000 from tax-exempt securities. Senators talk about widows. Let us take the example of a poor widow who has a job clerking in a store, supporting a family. She has an income of $2,400. She has to pay an income tax on $2,400; but this "lily" businessman with an income of $50,000 from tax-exempt securities does not pay a thin dime of income tax on it. I may not be able to split and resplit all of the fine hairs that some of these persons who choloform themselves with a constitutional argument can, but I can see the plain, simple fact that that is not fair.

Ever since I was old enough to read I have read that when a man could not argue anything else in the House or in the Senate he uncorked the old chloroform, "It is unconstitutional." Let me read what the Supreme Court has said on that subject:

> The theory which once won a qualified approval that a tax on income is legally or economically a tax on its source is no longer tenable.

Then a tax on the income of this Home Owners' Loan Corporation employee is not a tax on the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. If the other $1,800 of the employee's income comes from tax-exempt securities, after the Supreme Court has said that a tax on the $1,800 which he gets from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is not a tax on the source, how can it be argued that a tax on the other $1,800 would be a tax on the source?

To me, this is a case of plain fairness and justice. Taxation according to ability to pay is one of the fairest and safest bases of taxation. Taxation according to benefit received is a fair and just basis of taxation. There is one tax that I never have been able to justify in my own mind, and that is the ad valorem tax on property. I do not say that I am ready to remove it entirely because I do not know how to replace it. Many States have removed it to some extent on the home. Oklahoma has a law which exempts homesteads from taxation up to $1,000. Wisconsin has an exemption of homesteads from taxation up to $3,000. Texas has an exemption of homesteads from State tax up to $3,000.

A man has a piece of property. Perhaps it is a vacant lot and it does not earn a thing. Every year he has a tax on that vacant lot of $18. If he does not pay the tax, the tax soon takes the property. In a sense that is a capital levy. It has the same effect as a capital levy because it actually takes part of the capital. If the owner improves the lot and builds a fine building on it, instead of being rewarded for improving the community a heavier tax than ever is laid on it. That is a property tax. Henry George, with his single-tax theory, tried to answer that objection. He never did answer it very satisfactorily, so we will still have that tax, but I know a farmer whose tax on his farm is $114 every year. I know 3 years when he did not make $114 on the farm, and yet he either had to borrow the money and pay the tax or lose the farm. On the other hand, here is another man with an income of $50,000 from tax-exempt securities who goes scot free. I do not see how anybody can say that is fair.

The argument is made that the community loses by taxing bonds of this kind. On the contrary, the community gains by it. I gave an example here the other day showing that the difference between the revenue the Government loses on a tax-exempt bond and the increased interest rate that the Government would have to pay in order to sell the bond if it were wholly taxable is over $385,955.40 on a $1,000,000 bond running for 20 years. Let that be a school bond: Many school bells could be kept ringing for $385,955.40. The school doors could be kept swinging in and out for $385,955.40; and yet that is what the Government loses.

Mr. Hanes, a tax expert who has given his life to studying these problems, came before the committee and testified that it would cost only from one-fourth to one-half of 1 percent more in interest if the bonds were wholly taxable than if they were tax-exempt. It would be necessary to raise the interest rate from one-fourth to one-half of 1 percent in order to make up for the abolition of the tax-exemption privilege.

The tax-exemption privilege means so much more to a rich man than it does to a poor man that we are selling bonds on a two-price basis. To a man with an income of $5,000 the tax-exemption privilege is worth one-tenth of 1 percent. To a man with an income of $500,000 the tax-exemption privilege is worth over 7 percent—7.1 per cent to be exact—because his income is in the higher brackets where the surtax is quite heavy. Therefore the exemption saves him from paying surtaxes whereon the poor man does not have to pay surtaxes. In other words, we have a special privilege for a special class, and the class we are exempting is the class which is best able to pay the tax.

Here we are worrying our heads about getting revenue, while sixty to sixty-six billion dollars of wealth in this country is in a storm cellar of tax exemption which we cannot reach. That imposes all the more burden on those we can tax, and they are the poor people.

Whoever heard of a man with a $5,000 income being able to own any bonds, in the first place? And if he is able to own a few, the tax-exemption privilege is worth nothing to him. Therefore it is a special privilege to a special class, and I say it is wrong.

This is not a tax upon the States or the communities. The Supreme Court has held that. When a man receives his income, it then is separated from the source from which it came. It has lost the identity of the source from which it springs. Take the case of a glass of water: We do not know whether it came from a spring or whether it came from a fountain. Perhaps half of it came from a spring and half from a fountain but it is mixed; it is mingled with itself; it is liquid; it has lost its original identity, and has no more connection with its source than has a man's bank account that he has placed in the bank as a result of his income, no matter whether it is from a bond or from a salary.

Mr. President, until we pass legislation along the line of the pending amendment, which would remove the tax-exemption privilege, we will not have a firm foundation or a good basis for a taxing program that is fair and equitable and just. I have not heard anyone argue that it is fair, that it is moral, that it is just, to permit a man to escape paying his taxes merely because his income is derived from a certain source. By voting against this amendment it seems to me we would be putting a premium on tax dodging. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words on the amendment. First without referring to any arguments made pro or con, I wish to consider it in the light of the very language of the sixteenth amendment itself. The amendment to the Constitution reads as follows:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

As I understand the English language, I do not know how language could be made more emphatic, how any language could be used which would come nearer expressing the opinion that Congress has power to levy taxes on all incomes. That is what the amendment provides. The amendment makes no exception. It leaves the matter entirely in the hands of Congress.

When the amendment was adopted, we were starting out on a program which would permit Congress to levy taxes on incomes from the bonds of States and counties. What language could we use which would be more expressive than the language that was employed in the amendment, namely, that "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived." Does that include income derived from what we now know as a tax-exempt bond? Can anyone construe the language employed in any way so as to exclude such bonds, when such power is given?

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LEE. That is the language which the States passed on when they ratified the sixteenth amendment, is it not?

Mr. NORRIS. Of course it is.

Mr. LEE. Then how can it be argued that we should not tax such income because the States would not like it, and that it would be infringing on them, when they themselves have given us the power in the sixteenth amendment? I doubt whether the Senator thinks that any of those States believed that the language meant anything except what it says.

Mr. NORRIS. It certainly does not mean anything else. I do not understand how anyone can put any other construction on it. It does not require a lawyer or a court to tell us that the sun is shining when we go out and see it. It does not require an educated man to tell a man who is not so well educated that a big oak tree is standing in front of him, when he is looking at it. As in the case of Galileo, we may compel a man to say the earth does not move, but he knows it does move, no matter how many times he may say it does not. I do not know how we could make language any plainer.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator at this point to the fact that six previous revenue acts, commencing with the Revenue Act of 1861 and continuing down to 1894, contained language almost identical in structure and meaning with that contained in the sixteenth amendment. The language was that incomes from any source whatever should be taxed. That has been construed by the Treasury, it has been construed by the Supreme Court in the Pollock case, and it has been construed by the general public, because they paid that kind of a tax, to include the income from State and municipal bonds. Therefore, under any rule of statutory or constitutional construction, the people must have given to that language the same meaning they had given to almost identical language in the six previous revenue acts which had been in effect since 1861.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator. I think what he has said is absolutely accurate. I do not know how anyone can by any possible construction put a different meaning on the language.

It was argued very ably yesterday that when the sixteenth amendment was before the Senate for consideration, just prior to its submission, Senator Borah contended that it did not give any new power. Senator Root, of New York, another constitutional lawyer, argued along the same line. They believed that the power existed in Congress before, and that the reason why the law had been held unconstitutional was because of the apportionment feature. I think the general belief was that Congress had the power to levy an income tax before the amendment was adopted.

To demonstrate what these very able constitutional lawyers believed, I have before me on my desk the roll call on the adoption of the joint resolution providing for the submission of the sixteenth amendment, which was passed by the Senate on the 5th day of July 1909. I find among the Senators voting for it Senator Borah, of Idaho, and Senator Root, of New York.

Mr. LEE. Was this the sixteenth amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. The sixteenth amendment, which is now a part of the Constitution, the very amendment we have been discussing. The vote was unanimous. There was not a single dissenting voice raised in this Chamber when the roll was called.

After the joint resolution passed the Senate on the 5th of July, the amendment was submitted to the States under the provision of our Constitution providing for its amendment, and it was approved by the States themselves and became a part of the Constitution.

Everyone thought at that time, as I understand, at least, that the question was settled. We had used language so plain that an eighth-grade student in a country school would be able to see clearly just what the amendment meant.

Very ingenious arguments have been made, by very able men, and by some courts and judges, that we did not mean what we said, and that the States did not mean what the amendment said. It was argued that, after all, while the amendment said in so many words what the power of Congress should be, notwithstanding that delegation of power, the power did not exist.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, would the Senator mind a short interruption upon that very point, as to what occurred in the New York State Legislature when the amendment was submitted?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. Governor Hughes, of New York, sent a message to the New York State Legislature in which he said that undoubtedly the language, quoting from the constitutional amendment, "income from whatever source derived," would permit the taxing of State and municipal bonds by the Federal Government. Governor Hughes used that as an argument against ratification of the amendment by the New York State Legislature. The three most prominent lawyers, perhaps, of the New York bar, Mr. Choate, Mr. Guthrie, and another whose name I do not recall, were the attorneys who tried the Pollock case, in which the Supreme Court held in 1895, I think it was, that a municipal bond could not be taxed by the Federal Government because of the constitutional provisions.

Those three attorneys went before the New York State Legislature. They were the men who had struck down the power of the Federal Government, through the agency of the Pollock case, to tax municipal and State bonds. They went before the New York State Legislature and said, "If you adopt the sixteenth amendment there is no doubt it will mean that the Federal Government has the power to tax State and municipal bonds."

The result was that the New York State Legislature, under the leadership of Governor Hughes, and basing its opposition upon its desire to prevent ratification of the amendment, struck it down and refused to ratify it.

Immediately thereafter an election occurred. The Democratic platform contained a provision favoring the ratification of the sixteenth amendment. The Republican platform was silent upon that subject. The matter of ratifying the sixteenth amendment became an issue in that campaign. Governor Dix was elected over the Republican candidate. The legislature met and ratified the sixteenth amendment.

I thought the argument of the Senator from Nebraska would be helped by that bit of legislative history in connection with the ratification of the sixteenth amendment by the largest State in the Union.

Mr. NORRIS. Again I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. President, the illustration given by the Senator from Michigan demonstrates, I think, that the States agreed to and ratified the sixteenth amendment without any misunderstanding. They agreed to it believing it would give the Federal Government the power to tax municipal, county, and State bonds, and they believe it yet, in my judgment, because it is fair, because it is just.

By reason of the fact that Congress has not taken action along that line, much dissatisfaction has arisen, some of it exaggerated probably. The idea that some bonds shall be subject to an income-tax levy and some shall not is to my mind obnoxious. I can conceive of a time when the life of the Nation might be hanging by a thread, when it would be necessary for the Government of the United States to exhaust every avenue of taxation in order to support its own life, in order to continue the existence of the Republic. If we take the view that we cannot levy a tax on the income derived from this sort of securities, it seems to me we are to a great extent interfering with the power of Congress to preserve the life of the Nation itself.

If I receive an income large enough to pay an income tax, why should I be permitted to say that the income I receive from a certain county bond shall be free from taxation, whereas the income derived from this business or that institution shall be taxed? Why would that not be the same as saying that a man engaged in a certain kind of manufacturing business should be free from all taxes, while his neighbor across the street should pay taxes? The income which the individual receives as interest from a county bond is no more sacred than the income he receives from any other kind of property.

It is sometimes argued, probably with a great deal of truthfulness, that if the interest on municipal bonds is taxed it will result in increasing the rate of interest the people of the community will have to pay when they borrow money. If that were always the effect, it would, in my judgment, make no difference whether the bonds were taxed or not. But there is no doubt that the people at large believe that some men of great wealth are making money out of this tax exemption, while others are not able to do so. The evil psychology resulting therefrom was pointed out very clearly by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] just before I took the floor. Such tax exemption does mean something. It means that there is something in favor of the taxpayers who are the best able to pay the tax. If we are levying taxes based upon ability to pay, then certainly it seems to me we should adopt the pending amendment. It would result in removing the evil psychology that exists, whether rightly or wrongly, in the breasts of most American citizens. If there is no favored class, the way to prove it is to levy taxes on all incomes alike.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. How extensive is the evil to which the Senator now is pointing, is well exemplified by the records of the Treasury Department for the last available year, 1938, of estates upon which the Federal Government levies an estate tax. As appears from the returns of the Treasury Department for 1938, 45 percent of the total amount of property held by estates of $5,100,000 and upward is in the form of tax-exempt bonds. I think that is a remarkable figure.

Mr. NORRIS. It is remarkable.

Mr. BROWN. Forty-five percent of the property of estates having a gross total of $5,100,000 and over is in the form of tax-exempt bonds.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I find no fault with the man who invests his money in tax-exempt bonds. The man who has money to invest in bonds, thinking only of the return he will get from the investment of his money, will do well, I think, to look and see what securities are attractive. He has a right to do that. It is honest to do that. If he finds a certain security that is tax-exempt he will invest his money in it. I do not join in the condemnation sometimes hurled against men who have their money so invested.

I have in mind a Senator for whom I have great respect, who sat in this Chamber for many years, a very wealthy man, whose money was to a great extent invested in municipal securities. I did not think that was any indication that he was not patriotic or honest. I have talked with him many times, and I know that in his home city, when bonds were issued for a public purpose and there was difficulty in selling them, he took the whole issue. He did a remarkably fine, patriotic thing for his immediate vicinity—a perfectly honorable, fair, and open transaction.

So, I am not joining with those who cry out against a man simply because he is rich and has invested his riches in tax-exempt bonds. It is the law that is to blame. It is the law that gives him that opportunity; and the law ought to be amended so that he could not do so. Referring to the Senator about whom I have been speaking, he was always in favor of removing the tax exemption and putting all bonds on the same basis, even though it would mean less income for himself, because his taxes would be increased. He worked and voted in favor of eliminating the tax exemption.

Mr. President, the amendment applies only to bonds which are issued subsequent to its adoption. It cannot be argued under any circumstances that it points in any degree to the nature of an ex post facto law. Investments now made, which are not subject to the income tax, will not be made subject to the income tax if the amendment shall be agreed to. I think the American people almost unanimously believe in such a law. It would not only put a quietus upon many complaints which are made—some of them, I think, unjustly; but it would be satisfactory to the States which adopted the constitutional amendment. This is the result they wanted when they adopted the constitutional amendment.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LEE. In other words, the people of the United States have asked for a law which will tax income "from whatever source derived." The President of the United States has asked us to pass a law which will carry out that purpose and stop the exemption privilege. The present Secretary of the Treasury, as well as his predecessor, asked Congress for legislation to end the tax-exemption privilege. It seems that everyone concerned with the question so far has passed it on and said, "Do it." The next move is up to Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so. It is up to us.

Mr. LEE. Starting with the people, everyone concerned has given it the "green light." Now it is up to us.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senate passed the constitutional amendment, as required by the Constitution. The House did the same, and it was submitted to the legislatures, which agreed to it. A constitutional amendment without a law to support it means nothing. It is up to us to pass a law to make effective the very constitutional amendment which the Congress agreed to and which the States have approved. I think such a law would meet the approval of 90 percent of our people. It would be fair and just. It would relieve us and our successors in the Senate, as well as succeeding administrations, of the criticism that we are acting unjustly. It would relieve even the men who are the most wealthy, and who receive the greatest benefit from tax exemption, of criticism which is sometimes unjust; and it would give effect to a constitutional amendment which, after years of agitation and argument, was practically unanimously adopted. It would put a construction upon language which is now so plain that it does not need anybody to construe it.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LEE. Does the Senator think that a single one of the States which approved the constitutional amendment did not believe when it did so that it was thereby putting its approval on the authority of Congress to tax a man's income, from whatever source derived?

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, the States thought so. I do not see how any intelligent man could think otherwise, because that is just what the language says.

Mr. LEE. No matter whether the income comes from interest on a State bond or municipal bond. Does the Senator still think that the States, when they approved the constitutional amendment, believed they were giving Congress the power to tax such incomes?

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, they thought so.

Mr. LEE. So did I; and, in my opinion, so did everybody else in the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. So did every Senator who passed upon the question. So did the Members of the House of Representatives; and, in my opinion, the people of the United States think so now. I think we made a mistake in not passing a law similar to this years ago. We ought to have given effect to the constitutional amendment immediately upon its adoption. I think it is extremely important that we adopt the pending amendment and bring delayed justice to the people of the United States.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, in a dozen sentences or so I can summarize my position in reference to the pending proposal. Let me first state my conclusion, and then the reasons upon which that conclusion rests.

I am unalterably opposed to the exercise of the alleged power of the Federal Government to tax income from State and municipal securities. So strongly do I feel on this question that should this amendment be adopted I should unhesitatingly vote against the passage of the bill. My reasons follow.

We have just listened to a very able discussion of the constitutional question involved. However, I think the conclusions drawn by my colleague [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], and others are entirely erroneous in this respect: Of course, taking by itself the language "from whatever source derived," it would appear to indicate that by the constitutional amendment the people were vesting in the Federal Government authority to tax the income from State securities. But what was the reason why an amendment to the Constitution was necessary? Was it because there was a great demand from one end of the country to the other that the Federal Government be given the power to reach out and tax income from State and municipal bonds? Certainly not. Nowhere in the country, so far as I have been able to find—and I have made a careful study—did any public man rise and say, "We must amend the Constitution of the United States in order that the Federal Government may do that which it has heretofore been denied the right to do, and which everyone had held it may not do, and that is to reach out into the States and tax the securities of the States."

What was the reason why it was necessary to amend the Constitution? We all know the answer. It was not feasible for the Federal Government to levy an income tax and apportion it among the States according to population. I say, without any fear of successful contradiction, that that was the sole and only reason why the agitation came about for an amendment to the Constitution, and that that was the only reason in the minds of the members of the State legislatures, of the overwhelmingly majority of the Members of this body and of the House, and of the people of the country.

It is true, as was pointed out, that the Governor of one of the great States, Governor Hughes, of New York, when he read this language, said, "This may go beyond what the proponents of a constitutional amendment want to do. This language says 'from whatever source derived'." The Federal Government was being given authority to tax income; and Mr. Hughes, being meticulous in matters of language, said, "That language might give to the Federal Government the power to go into the States and tax the securities of New York and other States."

What answer was made whenever that point was raised? Not that it was desirable to give the Federal Government that authority, but that Mr. Hughes was being overtechnical; that that result would not follow, and that such power would not exist. I do not believe that when Senator Borah and Senator Root took the position on the floor of the Senate that the proposed constitutional amendment would not give such power to the Federal Government, they did so on the ground that they thought the power had always been present in the Federal Government to do this thing, and therefore that this very broad language would not enlarge it. One reason why I do not think that was in Senator Borah's mind was that I find that even as late as last year, within 4 or 5 months of his death, Senator Borah wrote to the Conference on State Defense, and in the course of his letter said:

> In the first place, I do not think Congress would have the power to tax these securities and instrumentalities of the State without a constitutional amendment.

As I understand, that was the opinion of Senator Borah at the time of his death, and I believe that it was his opinion when he said that it was unnecessary for anyone to oppose the amendment on the theory that it would give the Federal Government the power to reach out and tax the instrumentalities of the States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I am very glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator tell us, if his theory is correct as to the meaning of the words "from whatever source derived," why they were put in the amendment?

Mr. BURKE. No, I cannot explain that; I do not know why that particular language was used.

Mr. NORRIS. If the only reason for the amendment was to change the apportionment provision of the Constitution so as to avoid that difficulty—if those who adopted the amendment merely wanted to do that which could be done by inserting the words "without apportionment among the several States," why did they use the other language?

Mr. BURKE. It seemed to Governor Hughes at the time if that was all that Congress intended to do, those who framed the amendment would not have used that language. I have no explanation of it; but I ask the Senator: Does he recall from his own experience or through refreshing his memory by going back over the occasion that he or any of his colleagues in Congress or any considerable body of sentiment in the country at that time favored specifically granting the authority to the Federal Government to tax securities of the States?

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I cannot give the Senator a definite answer, because that was a great many years ago, and I do not remember; but I have always entertained the idea, and entertain it now, that the principal reason for this amendment was to tax the very securities the Senator has mentioned.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. A very interesting article on the precise point the junior Senator from Nebraska is now discussing was brought out in an article in the Journal of the American Bar Association for December 1920, written by Mr. Harry Hubbard, who was, as I recall, connected with Yale University. It will be recalled that the Supreme Court in the case of Evans against Gore had just decided that the words to which we are referring, "incomes from whatever source derived," had no particular meaning and did not add anything to the power of Congress to tax incomes. Mr. Hubbard had written an article previously upon that subject, which was seen by Senator Knute Nelson, who was then, in 1920 or about that time, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

Senator Nelson wrote, on May 7, 1920, this letter to Mr. Hubbard:

I thank you very much for sending me a copy of the Harvard Law Review containing your article on the sixteenth amendment, which I have read with much interest. I am glad to see that you concur in my views. The words "from whatever source derived" were inserted in the amendment in the Senate at my instance and on my insistence. I have been very sorry to see that the Supreme Court in its decision—has utterly ignored the phrase; in fact, treated the amendment as though this phrase were not a part of it.

Referring to the case of Evans against Gore—

In a subsequent letter, dated September 10, 1920, Senator Nelson, referring to the statement in the previous letter:

You have the liberty to use my statement quoted in your letter. The RECORD may not show it, but I introduced the amendment, and the facts are that at the time Mr. Aldrich was chairman of the Finance Committee, and I discussed the matter with him, and insisted on the amendment being inserted, and he concurred with me and reported the bill with the phrase "from whatever source derived" added.

That is the phrase, of course, which is in the constitutional amendment.

Mr. Hubbard then says in his article:

Senator Aldrich was, as everyone knows, the real leader of the Senate, especially in financial matters. He knew what he was doing.

Mr. Hubbard goes on to say:

Here, then, is the history of these words of the amendment. The word "direct" was taken out in order not to limit income taxes to those which were "direct" (and which were held invalid in the Pollock case), and the words "from whatever source derived" were inserted in order to make the power to tax incomes as broad as the incomes themselves could be. Thus the amendment was changed and reported by the Finance Committee, passed by the Senate and House, and ratified by the legislatures in more than three-fourths of the States.

That is the letter in which Senator Nelson, of Minnesota, explained how those words got into the amendment. They were put in there for the purpose of being certain that all income would be taxable.

Mr. BURKE. I am fairly familiar with the Nelson letter, but let me suggest to the Senator from Michigan that he has overlooked the fact that on the day when this matter was under discussion on the floor of the Senate and when Senator Borah arose in his place and said he did not believe that the inclusion of that language would do the thing which was being objected to, namely, give to the Federal Government the power to tax the instrumentalities of the State, and when on that same day or during that same discussion Senator Elihu Root and others arose and took the same position, the RECORD shows that Senator Nelson, who was not only a Member of the Senate but was on the floor of the Senate at the time, said not a word carrying out the idea which some years later he expressed in his letter. So I am forced to the conclusion that Senator Nelson later on, after the argument had arisen and the Supreme Court had rendered a decision, or something else had happened, read back into his original position a great many things that were not there, because, knowing something of Senator Nelson, for I happened, when a young man, to live in his State and had a very slight acquaintance with him, I know that he was frank enough, so that if, when Senator Borah and Senator Root were making their positions clear, Senator Nelson had then in mind the thought he expressed in his letter later on, he would have risen and said, "No, my friends; no; this language is all inclusive. It means that if we submit this amendment to the States and they ratify it, the Federal Government may tax the instrumentalities of the States;" and, in fact, probably he would have said, "That is the very reason why I suggested that the language be used." But he did nothing of the kind. He sat in his seat in complete silence.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. A very long and, I think, instructive speech could be made upon that incident on the floor of the Senate. After the Hughes message was received, given wide publicity, and reached the ears of Senators, a resolution was introduced in the Senate of the United States to determine what was meant by this language. Senator Borah made a speech, Senator Root made a speech, and Senator Norris Brown, of Nebraska, who was a predecessor of the junior Senator from Nebraska, I presume, and who was the author of the amendment, also made a speech. One cannot read the speeches made by Senator Norris Brown without coming to the conclusion that he did not definitely take one side or the other of this question. Senator Borah and Senator Root took definite positions. The resolution was laid on the table for further discussion, to be taken up at a later time. It was undoubtedly assumed by Senator Nelson and all other Members of the Senate at that time, the matter having been brought to their attention by the speeches of Senators Root and Borah, that opportunity would again be given to consider the resolution when it was brought before the Senate. It was never again brought before the Senate; it died with the session of the Senate, remaining upon the calendar, and was never further discussed.

I may say to the Senator that I do not want to take his time but, in my own time, I will show what were the views of many Members of the Senate, many members of the Ways and Means Committee of the other House, and not of just one Governor, as the Senator from Nebraska has said, but of 15 Governors in connection with the submission of the question of ratification to the various States of the Union. I shall not now further take the Senator's time.

Mr. BURKE. Will the Senator, in his own time, when he is discussing that matter, offer proof to support the statements of the junior Senator from Oklahoma in his colloquy with my colleague a short time ago, in which he drew the conclusion that the legislatures of all the States then in the Union that voted in favor of the adoption of the sixteenth amendment understood that they were voting to give the Federal Government the power to tax State and municipal obligations, and that every one of the legislatures that so voted did so willingly and gladly, as I believe he said, and certainly in such a way as now to estop every one of those States raising any objection.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. LEE. The Senator made my statement somewhat stronger than I did, but I think I can prove the statement. However, since the power of the Federal Government to tax its own securities was not in question, will the Senator from Nebraska tell us what other reason there could be for adopting the sixteenth amendment?

Mr. BURKE. Certainly; I have already explained that. The one reason, the sole reason, in the minds of those who agitated for the adoption of the sixteenth amendment, was that a Federal income tax was not feasible so long as it had to be apportioned among the States according to population. That was the thing which knocked out the income tax when it was previously enacted, or at least that was the consideration which made it absolutely impossible to have a Federal income tax which would rest with any justice upon the people of the country, if it had to be apportioned according to population. So, from all the study I have made of this question, I have never had any doubt in my mind that practically everyone who favored the passage of the sixteenth amendment wanted to get rid of the necessity of apportioning the tax among the States according to population, and that practically none of them, if any, desired to give to the Federal Government power to tax the instrumentalities of the States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. BURKE. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. If that be true, if the Senator's analysis is correct that the only thing the proponents of the amendment wanted to do was to do away with the necessity of apportionment among the States according to population, and they had no idea of extending that authority any further, does not my colleague agree that they did not do in the amendment what they wanted to do, and that they did just what they did not want to do?

Mr. BURKE. No; I would not quite agree to that. They did fully what they wanted to do. They did away with the necessity of apportionment; but if I am correct in thinking that that was all they wanted to do, I have no explanation to offer as to why they put in the words "from whatever source derived." I do not know why that language was put in; but I imagine that in practically every piece of legislation we pass in this body some language is used which goes beyond the particular purpose desired. I know that in the bill which we have just passed, the Selective Training and Service Act, after I had studied it over, even now I can see in it some language which at some future time may cause a great deal of discussion, and it may be said, "What did the Senate mean when they put in this language? If they wanted to accomplish a certain purpose, they did not need to use this general language"; and I suppose that is true of practically every piece of legislation passed.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the attitude the Senator is taking here in effect mean that the Senator wants to take out of the amendment the words "from whatever source derived"? Is not that the effect of the Senator's position?

Mr. BURKE. No; I will explain my own position on that subject. As I say, I do not know why the language was put in.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator want to take it out?

Mr. BURKE. No.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator think we ought to give it construction if we can? We ought not to obliterate it unless it becomes absolutely necessary on the record, and not from what somebody thinks.

Mr. BURKE. I will say that I not only think it ought to be taken out but I think it will be taken out if the Brown amendment is enacted into the law and the Supreme Court upholds it. I think there will then start in this country such a movement for repeal of that part of the sixteenth amendment that it will very promptly be taken out, and ought to be taken out.

Mr. NORRIS. I concede that if it is taken out in that way that will be a perfectly legitimate procedure. That will be all right.

Mr. BURKE. I was going on to say that while I cannot give any logical reason why the language was put in, and I am not at all satisfied with this explanation, it is the only thing that is in my mind. I think it was just one of those casual things that happen; but there may be some merit in the contention—I do not know whether there is or not—that having in mind only, as I insist, doing away with the necessity of apportionment among the States according to population, some technician or person with other qualities inserted this language, that it might have been construed to mean that within the broad limits of the powers recognized as belonging to the Federal Government for the taxation of income it should be taxed regardless of the source from which it came; but it having been taken so fully for granted that it was fundamental in our system that the Federal Government should not have the power of striking down the States by taxing their instrumentalities, they did not, or at least enough of them did not, see how dangerous it would be to leave that language in the statute. Governor Hughes saw it, and others saw it.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. How does the Senator account for the fact that there was a Pollock case, in which the question arose of the right of the Federal Government to impose a tax on the interest received by the owner of a municipal bond, unless at some time in our history we taxed municipal bonds? We taxed them in 1861; we taxed them in 1863; we taxed them in 1870; and in six different statutes, ending with 1894, we imposed a tax on municipal bonds. The Pollock case arose because of that situation; and the decision in the Pollock case was based in part upon the argument that the bonds of a municipality were not taxable because of lack of power to attack the source.

The Senator asked me a question, and I want to answer it.

Mr. BURKE. I suggest that the Senator answer it in his own time; but go ahead. I have plenty of time.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator asked me why the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] said that the members of the State legislatures who ratified this amendment acted as they did. I think there is no better reason than is contained in the brief which was filed by the representatives of the State attorneys general, which we knew in our committee as "the yellow book." On page 334 of their brief they say—and I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] to this—

> It may be true that a man from Mars, or an average uninformed citizen, knowing nothing about the constitutional history of the country, or about the other provisions of the Constitution, upon being handed a slip of paper containing only the sixteenth amendment, would probably say that it constituted a grant of power to tax incomes, and that the words "from whatever source derived" would seem to authorize the taxation of all sorts of incomes, including an income from municipal bonds.

I say that the members of the State legislatures and the common citizenry of the country were just the "uninformed citizens" that the brief speaks about.

What rule should be applied in the construction of a constitutional provision? I have here the language of Mr. Justice Roberts:

> The Constitution was written to be understood by the voters. Its words and phrases were used in their normal and ordinary, as distinguished from technical, meaning. Where the intention is clear, there is no room for construction and no excuse for interpolation or addition.

Again, Chief Justice Marshall said:

> As men, whose intentions require no concealment, generally employ the words which most directly and aptly express the ideas they intend to convey, the enlightened patriots who framed our Constitution and the people who adopted it must be understood to have employed words in their natural sense and to have intended what they said.

So I think the complete answer to the Senator is that the members of the State legislatures read the sixteenth amendment when they ratified it, they knew what it meant, and they adopted it, and the American people today know what it means; and we ought to follow the common, ordinary construction that is put on it by the average citizen of the country.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, so far from the quotation given by the Senator from Michigan from the attorneys general being an answer to anything I have said, I think it offers a very complete answer to the argument presented by the Senator from Oklahoma and to the argument of my colleague the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], because they are arguing, "Why, just take these words 'from whatever source derived': How can they mean anything else than that the Federal Government may go out and, if it sees fit, tax the States out of existence by taxing their securities?" The attorneys general say, "It might be that a man from Mars, or an uninformed person knowing nothing about the constitutional history of the country or about other provisions of the Constitution," having before him merely the words "from whatever source derived," would think that that is what was meant; but that was not the situation in the State legislatures when they passed on this constitutional amendment. Here was a great question argued all over the country first, then coming to the Senate and the House, considered there in committees and argued on the floor of these bodies, and then going out into the State legislatures—I assume this amendment was adopted by State legislatures and not in the conventions—and argued there and discussed in the newspapers; and no one at that time was in the condition of the man from Mars and was confining himself just to that language, as I see it. But, really, the question which I asked the Senator from Michigan was that I hoped he would, in the time allotted to him, show definitely from the statements of Governors of the other States, or the legislatures of those States, or prominent people at that time, that it was the desire of anyone to invest in the Federal Government authority to tax the instrumentalities of the States, and that that was the controlling reason, or even any part of the reason, why the amendment was adopted.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. LEE. Usually in debate and law the burden of proof is on the opposite side from the presumption. Therefore I think the Senator from Nebraska has the burden of proof to demonstrate that they did not believe that this language said that Congress could tax income from whatsoever source derived, because that was in the document, and the document is its own best evidence.

Mr. BURKE. I will sustain that burden of proof by calling as a witness, as to the necessity of a constitutional amendment before this power can be given, a man whose word on constitutional matters will carry more weight, to me at least, than will the judgment of my good friend, the Senator from Oklahoma. I will call again and refer again to the greatest constitutional lawyer we have had in this body in the last generation or two, our late colleague, Senator Borah, who said, within 4 months of the time of his death, in a letter to the Conference on State Defense:

> In the first place, I do not think Congress would have the power to tax these securities and instrumentalities of the State without a constitutional amendment.

That was what this great student of the Constitution, as well as great student of the English language, said, when he was right here, and went through this whole controversy. He did not believe then, and never believed, that he was voting to give the Federal Government power to tax the instrumentalities of a State. That was his judgment, and if I must sustain the burden of proof in order to overcome some presumption, I will offer the words of this witness, Senator Borah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator on the amendment has expired.

Mr. BURKE. I will take my time on the bill.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. LEE. Let me offer a witness on constitutional law who, I believe, will stand up with the witness offered by the Senator from Nebraska. Was it not true that soon after the ratification of the sixteenth amendment, or about that time, the then Governor of New York, now Chief Justice of the United States, had a debate with Senator Borah on this question, and did not Governor Hughes at that time take the position that this language did mean that the Government could tax the income from State securities?

Mr. BURKE. I do not recall the debate, but the Senator from Oklahoma is entirely correct in saying that prior to the adoption of the amendment the then Governor of New York, Mr. Hughes, had taken the position that the language used might give to the Federal Government the power to do what is now being attempted.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. As to the question of a debate, I think that at no time did Governor Hughes definitely express the opinion that that would be the effect of the amendment. He expressed the fear that that claim might be made, nothing more. Since then, as Chief Justice, of course, he has several times held just the opposite view.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. LEE. I remember that Senator Borah told me on one occasion, in a conversation, about the debate with the present Chief Justice Hughes. I cannot see how there could be much debate unless one took one position and the other the opposite.

Mr. BURKE. I have no doubt that the RECORD shows that Governor Hughes felt that it was dangerous to adopt the amendment in the way it was worded, because it might place in the hands of the Federal Government the power to do what the Brown amendment would authorize to be done. As I recall it, he was pooh-poohed. People said, "That is like the erudite man Governor Hughes is. He is carried away by the meaning of words. There is no truth or substance in it."

I am very anxious to have the Senator from Michigan, when his time comes, call as witnesses one after another members of the State legislatures, the Governors, and the other prominent people, who, not in some letter they might have written years later when they wanted to put a little different complexion on their attitude, but who at that very time said, "Yes; this amendment will not only do away with the apportionment roll but will enlarge the taxing field of the Federal Government, and specifically will include the power to the Federal Government to tax the interest on securities of States and municipalities. That is what we want and that is the reason why we are ratifying this amendment." I shall listen for that with a great deal of interest. If the Senator from Michigan could present such evidence, I would admit that a good deal of the argument I am making on this point would not be conclusive. I would submit it, then, for what it was worth, if that kind of evidence could be presented.

But, as I started to say, I had intended only to mention the matter of unconstitutionality and quote Senator Borah's opinion on that point, and then proceed to what appears to me to be the more serious aspects of this problem.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I have heard the view advanced that when Congress submitted the so-called income-tax amendment it then felt that the amendment would give it the power to tax State securities through a statute.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator has not heard me venture any opinion of that kind.

Mr. HILL. No; but I say that view has been advanced.

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I recall that one of the first votes I cast when I became a Member of the House of Representatives, some years ago—as I recall, the vote was taken about 1925—was on a proposed constitutional amendment to permit the Federal Government to tax State securities. A majority of the House of Representatives voted to submit the amendment, but it did not receive the necessary two-thirds, therefore the amendment was not submitted. But if the House of Representatives felt that it had the power to pass a statute affecting State securities, why should the House of Representatives have taken the time and trouble and have gone through the unnecessary procedure of discussing and considering the submission of a constitutional amendment to give the Congress power to tax State securities?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

Mr. BURKE. I yield to the Senator from Michigan, who desires to make some comment on the statement just made.

Mr. BROWN. I may say to the Senator from Alabama that in 1918, if I recall the year correctly, at least it was about that time, the House of Representatives did pass a revenue act which levied a tax on municipal bonds. The argument was made then that it was unconstitutional to do so. The bill failed of passage when it went into conference between the Senate and the House.

Shortly thereafter the case of Evans against Gore was decided, in which the author of the majority opinion, Judge Van Devanter, took the position that the sixteenth amendment did not change the power of Congress to tax, that all it did was to remove the necessity for apportionment, just as the Senator from Nebraska has said.

Mr. BURKE. Who was that able judge?

Mr. BROWN. Judge Van Devanter.

Mr. BURKE. I always had a great respect for his opinions.

Mr. BROWN. Justice Holmes and one other Justice dissented from that view. The case was decided upon an argument made by the Attorney General of the United States, in which the Attorney General conceded that the sixteenth amendment did not give the right to the Federal Government to tax the securities of States.

Mr. BURKE. Who was that very able Attorney General? We should have his name in the RECORD also.

Mr. BROWN. I cannot recall the name. We may be able to put it in, if the Senator desires.

Mr. BURKE. I should certainly like to have it in the RECORD.

Mr. BROWN. It was not until a more liberal attitude toward the construction of the amendment began to take hold of the people of the United States that we undertook to examine into the history of the adoption of the sixteenth amendment, and when we did so, many of us felt that there could be little doubt as to what the attitude of the Court would be now if this proposition were presented to it.

Mr. BURKE. When the Senator called attention to the fact that just a few years ago, an Attorney General of the United States gave a reasoned opinion on an important matter of this kind contrary to the position which the Senator is now taking, I hoped he was not holding up to contrast some decisions of later Attorneys General, against whom it is freely charged that they render whatever kind of an opinion the Chief Executive may happen to desire in a particular case, whether it be as to a transfer of destroyers, or on any other subject which may be involved.

Mr. BROWN. I am trying to keep the debate on the plane of legal argument, and I do not care to go into politics, which seems to be the direction in which the Senator is now heading.

Mr. BURKE. Then I will turn around and go the other way.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. LEE. In order that the Senator may go the other way, let me ask him a question. I am sure the Senator believes in the principle of a graduated income tax, that is, the income being a certain amount, that all people should pay a certain tax, but if the income goes to a level above that, then the rate paid should be increased, on the theory that the first bracket gives them a living, and the next bracket above that is not so necessary for living, and therefore the rate shall be increased; and in the third bracket ahead of that the rate is still further increased.

Mr. BURKE. Let me say that I subscribe heartily to the theory of the graduated income tax.

Mr. LEE. Does not the Senator feel that the tax-exemption privilege nullifies the effect of the progressive or graduated income tax by allowing persons with large incomes to escape paying the higher rate which they would have to pay in the upper brackets?

Mr. BURKE. I will answer the question in this way: I base my opposition to the Brown amendment solely on the ground that I am opposed to the Federal Government attempting to exercise the power to tax the instrumentalities of the States. I know that others have argued against the imposition of a tax upon Federal securities also, and I can see danger in doing that. Of course, it is simply a matter for Congress to decide whether that danger is as great as the interference, we will say, with the operation of the graduated income tax. I can see that it might have rather a serious effect upon the banks of the country which have been inveigled, or I might use the stronger language which the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] used earlier in the day in describing the condition under which the banks have become loaded up with Federal bonds, but that would be a question for Congress to decide.

If we confine the question to the part of the amendment to which I am objecting—of Federal taxation of State and local securities—I do not think there is any such substantial interference with the free working of the doctrine of the graduated income tax as to make it necessary for us to run full front into the very great dangers that would come from the adoption of the amendment.

While I am on that point, let me say that a short time ago the Senator from Michigan, in a colloquy with my colleague the senior Senator from Nebraska, referred to the fact that in all estates above a certain amount, during a certain period, as I recall——

Mr. BROWN. In 1938.

Mr. BURKE. In the one year 1938—that 45 percent of the assets of those estates consisted of tax-exempt securities. But the Senator did not point out—and I hope in his own time, if he has the figures, he will do so—what portion of those tax-exempt securities were obligations of States and municipalities. I think he would find that over a period of years—as I recall, during the last 10 years—in much smaller estates even than the minimum figure expressed by the Senator from Michigan, less than 5 percent of the assets of those estates consisted of tax-exempt securities issued by States and municipalities.

If there is any real interference with the working of the graduated income tax, if there is any real haven for those who desire to do away with the necessity of paying taxes, it is afforded largely, I think, by the practice we have in Congress of permitting the issuance of tax-exempt Federal securities, and, so far as I am concerned, if Congress wants to provide that never again shall Federal tax-exempt securities be issued, I will make no objection, although I realize, as I said, that even that might be a debatable question. However, what I am objecting to, and objecting to strenuously, is that the amendment would repose in the Federal Government the power to reach out into the State of Nebraska or any other State and tax all the instrumentalities of our State governments and their subdivisions.

I desire to discuss for a few moments that aspect of the case. In the same letter from Senator Borah, written in the fall of 1939 to the Conference on State Defense, after he had used that first sentence giving his view on the question of constitutionality, he went on to discuss the other phase of the matter. I will repeat the first sentence as well. Senator Borah said:

> In the first place, I do not think Congress would have the power to tax these securities and instrumentalities of the State without a constitutional amendment.
> In the second place—

I am still quoting from Senator Borah's letter—

> aside from the constitutional question, it is unsound and would be a disaster to the States, and I am quite sure also a disappointment to the National Government.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. LEE. Let us suppose the case of a man who has an income from his salary or his wages as a worker on a State highway and who also has an income from the interest on State bonds. Let us say he receives $2,000 a year from the State as wages and $2,000 a year in interest on State bonds. As the law now stands the Federal Government can tax the $2,000 income he receives from the State pay roll, but the Senator from Nebraska is now arguing that the same Federal Government ought not to have the power to tax the $2,000 income which he receives as interest on bonds, simply because they are State bonds. How does the Senator justify that fine shade of difference?

Mr. BURKE. I am not going to be led off into that discussion, as it has already been elaborated upon here at some length in the last few days, but I think there is a real distinction between taxing the salaries of officials and taxing the instrumentalities issued by the State to provide the revenue by which its existence may be perpetuated.

I realize it may be said that, of course, if the Federal Government were permitted to single out the salaries of State officials, or certain State officials, and tax them exorbitantly, that might accomplish the unfortunate end of taxing the State out of existence. But it cannot do that. The tax must be general on all properties, and so I am reconciled to the doctrine of taxing salaries. But I think there is a very clear distinction between that and the taxing of the instrumentalities of the State.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I wonder if there has been placed in the RECORD the statement by Senator Norris Brown, who was the father of the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution? A very clear statement was made by him, which indicates that he interpreted and all others interpreted the sixteenth amendment not to impinge upon the rights of the States.

Mr. BURKE. So far as I know, that statement has not been placed in the RECORD. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] referred to the position of Senator Norris Brown, of Nebraska. I should be very glad to have the statement inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. KING. I will hand it to the Senator from Nebraska. I am sure he would be very glad to avail himself of it and have it inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. BURKE. I think I shall take occasion, Mr. President, at this point to read a part of the statement made by Senator Norris Brown, of Nebraska. In April 1910, in the Editorial Review, Senator Brown, of Nebraska, made the following comment with regard to the words "from whatever source derived." This is the language of Senator Brown:

> The sole question, therefore, presented by the amendment, and the sole consideration involved in its ratification or rejection, is whether or not the United States, the foremost nation of the world, shall be clothed with this prerogative of national sovereignty—the power to tax incomes according to their value and without regard to apportionment among the several States according to population.

I have insisted earlier—and my colleague the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] to some extent were questioning my statement—that when the income-tax amendment was submitted by Congress and adopted by the legislatures, the one idea that the people of this country, and Members of the Senate and the House, and members of the State legislatures, and everyone else who favored the amendment had, was that they were going to make a Federal income tax workable by doing away with the court-construed necessity of apportioning such a tax among the States according to population, and I have said that not from my memory or from any research I have been able to make have I found that any of those—there might be some in considerable number, but I do not recall any—that any of those who were urging the sixteenth amendment did so on the ground that they wanted to vest in the Federal Government the authority to reach out and tax the income from all securities issued by States and municipalities and other subdivisions.

My statement on that point was questioned by other Senators, and I have challenged the Senator from Michigan, if he will in his own time, to offer some proof in support of the contention that those who favored the sixteenth amendment did so because they wanted to vest this power in Congress.

I am glad to have the statement of the author of the sixteenth amendment, Senator Norris Brown, who says that the sole purpose was to give—

> The power to tax incomes according to their value and without regard to apportionment among the several States according to population.

He goes on to say:

> Recently the question has been raised by those who are opposed to the ratification of the amendment that with the amendment ratified the powers of the States will in some way be impaired and their strength and vitality, in some way not specified, destroyed.
> The objection is not sound. The amendment in no way changes the existing relation between the State and the Federal Government. Whether the amendment is ratified or not, the rights of the State as a State and those of the Federal Government in their relation to each other will remain the same. Each sovereignty is now wholly independent of the other in the exercise of certain governmental functions and the proposed amendment neither adds to nor takes away from the independence now enjoyed by each. But it is the argument of some who oppose its adoption that the amendment will alter that relation by conferring upon the Federal Government the power to tax the incomes arising from investments in State and municipal securities.

It will be remembered that it was in 1910 that the author of the sixteenth amendment was giving this interpretation of it.

> I do not agree with that argument, because the language of the amendment and the occasion for its submission to Congress and the Constitution itself do not warrant that interpretation. Under the existing Constitution, the Federal Government is without the power to tax State or municipal securities. And the State is without the power to tax Federal securities. Each may tax its own securities but neither is subject to the jurisdiction of the other in taxation matters. The proposed amendment in not the remotest degree suggests any change in that regard. Each sovereignty is left the independent and exclusive privilege of taxing its own securities without interference by the other.

I shall now have to rise in defense of the former Senator from my State against what I am sure must have been the unwitting aspersion cast upon him by the author of the pending amendment, because, as I recall, within the past half hour the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], after reading the Senator Knute Nelson letter, in the colloquy said that he had studied those proceedings, and that he thought Senator Norris Brown, of Nebraska, did not have any very definite opinion one way or the other on the effect of the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. If we may paraphrase the famous saying by the philosopher Emerson, and also by the distinguished senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and say, "Inconsistency, thou art a jewel," I should say that Senator Norris Brown, of Nebraska, was a jewel.

Immediately following the remarks which the Senator has read, and in the same speech, Senator Brown said this:

> There is also a somewhat enthusiastic sentiment abroad in our land that the burdens should be borne by everybody in proportion to their ability to bear them, without regard to whether these abilities accrue from investments in farm lands or railroad stocks or State bonds. As a matter of common equity and even-handed justice to the entire citizenship of the country, to exempt one class of incomes and tax another is abhorrent. Under the New York argument—

That is, the Root argument—

> the man who earns an income by his labor is properly taxable; the man who collects dividends from stocks in individual enterprises—railroad, mercantile, and manufacturing—is properly taxable; but the man whose income arises from investments in State or municipal bonds should be exempt from the income tax.

That is what he said Senator Root was saying.

> On its face the proposition does not commend itself. It does not square with the doctrine of equal rights. It is hateful to every sense of justice. It cannot be defended in principle, nor can it be used successfully, in my judgment, to defeat this amendment.

The Senator continued with an argument that if a general income tax were applied to interest derived from State and municipal bonds, the credit of the States would not be impaired.

Mr. BURKE. Does the Senator seriously mean to offer that as being in any way contradictory to what Senator Brown said in the part which I read?

Mr. BROWN. Absolutely. I have read the debates very thoroughly, and I cannot determine from them what Senator Brown believed his amendment meant.

Mr. BURKE. Even from the reading which has been given, it is as clear as the hands on the clock before our eyes. Senator Brown made it indisputably clear that, in his judgment, there was nothing in the amendment, or in the wording used, "from whatever source derived," which would change the power of the Federal Government and give it the power to tax the instrumentalities of the State, or give the States the power to tax the instrumentalities of the Federal Government.

He goes on to say that if we were devising a wholly equitable system of taxation we should do away with all discriminations of this kind. How? By amending the Constitution of the United States in a way specifically to authorize one government to tax the instrumentalities of another. But it was Senator Brown's position, I am sure, as it was that of Senator Borah and others, that it is inherent and implicit in our Constitution that neither of the separate governmental agencies shall have any power to tax the instrumentalities of the other, and that to confer such authority would require not merely the language "from whatever source derived" but specific language covering the matter before the Federal Government could tax the instrumentalities of the States.

I am sure that was the position of Senator Norris Brown, as it is that of many others who take the same position. We are not arguing about the desirability of having the securities of the State exempt from taxation. I should wholly disagree with Senator Brown in that respect, in saying that we should amend the Constitution to give the Federal Government that power.

Mr. BROWN. He did not say anything like that. The Senator is reading into his speech language which is not there.

Mr. BURKE. Let the Senator put his whole speech in the RECORD at this point if he so desires. The language of Senator Norris Brown is clear in connection with what I have read. He said—and it cannot be disputed—that the adoption of the amendment would not change in any respect the power of the Federal Government to tax the bonds of the States, or of the States to tax the bonds of the Federal Government. Then he said, in effect, "But as for myself, I do not see why the man who holds railroad bonds should be taxed and the man who holds State or municipal bonds of any kind should not be taxed."

Mr. BROWN. He said that any man who takes a contrary position is not squaring with the doctrine of equal rights. He said that such a proposition was hateful to every sense of justice, and that it could not be defended in principle or used to defeat the amendment.

Mr. BURKE. But did he say that such a result would be brought about by the constitutional amendment he was favoring? No. He said exactly the opposite.

Mr. BROWN. I should say that he was gloriously inconsistent.

Mr. BURKE. Considering next the question of policy, it seems to me that the conclusion of Senator Borah is well founded. The most reliable evidence offered to the committee indicates an annual additional burden upon the States and municipalities in the enormous sum of $113,000,000. In a State such as my own, where we have no State income tax and do not intend to have one, our complete share of that loss would have to be borne almost exclusively by an increase in the tax on real property. The small-home owner and the small businessman, struggling to keep their heads above the water, would have tied to them an additional weight.

Even if Congress had the constitutional authority to impose the proposed tax, it is a power which, as a matter of policy, ought not to be exercised. Certainly it would go far in the further weakening of the States. Now is the time when every effort should be made to strengthen the States, throw additional responsibilities upon them, and take governing power away from Washington and give it back to the people. The adoption of the pending amendment would be a long move in the opposite direction.

Mr. President, this is a question of such far-reaching importance that it ought to be settled on its own merits, and not as a rider attached to a bill by amendment on the floor of the Senate. Let it come before Congress with the recommendation of the Ways and Means Committee of the House and of the Senate Committee on Finance. Let it be considered apart from all other questions, and voted up or down on its own merits, if it be determined that Congress has the power without going to the people with a proposed amendment to the Constitution.

In conclusion, I submit the following excerpt from an address delivered last year by the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. He said:

> The effect of taxing the income from Federal, State, or local issues will inevitably make them less attractive to the investor, and therefore make it more difficult for the respective governments to market their obligations. So, while it is difficult to prophesy what the Congress will do, it is my opinion that in the end an opportunity may be afforded the States and the people to pass on this question by constitutional amendment.

That is the request of the attorneys general of almost every State. They are joined by the Governors of many States, by the mayors of most of the cities of the country, by the boards of education of school districts, and by the directors of self-liquidating projects in every section of the Nation. It seems to me to be a reasonable request. I shall support it by voting against the Brown amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired, both on the amendment and on the bill.

Mr. LEE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Frazier	La Follette	Sheppard
Andrews	George	Lee	Shipstead
Ashurst	Gerry	McKellar	Smathers
Austin	Gibson	McNary	Stewart
Bailey	Gillette	Maloney	Taft
Barkley	Glass	Miller	Thomas, Idaho
Bilbo	Green	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Guffey	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Gurney	Neely	Tobey
Burke	Hale	Norris	Townsend
Byrd	Harrison	Nye	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Capper	Hayden	Overton	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Herring	Pepper	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Hill	Pittman	Wheeler
Connally	Holt	Radcliffe	White
Danaher	Hughes	Reed	Wiley
Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Russell
Downey	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz
Ellender	King	Schwellenbach

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BILBO in the chair). Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

AMENDMENT OF THE COMMODITY EXCHANGE ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4088) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and peanuts, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. BULOW, Mr. HATCH, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL MILITARY APPROPRIATIONS—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. GLASS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 607), making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, reported it without amendment.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On September 16, 1940:

S. 4008. An act to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans for the development of deposits of strategic and critical minerals which in the opinion of the Corporation would be of value to the United States in time of war, and to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make more adequate loans for mineral developmental purposes; and

S. 4164. An act to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training.

On September 18, 1940:

S. 2009. An act to amend the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, so as to provide for unified regulation of carriers by railroad, motor vehicle, and water, and for other purposes; and

S. 4165. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes.

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the time I may take upon the pending amendment will be devoted to three general propositions: First, the question of what sort of a burden the amendment would impose, with some incidental discussion of the so-called immunity rule; second, a discussion of the application of the sixteenth amendment to this controversy; and, finally, a discussion, which I hope will be short, of the merits of the general proposition.

Mr. President, I think I ought to answer the question as to why I am pressing this amendment at this time. I am pressing it because I think there is a widespread public sentiment in favor of it. We have endeavored to bring the subject of the elimination of tax-exempt bonds before the Senate on several occasions. As I said the other day, I assisted in preventing its consideration on earlier occasions because the leaders of the Democratic side agreed at that time that it would be unwise to attempt to press it inasmuch as my committee was studying the subject and a full report should be available before taking up the measure. I felt, since the Senate directed the special committee to report before the close of the present session, it was our duty now to report; and we have done so. I consider that the time has come when we must bring this subject to the attention of the Senate, and that is why it is here today.

Mr. President, the great majority of the people of this country, if we are to believe the Gallup poll, are strongly in favor of this measure. The leader of my party, the President of the United States, 2 years ago asked us in a message addressed to that subject, and to that subject solely, to enact this kind of legislation. The last four Presidents of the United States have urged that we adopt this character of legislation. Many of the latest Secretaries of the Treasury, including the present one, have asked that we do so. Of some 700 newspaper editorials upon the subject, which came very largely at the time our committee was first designated in 1938 by the Senate, over 600 editorials were in favor of a measure of this kind, about 40 newspapers opposed it, and most of those on the ground that there ought to be a constitutional amendment relative to the subject submitted rather than a statute enacted.

Finally, I believe that it should be urged upon the Congress at the present time because the platform of my party contains a plank urging the complete elimination of all tax-exempt bonds hereafter issued, be they State bonds or Federal bonds.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Does the plank refer to the method by which it should be done—whether by constitutional amendment or not?

Mr. BROWN. I have the plank before me, and in a short time will present it.

Mr. BURKE. Very well.

Mr. BROWN. The Frank report, which was prepared by the late Glen Frank, and which was the basis for the Republican platform, urged the immediate elimination of all tax-exempt bonds.

Therefore, Mr. President, I do not hesitate to take the time of the Senate in these late days of the session to bring this proposition before us, even if it has caused a few days' delay in the consideration of this tax measure. Those of us who favor this proposition have been put off from time to time, and I think the time has come when we ought to bring it prominently before the highest legislative body in the Nation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator will recall that 2 years ago, when a tax bill was before the Senate following a declaration of the President of the United States in favor of legislation of this type, I had prepared, and in fact had offered in the Senate, an amendment substantially along the lines of the present amendment. At that time we received assurances—there was no secret about it; the statement was made on the floor of the Senate both by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and by myself—from the responsible head of the appropriate committee in the House that a study of the subject would be immediately instituted in the House with a view to reporting a bill on the subject before the expiration of that year.

So far as I know, nothing has ever been done about that; and it is an astonishing thing to find the same objection being made to this amendment now that was made then, that it ought to be postponed until somebody else has a chance to study it some more. The matter has been before the country for many years; and, in view of the argument which has been made before, resulting in postponing it, it seems to me the supporters of this type of legislation cannot afford to do anything except take the present opportunity to put the matter back into conference on this bill.

Mr. BROWN. I agree with the Senator. It is the only method we have, and we are endeavoring to use it at the present time.

I now pass on, Mr. President, to the subject raised by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], who does me the honor of listening to me at this time. I think more than anyone else in the Senate he has urged that this amendment will be a tax upon the States. He is the protagonist in the Senate of the argument that this amendment violates the so-called immunity rule. As is usual, the question of fact and the question of law are closely intermingled; and I desire to address myself to that subject for a short time.

This is not a tax upon the State governments. It cannot in any way be construed to be a tax upon the State governments unless we take the absurd assumption that because everything a State buys and is taxed by the Federal Government, is a tax upon the State and in violation of the immunity rule.

Mr. President, it must be conceded at the outset of this argument that somewhere between one-fourth and one-half percent additional cost will be laid on the States by reason of the adoption of this amendment. That is the estimate of the Treasury Department. There will be some slight additional burden upon the States. I believe it will not be nearly so great as the income which the States may obtain by the imposition of State income taxes on $50,000,000,000 of Federal bonds which either are outstanding or presently will be outstanding; but I want to get down to the factual and legal situation.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point for just a moment, because I do not know that he will come back to the subject?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator believes that the income which the States may receive would offset and leave a balance over the burdens they would have to bear under this amendment?

Mr. BROWN. I do.

Mr. BURKE. What does the Senator say about a State like Nebraska, which never has had a State income tax, does not want one, and has no intention of adopting one? Does the Senator think it is entirely fair and proper to adopt now a Federal system of taxation which will force Nebraska to adopt a kind of taxation which it does not want, in a field which it is willing to leave entirely to the Federal Government?

Mr. BROWN. One cannot cover, in an argument of this kind, the situation in every State of the Union. Thirty-two States now have State income taxes. Michigan does not have one, and Nebraska does not have one. My State will not be a gainer in that respect; but if this amendment should be adopted, I certainly would urge the people of my State to adopt an income tax because of this very situation and for many other reasons.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. What effect does the Senator think the adoption of this amendment would have in respect to States like my State of Tennessee, which, by reason of constitutional provisions, are unable to enact laws requiring the payment of an income tax?

Mr. BROWN. I think it is very possible that some kind of tax can be devised, to which the consent of the Federal Government may be given, by which the income on Federal bonds may be reached. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has had that problem before our committee and, while it is not contained in this amendment, I think such legislation can be devised. It will take time to perfect this legislation, as is the case with all comprehensive reforms.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator probably does not remember, but when this matter came up and the committee was first appointed we had a conversation in which I indicated my feeling that there should be a cooperative effort upon the part of the Federal Government and the State governments to try to work out a taxing program. I said at that time that I feared that the Federal Government would simply place taxes upon State bonds, and then the States would come back and offset those taxes by more taxes upon Federal bonds, and then the Federal Government would come back and raise the taxes on State bonds. I felt that before we took action there should be some cooperative effort as between the State governments and the Federal Government to work out what would not be a binding agreement, but at least an agreement, so that that situation would not be brought about. I should like to inquire whether any effort along that line has been made in the past few years.

Mr. BROWN. I should have to say frankly to the Senator, no; no such effort has been made. There has been, in my judgment, too little cooperation between the State and the Federal taxing authorities in that respect; but I say to the Senator, as a practical matter, that it is my judgment that the only way in which this matter can be dealt with is for the one authority which, in my judgment, has power to enact this type of legislation to do so.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. As I understand the present legal situation, the States have a right to tax the salaries of Federal officials?

Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. That is not a right granted by the Congress, but is a right which the Supreme Court has recognized. In the Senator's judgment, do the States have a right to tax the income on State or municipal bonds without the consent of the Congress?

Mr. BROWN. I must ask the Senator, in the interest of conservation of time, not to compel me to go extensively into that question. I will say that there is great difference of opinion upon it. If the view of the noted and famous Chief Justice Marshall is taken, that authority does not now exist, because he believed in the complete supremacy of the Federal sovereignty over the States. If we adopt the rule which was indicated in the salary-tax cases, such as the O'Keefe case and the Gerhardt case, probably the other conclusion might be reached. That has not been definitely decided.

Mr. ADAMS. I gathered from my discussion the other day with the Senator that he felt that the line which I thought I saw in the O'Keefe case between the right to tax salaries and the right to tax bonds——

Mr. BROWN. I am right up to that question now.

Mr. ADAMS. All right. Then I will indicate to the Senator what I had in mind—that if the view was correct which the Senator indicated he had, that that line was an obscure line and perhaps an unsound line, but that the State might have, regardless of the consent of Congress, the right to tax the interest on Federal bonds, it would follow, then, that the States had the right to tax the bonds themselves.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator comes right to the heart of my present discussion. It must be conceded that a tax of this kind will lay some additional burdens upon the States. Likewise, it must be conceded that a tax of this kind will lay a State burden upon the Federal Government. In other words, there will be some increase in the interest rates. That is not a new or novel proposition. The incidence of taxes on those who deal with a State is not a new or novel proposition for the Court across the way to decide. It has been before them, not on a bond tax but on other intergovernmental relationships.

First, let me say—and that matter has not been discussed here at all—if we are to take at their full force and effect the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, the State of Louisiana, if it has an income tax, may tax the income from the bonds of the State of Colorado. I mean by that Louisiana has a right to lay an income tax on the interest obtained by a Louisiana taxpayer from bonds issued by the State of Colorado. That has been definitely decided, and has not been challenged. It is the case of Bonaparte v. Tax Court (104 U. S. 592 (1881)).

Does the Government of the United States impose burdens upon the State governments through the exercise of its taxing power? It certainly does. There is only one answer to that question.

When the State of Michigan buys a thousand tons of coal, the price of that coal contains in it taxes which have been paid out by the corporation which sold the coal in a multitudinous number of ways—tonnage taxes, gas taxes, even sales taxes, income taxes, and the consumption taxes which are imposed. As Senators can well see, in many forms the price of that coal has been increased by reason of the imposition of various forms of Federal taxes.

Mr. President, that matter has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in a much more direct way. In the Dravo case (302 U. S. 134), 1937, which is well known in this discussion, the United States imposed a tax upon the profits made by a contractor in constructing a dam for the State of West Virginia. The tax was resisted on the ground that it was an interference with the sovereignty of the State of West Virginia. The tax raised the contract price paid by the State. The Supreme Court of the United States held that the tax was legal and could be collected.

This immunity rule has been used to do great injustice in the United States. Its application should be very limited. It should be limited to cover the case of which the Senator from Colorado spoke this morning; that is, that the Federal Government should not, and I affirm has no right whatsoever, to lay a tax upon the State of Colorado, or upon the municipalities in the State, or upon the incomes from the taxes of those municipalities. But that does not mean that the income tax proposed will not increase taxes.

What have we done with this immunity rule? The Senator from Oklahoma is listening to me. He will remember the Coronado Oil case. The Coronado Oil Co. contended that, under a lease in which they got seven-eighths of the total yield of certain oil wells, which were located upon the primary school lands of the State of Oklahoma, they were entirely exempt from the Federal income tax. The State under the lease got one-eighth, and no attempt was made to tax the income of the State. The Coronado Oil Co. got seven-eighths of the income, and they resisted the tax.

In 1932 the Supreme Court of the United States in Two hundred and Eighty-fifth United States Reports, page 393, upheld the contention of the Coronado Oil Co. and permitted them complete exemption from Federal taxes, by reason of the imposition of this immunity rule, which I say was carried in that case to great extremities. Four judges dissented from that opinion. The views of those four judges have become the majority views of the Supreme Court of the United States today, and in 1938, in the Mountain States Producing Co. case, the Coronado rule was completely overturned—Three Hundred and Third United States Reports, page 376.

Mr. President, that is what was done with the immunity rule. That was the attitude the Court had taken for many years, and it was the same attitude which permitted the wealthy taxpayer to escape taxation entirely upon the interest on bonds, not bonds which the State held but bonds which he held, his income, not the State income but his income. I say that was the rule which prevented the imposition of a just tax upon that individual. That my measure will raise the State's expenses a slight bit, I readily admit, but so did it raise the State's expenses in the West Virginia dam case, of which I spoke.

The immunity rule must stand. I am for it. I think it is right and proper. But it should not be used as a cloak to enable millions of dollars of tax money which should go into the Treasury of the United States to remain in the hands of the wealthy taxpayers who, by reason of this judicial construction, are enabled to entirely escape that taxation.

Mr. President, I wish to devote the major part of my time to the argument made by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] and the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] upon the sixteenth amendment and its effect. For some 15 minutes I discussed it a few days ago, and the Senators who were listening then will, I know, pardon me for briefly reviewing the facts which were presented at that time.

In 1861, and on six other occasions, down to as late as 1894, our Federal Government imposed an income tax upon the income from municipal and State bonds. They did so under language in statutes which provided that a tax might be levied upon income from any source whatever.

In 1894 some question arose as to whether or not such a tax was constitutional, particularly in view of the decision in the famous cases of Collector v. Day (11 Wall. 113) 1870, McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316) 1819, and other cases.

The matter was brought before the Supreme Court of the United States in what is perhaps the case which has caused the most discussion in the Senate, the Pollock case (157 U. S. 429, 158 U. S. 601) 1895. Contrary to what the Senator from Nebraska says the Pollock case involved both propositions which were later covered by the sixteenth amendment, that is, did the tax violate the rule of apportionment of taxes on a per capita basis throughout the country? Second—and this appears in the brief, it appears in the opinion, and it appears in the decision of the case, which, after all, is the important thing——

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I think the Senator is in error in his statement that I argued anything about what the Pollock case held in that respect. It was my contention that the entire demand over the country for the adoption of the sixteenth amendment arose from a desire to get rid of the apportionment rule.

Mr. BROWN. I am coming to that.

Mr. BURKE. But the Senator is now saying that it was my contention that the Court did not deal with the other phase of the matter, and I am correcting him in that respect.

Mr. BROWN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I made a note at the time, and I opened my digest of cases at that particular point because I thought the Senator made the statement which I said he made. Nevertheless, it is in point, just the same.

Not only did the Supreme Court strike down the tax because of the lack of apportionment in the law, but in the opinion of Chief Justice Fuller it also struck down the tax on municipal bonds because it was a tax upon the source of the income. I quote the exact language:

> As to income from municipal bonds, they could not be taxed because of want of power to tax the source, and no reference was made to the nature of the tax as being direct or indirect.

Mr. President, the Pollack case created furor in the United States. A tax which had been imposed from the days of 1861 down to the time when the case was decided was overturned by the Pollock case. Naturally, it aroused resentment and a great deal of discussion, and, as I shall show in a few moments if I have the time, the discussion revolved not alone about apportionment but also touched on the proposition of whether or not the immunity rule was properly applied in a prohibition against income taxation on municipal bonds.

By 1910 the agitation had reached the point where a constitutional amendment was proposed. The amendment was read by the senior Senator from Nebraska. I shall read it again, as it is very short:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

The senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has pointed out that there was absolutely no necessity for the words "from whatever source derived" if the object which the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] say was the sole object of the submission of the amendment, was desired. The words "from whatever source derived" must have been intended to mean something.

The first person who raised the question was the then Governor of New York. He did not raise it merely as a bugaboo, as the Senator from Texas told me in the Finance Committee when we discussed the question. He did not raise it merely as a means of defeating the proposition. He did not say, as the junior Senator from Nebraska said in his speech, if I recall correctly, that he feared that municipal bonds might be taxed if the amendment were adopted. He positively said that they would be taxed. I read his exact language. This is from an official message from the Governor of the State to the legislature which had before it the proposition of the ratification of the sixteenth amendment:

> It is certainly significant—
> Governor Hughes said—
> that the words "from whatever source derived" have been introduced into the proposed amendment as if it were the intention to make it impossible for the claim to be urged that the income from any property, even though it consists of the bonds of the State or of a municipality organized by it, will be removed from the reach of the taxing power of the Federal Government.
> The immunity from Federal taxation that the State and its instrumentalities of government now enjoy is derived not from any express provision of the Federal Constitution but from what has been deemed to be necessary implication. Who can say that such implication with respect to the proposed tax will survive the adoption of this explicit and comprehensive amendment?
> It is to be borne in mind that this is not a mere statute to be construed in the light of constitutional restrictions, express or implied, but a proposed amendment to the Constitution itself, which, if ratified, will be in effect a grant to the Federal Government of the power which it defines.
> The comprehensive words "from whatever source derived," if taken in their natural sense, would include not only incomes from ordinary real or personal property, but also incomes derived from State and municipal securities.

The message of Governor Hughes caused the most widespread comment and editorials in the New York newspapers, and also an editorial in the Chicago Tribune, which I will put in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. BROWN. I will take time on the bill.

Newspapers throughout the country picked up the question, and the Governors of the various States, contrary to what the Senator from Nebraska evidently thought, discussed the question. The message of Governor Swanson of Virginia is as follows:

No substantial reason exists why our Government should be deprived of the power of imposing a tax so just and fair. It must be presumed that the Federal Government in the exercise of this power will be reasonable and have the utmost regard for the rights and best interests of the States.

It is an unwarranted fright to imagine that Congress (one House of which consists of Representatives elected from districts fixed by the legislatures of the States, and the other consisting of Senators elected directly to represent their respective States, would, in the imposition of taxes under this proposed amendment, permit any burdens or legislation which would be destructive of either the rights or best interests of the States.

He called attention to what Justice Marshall called attention to many years before, that the States are here represented.

Governor Kitchin of North Carolina said:

We should assume that the State bonds and their interest are as safe from burdens in the hands of Congress as are national bonds and their interest.

Which brings me to the point that the Governor of the State of Vermont, who will be here in the United States Senate if the Republican Party is successful in that State, sent a telegram to the committee in which he said:

I am opposed to Federal taxation of income from State bonds unless the States are given the right to tax the income from Federal bonds.

That is the attitude of the present Governor of Vermont in a telegram sent to the committee, which is found in the record.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Was the Senator referring to the construction placed upon the words of the amendment before he went into Vermont and called the present Governor of Vermont as a witness?

Mr. BROWN. No; the Governor was not a witness. He sent me a telegram.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I understand, but the Senator is making him a witness here.

I wish to observe that the then Governor of Vermont was Carroll S. Page, a man who afterward became a Senator of the United States, a distinguished gentleman, who was one of the very few Governors who followed the fears of the Governor of New York at that time, and he told the Legislature of Vermont at that time:

Those who have kept in touch with the recent discussions upon this question in our neighboring State, New York, must have noticed the very pronounced views of ex-Governor (now Justice) Hughes with reference to the proposed amendment. He fully believes that the State should not concede additional power of taxation to the Federal Government, and I most heartily concur in what I believe to be the wise conclusions which he has reached * * *.

That attitude was diametrically opposite to the theory of reciprocal taxation.

Mr. BROWN. Let me say to the Senator that he evidently misunderstood me. I am talking about a telegram from George D. Aiken, who is the present Governor of Vermont, in which he said:

I am opposed to Federal taxation of income from State bonds unless the States are given the right to tax the income from Federal bonds.

That is exactly what this bill does. In other words, we do what the Governor of Vermont wants us to do. But I add that the Legislature of Vermont ratified the amendment on the Hughes construction as stated by Governor Page.

Mr. President, I now proceed. The statement of Governor Kitchen, of North Carolina, in submitting the amendment to his legislature was:

A 2-percent income tax would reduce the net income from a thousand dollars of North Carolina bonds 80 cents a year, this being an interest-rate reduction from 4 percent to 3.92 percent, even if the income from nontaxable bonds, National and State, should by Congress be taxed, which is against the probabilities, it could not reasonably be considered a hardship on those on whom it would be imposed, nor would it seriously impair the market value of these securities.

That was the message to the Legislature of North Carolina, which was determining this question.

Likewise, the message of Governor Baldwin, of Connecticut, which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, called attention to the construction of Judge Hughes, in which he said he inclined to share the opinion of Judge Hughes.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is unfortunate that the wording of the proposed amendment is such as to raise upon its face a doubt as to its meaning in respect to a material point. In the view of some lawyers it would authorize Congress to tax the holders of State securities upon the income derived therefrom. If so, it would be possible for Congress thus to impair greatly, and practically to destroy, the power of a State to market its bonds on favorable terms. In the view of other lawyers the amendment would not affect the existing rule, which is that the United States cannot tax State bonds or the income derived from them.

I am inclined to share the opinion of the former. If that be correct, the amendment would also give the United States power to tax the income from salaries or fees of every State official.

Mr. BROWN. The message of Governor Gilchrist, of Florida, took substantially the same position. He was, like Governor Hughes, opposing the ratification of the amendment, and indicated that it clearly would permit a tax upon the income from State and municipal bonds.

Governor Marshall, of Indiana, took the same attitude.

Representative Pattangall, a very noted Democrat from the State of Maine, on the floor of the house of representatives, of which he was then a member, said to the Legislature of Maine before they took up the question of ratification that, in his judgment, Governor Hughes was correct in his interpretation.

To summarize, Mr. President, on the question of ratification, 15 of the messages of Governors of States to their legislatures took cognizance of the views expressed by Governor Hughes. Eight of those messages said that Governor Hughes was correct in his interpretation. In five of the messages the Governors took no position. In only three did they take a position opposite to that taken by the Governor of New York.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I shall detain the Senator but a moment, and I think in view of the rule we are operating under, that it is generous of the Senator to permit me to put in the RECORD, at this point, our claim on that point. It is very brief:

We claim that the weight of gubernatorial opinion at that time did not follow the Hughes construction.

As indicated before, the Department of Justice, whether intentionally or not, creates the inference that the preponderance of the Governors who sent messages to their States in connection with the sixteenth amendment accepted the fears voiced by Governor Hughes, but nevertheless urged ratification. A careful examination of the record, however, shows this inference is not warranted. The Department of Justice found 52 State messages from Governors in which the question of ratification of the sixteenth amendment was mentioned. Of these, 39 of the messages made no reference to Governor Hughes' message, inferentially or otherwise. Thirteen messages did refer to Governor Hughes' fears, but of these only 3 seemed to have agreed, whereas 7 disagreed, and 2 stated both sides of the question without recommending either view. Among those who disagreed with the fears voiced by Governor Hughes were Governor Plaisted, of Maine; Governor Hadley, of Missouri; Governor Fort, of New Jersey; Governor Harmon, of Ohio, and Governor Noel, of Mississippi.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at some place which suits the convenience of the Senator from Michigan there be inserted in the RECORD, statements taken from other messages from Governors, as set forth in the yellow book on pages 323 to 329. I do not mind if the statements appear at the end of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. BROWN. I hope they will appear somewhere in the RECORD, but not in the body of my speech.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; but I should like to have them in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statements referred to may be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I have before me a statement concerning the presentation which was made to the Legislature of the State of New York by the attorneys in the Pollock case, to which I have referred. I ask that the statement be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On the question of the construction of the words "from whatever source derived," we have the view of three of the attorneys who fought and won the Pollock Loan & Trust Co. case, Messrs. Joseph F. Choate, William D. Guthrie, and Victor Morowitz. They, with Austin G. Fox and John G. Milbourne submitted the following memorandum to the New York Legislature in opposing ratification. They said:

"The people of the United States are now urged to adopt a constitutional amendment specifically vesting in Congress 'power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived,' and to take this step after repeated attempts on the part of Congress to tax State and municipal bonds and salaries of State and municipal officials under claim of power to do so, after repeated contentions on the part of the Executive through the Department of Justice that Congress has power to impose such taxes, and after repeated decisions by the Supreme Court that no such power exists under the language of the Constitution as it now stands. If, in the face of these contentions on the part of the legislative and executive branches and of these adjudications by the Supreme Court, the people, who are sovereign, adopt an amendment expressly conferring the power to tax incomes in the broadest terms in our language, namely, 'from whatever source derived,' the courts, under settled rules of construction would, as it seems to us, be constrained to hold that the words 'from whatever source derived' excluded any implied limitation theretofore existing, because otherwise the whole clause would have no meaning or force. We know of no rule that would warrant the courts in holding that the words 'from whatever source derived,' adopted under these circumstances, were wholly meaningless and ineffective."

Choate, Guthrie, and Milbourne were three of the most prominent lawyers in the United States at that time.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, in addition to the statements of Governors, which I think were pretty well covered by the statements heretofore made, and which will be inserted in the RECORD, various members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives made statements. Representative Payne, chairman of the committee; Representative Shirley, of Kentucky; and Representative Underwood, of Alabama, all made statements indicating plainly that it was intended by the sixteenth amendment to cover the subject matter of the proposition which I am now advocating. I ask that their statements, which I have before me, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

Without objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The views of the members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House who had charge of the legislation show clearly that they accepted the Hughes interpretation:

"The ranking members of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, in statements to the press, agreed with Governor Hughes' construction but favored the ratification of the amendment.

"Representative Sereno E. Payne, who as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee introduced the amendment into the House, declared:

" 'Personally, I am inclined to the opinion that the Governor is right in taking the position that the amendment should have specified that the portions of incomes derived from State, municipal, and Government bonds should be exempt from the income tax. Nevertheless, it might be better to let Congress be the judge of how the tax is to be applied.'

"Representative Shirley, of Kentucky, likewise stated that he agreed with the construction of Governor Hughes, but thought that the amendment should be ratified. Representative Smith of Iowa, in a statement to the press on the message of the New York Governor, declared:

" 'I believe that the Central Government should have the power to levy any form of tax that it deemed necessary when the emergency required. * * * Congress ought to have the power to pass [an income tax] without interference whenever real emergencies arise.'

"Representative Oscar W. Underwood, of Alabama, a Democratic member of the Ways and Means Committee, stated that he did not agree with Governor Hughes 'that the power to levy an income tax on incomes derived from any source whatsoever should not be given to Congress. These are emergencies which might arise when it would be necessary to resort to a levy on all forms of income.' Representative Sulzer, of New York, and Bartlett, of Georgia expressed similar views."

Mr. BROWN. I have already referred to the statement which was made by Senator Knute Nelson. I ask that that statement be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In the journal of the American Bar Association for December 1920, on pages 202 to 207, inclusive, appears an article by Mr. Harry Hubbard, from which the following is quoted:

"After an article on the sixteenth amendment published in the Harvard Law Review, April 1920, in which the writer set forth reasons for his view that the amendment authorized Congress to levy taxes on all incomes including among others those from bonds and other securities issued by States, cities, and other subdivisions of States, and from salaries and wages paid by them, the writer received a letter from Senator Knute Nelson, who was in 1909 a member of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and is now chairman of that committee, dated May 7, 1920, in which Senator Nelson wrote:

" 'I thank you very much for sending me a copy of the Harvard Law Review containing your article on the sixteenth amendment, which I have read with much interest. I am glad to see that you concur in my views. The words "from whatever source derived" were inserted in the amendment in the Senate at my instance and on my insistence. I have been very sorry to see that the Supreme Court in its decision, has utterly ignored the phrase; in fact, treated the amendment as though this phrase were not a part of it.'

"In a later letter, September 10, 1920, Senator Nelson wrote (as to the above-quoted statement):

" 'You have the liberty to use my statement quoted in your letter. The record may not show it but I introduced the amendment and the facts are that at that time Mr. Aldrich was chairman of the Finance Committee and I discussed the matter with him and insisted on the amendment being inserted and he concurred with me and reported the bill with the phrase "from whatever source derived." '

"Senator Aldrich was, as everyone knows, the real leader of the Senate, especially in all financial matters. He knew what he was doing.

"Here, then, is the history of these words of the amendment. The word 'direct' was taken out, in order not to limit income taxes to those which were 'direct,' (and which were held invalid in the Pollock case), and the words 'from whatever source derived' were inserted, in order to make the power to tax incomes as broad as 'incomes' themselves could possibly be. Thus, the amendment was changed and reported by the Finance Committee, passed by the Senate and House, and ratified by the legislatures in more than three-fourths of the States."

Mr. BROWN. The Senator asked me if there was any general discussion of the subject. An editorial on the subject appeared in the New York Times on March 2, 1910. I ask that the editorial be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The question regarding the constitutional amendment enabling the Federal Government to lay a tax on incomes "from whatever source derived" is not a question regarding the conflict of laws, or for the construction of an obscure statute involving difficult question of principle. It is a question addressed to the man in the street regarding the adoption of a new policy as to which his views should and will prevail. It is a question without roots in the past and looking wholly to the future. The Supreme Court perhaps might listen patiently to such an argument as Senator Root's, but the men in the street will pay no attention to it, and should not.

It is not a question for the Supreme Court. One man is theoretically as competent as another under universal suffrage to say whether the proposed constitutional enablement of the taxation of incomes from all sources means that incomes from some sources are not included, because they were not included when the Constitution was worded differently. The votes and the intelligence of the common people will and should settle this question. Indisputably they think, and have a right to think, that the proposition is that Congress may tax all incomes. The 4 words mean the same after the 4,000 words of Senator Root's argument are digested as before, and cannot be made to mean anything different, except by technicalities which cannot only prevail at the cost of defeating the people's will.

* * * * * * *

It is only necessary to find the meaning of a few easy words, and they are to be understood with the same freedom of natural and spontaneous interpretation as would be used in the case of private and personal interest. Only trouble can be made by substituting other words assumed to be equivalent, and arguing as though they were in the act, or that the meaning is otherwise because it ought to be otherwise. Millions will, through their Representatives, vote on the income tax who will never see Senator Root's argument, and who ought not to be troubled with it, their own interpretation of the language being the very thing in question. To argue that some sources of income will not be taxable because they ought not to be taxable, or because they have not been taxable before, is beside the point.

Mr. BROWN. The editorial is dated March 2, 1910. Speaking of the question raised by Governor Hughes, the editorial said:

It is a question addressed to the man in the street regarding the adoption of a new policy as to which his views should and will prevail. It is a question without roots in the past, and looks wholly to the future. The Supreme Court perhaps might listen patiently to such an argument as Senator Root's, but the men in the street will pay no attention to it, and should not. * * * To argue that some sources of income will not be taxable because they ought not to be taxable, or because they have not been taxable before, is beside the point.

The burden of the editorial, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, is that clearly the income from municipal bonds would be taxed.

To the same general purport is an editorial from the Chicago Tribune of January 7, 1910, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Governor Hughes advises the New York Legislature not to ratify the income-tax amendment. He believes the National Government should have the power it confers, subject to one limitation; that is, it should be stated specifically that Congress could not tax incomes derived from the bonds of a State or of one of its municipalities. Without this qualification the borrowing power of State or its municipalities would, in his opinion, be at the mercy of the Federal Government. It might be impaired. * * *

The threatened dangers he lays so much stress on may influence the Legislature of New York to reject the amendment. They are not likely to affect the legislatures of States less addicted to borrowing.

Mr. BROWN. The editorial from the Chicago Tribune of January 7, 1910, takes the opposite view from that of Governor Hughes. It says:

The threatened dangers he lays so much stress on may influence the Legislature of New York to reject the amendment. They are not likely to affect the legislatures of States less addicted to borrowing.

As the Senator knows, the Chicago Tribune is one of the most prominent newspapers in the Middle West. Like the editorial from the New York Times, the editorial from the Chicago Tribune took the view that clearly the income on municipal and State bonds was covered by the sixteenth amendment.

Mr. President, since my time is drawing to a close, I ask that certain material which I shall send to the desk, setting forth the newspaper controversy of the time, and what was said by various newspapers, be printed at this point in my remarks. It is not very long.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Governor Hughes' construction of the proposed amendment was widely publicized throughout the Nation by the daily newspapers. The opponents of the amendment quite generally accepted Governor Hughes' construction. One paper "supposed" that this message would "set the popular thought in the right direction," while another observed that he "has placed a shot between wind and water." One newspaper observed that "this (the Governor's reasoning) is perfectly sound so far as it goes * * *" but added other reasons why it was opposed to ratification. Some friends of the amendment were dismayed. One editorial observed that the opponents had been furnished "the one thing they have been seeking—a plausible argument from a highly respectable source." In the same editorial it was insisted that the message would be "hailed with delight by all the interests that oppose an income tax," and that "it (the opposition) will turn Governor Hughes' message, his arguments, his influence, and his great reputation to its own account in every State capital" where there was a chance to defeat ratification. From another State came the declaration that "Governor Hughes' annual message is next in public interest to that of President Taft." From the West it was observed that the Governor has "conjured up a new objection to the income tax." From Vermont it was said that "the announcement will naturally attract wide attention." In the South it was thought that Mr. Hughes' reputation as a lawyer and a high-minded public man is widespread; he bases his objections upon legal and broadly constitutional grounds, so the moral effect must prove considerable. An apparently somewhat neutral observer thought that "this contention may not be sufficient to outweigh the arguments in favor of an income tax but it will test the resources of advocates of that measure."

But many of the friends of the amendment thought that the granting of the power to tax the interest from State and municipal bonds was not objectionable. From the Middle West came the observation that, "The threatened dangers * * * are not likely to affect the legislatures of States less addicted to borrowing."

Mr. BROWN. Mr. William Sulzer, who was afterward Governor of the State of New York, and who at the time of the submission of the sixteenth amendment was a member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, said in a letter written to me as chairman of the committee:

The law says—

Meaning the constitutional provision—

"from whatever source derived." Certainly no words can be plainer. The purpose of the Congress in passing it, and the purpose of the States that ratified it, was that there should be no exemption and that every person should pay a tax on his or her income, from whatever source derived.

That letter applies to the precise question, because it was written to me as chairman of the committee which was proposing the bill.

Mr. President, how much time have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator has 11 minutes left.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to tie in the revenue statutes of 1861 to 1894, to which I have frequently referred, and the sixteenth amendment. I call attention to the fact that the language under which municipal bonds were taxed was this language:

Income from any source whatever.

I next call attention to the fact that the sixteenth amendment grew out of a controversy over a tax which was levied under a statute which empowered that tax by use of the language "from whatever source derived."

The sixteenth amendment adopted almost the same precise language—"income from whatever source derived." How can there be any reasonable basis for coming to any conclusion other than that the constitutional amendment contained language which must be construed, as was identically the same phrase in the several statutes out of which the controversy arose? That argument has never been presented to the Supreme Court of the United States in any of the tax cases. The Supreme Court has never at any time passed upon the precise question; and when this plain language in the sixteenth amendment is laid down beside the plain language in the Civil War statutes and the 1894 statute, I say that no court can come to any conclusion other than that the language in the sixteenth amendment means exactly what it meant in the statute out of which the controversy arose.

Mr. President, if such a controversy should arise, the Department of Justice, which was of great aid to us, and the Treasury Department, which is familiar with the facts, will adequately present the view of the Government to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. President, I opened my remarks by calling attention to the fact that from all the evidence we can gather the people of the United States want this kind of legislation. They want to eliminate tax-exempt bonds. When the question was presented to the Congress by the message of the President of the United States, the Gallup poll presented that question in the usual manner in which political questions are presented to the people. The question asked was:

Should people who own United States Government bonds or State or municipal bonds have to pay a Federal income tax on the income from these securities?

The answer was: Yes, 75 percent; no, 25 percent. Of 705 newspaper editorials which expressed views upon the subject at that time—1939—77 percent, or 642, of them favored immediate congressional removal of tax immunity. Fourteen percent suggested a constitutional amendment, and only 9 percent were opposed to the ending of tax immunity.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Will the Senator complete that statement by showing the vote of the attorneys general of the 48 States and the mayors of the cities of the country?

Mr. BROWN. I am sure the Senator will not ask me to gather up that material in the last 3 minutes of my speech. He has a perfect right to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. BURKE. Will the Senator concede that the attorneys general of 45 of the 48 States vigorously protested against the proposal to authorize the Federal Government to tax the bonds of the States?

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator had done me the honor of listening to the first part of my speech, he would have heard that I so stated.

Mr. BURKE. I was not in the city at that time.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the platform of my political party states:

> To encourage investment in productive enterprise, the tax-exempt privileges of future Federal, State, and local bonds should be removed.

Mr. President, I know that the chairman of the Finance Committee fears that if this amendment should be agreed to it may have some difficulty in being accepted by the conferees who will meet with him next Monday or Tuesday to consider the differences between the two Houses. I have looked over the list of delegates to the Democratic National Convention, and I have noted the members of the subcommittee who drew the platform, of which the Senator from Michigan was one and the Senator from Mississippi, the chairman of my committee, was another.

I have looked over the list of the delegates, and I find, Mr. President, that the four top members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives were delegates to that convention. An examination of the proceedings will disclose not a dissenting vote against the Democratic platform which declared for the removal of the tax-exempt privilege from Federal, State, and local bonds.

Mr. President, if this amendment had not been worked over by the experts, if it had not been carefully considered by the Treasury Department, I would say, perhaps, that we ought to take more time to look into it, but the amendment was prepared by the experts of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation and by the experts of the Legislative Counsel's office. They were requested by me to draft the amendment so that I might offer it. So it has been carefully considered and studied. Four ranking members of the Ways and Means Committee have indicated as delegates to the Democratic Convention that they are in favor of this principle.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will not include me in the category of those who asked that this amendment be drafted, for I am opposed to it; I always have been opposed to it, and I hope I always will be, because it is an assault upon our form of government, upon the States and upon their political subdivisions, absolutely at variance with our concept of government.

Mr. BROWN. I know that is the Senator's view.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask whether the plank of the democratic platform advocates this fundamental change without a constitutional amendment?

Mr. BROWN. It does not say anything about the method by which the end is to be accomplished, but the gentleman who was nominated for President of the United States at that convention, in a message to the Congress in 1938, urged immediate enactment of such a statute, and argued ably and well that it could be done without a constitutional amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. We are familiar with his attitude toward the Constitution. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I hope that, in the consideration of this matter and in determining how they will vote, Senators will not be overpowered by the very effective campaign which has been carried on against this amendment by the attorneys general of the several States. We are the representatives of the people of our States. I think we know how the people of our States feel. I have tried to give a cross section of public opinion upon the subject.

I am not sanguine, Mr. President, of the final adoption of this amendment at the present session of the Congress. I know with what I am confronted. But, Mr. President, I wanted to bring to the Senate of the United States the conclusions of the majority of my committee. I wanted to make a statement upon the floor of the splendid, historical investigation which has been made by the Department of Justice and by the Treasury Department into the legal and economic aspects of this controversy in the hope that those of the other body and those here who are in charge of matters of taxation will bring this subject before the Congress of the United States, so that there may be enacted appropriate legislation to put an end to the tax-exemption privilege.

Mr. President, I had hoped that the majority leader would take this proposition up when the head of his party, the President, requests it. He was the chairman of the convention that adopted the plank favoring this measure. I think the organization in charge of the Senate of the United States, through its appropriate committee, should give most careful consideration not only to what the leader of our party has said but also to what our party in convention assembled said. I cannot urge this course too strongly. There are many Senators who oppose this amendment vigorously. They have done so, and it is their right to do so, but I believe the majority of this Congress is for it, and I hope that the effort we are making here today will result in bringing the measure before the Congress for a vote so that tax special privilege will not longer exist and that tax justice will prevail in this land.

EXHIBIT A

Governor Plaisted said:

"In approving the proposed amendment we are not conferring any new right on the Nation, nor are we taking away any right now reserved to the State."

Governor Hadley said:

"I do not believe that objection therein urged is likely to arise as a result of this power by the National Congress if conferred, and, if it should arise, it is my opinion that under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, it is not well founded in law. And this is the position that has been taken by some of the most prominent representatives in the National Congress in the discussions of this question."

Governor Fort said:

"Nor am I inclined to accept the statement that the Supreme Court * * * might construe the words 'from whatever source derived' * * * as justifying the taxing of the securities of any other power."

* * * * * * *

"I think the principle thus quoted, which is founded upon public policy, would obtain, in construing a constitutional provision, equally as firmly as in the construction of an act of Congress."

Governor Noel said:

"I do not concur in either the view or the recommendation of Governor Hughes in opposition to the income-tax amendment. I do not believe the courts would hold that authority to tax incomes would authorize any action that would impair any instrumentality of the State or municipal governments."

Governor Harmon said:

"I have recommended ratification of the income-tax amendment. Comity between kindred sovereignties should require the amendment to be taken as applying to incomes from private sources only * * *."

Still other Governors showed doubts as to Governor Hughes' views. Thus, for example, Governor Baldwin, of Connecticut, said:

"It is unfortunate that the wording of the proposed amendment is such as to raise upon its face a doubt as to its meaning in respect to a material point. In the view of some lawyers, it would authorize Congress to tax holders of State securities * * *. In the view of other lawyers, the amendment would not affect the existing rule * * *."

Governor Marshall, of Indiana, said:

"* * * It may be conferring upon the General Government a larger power in the nature of taxation than the States have ever intended to confer, * * *."

Governor Norris, of Montana, said:

"Some objections have been made to the adoption of the amendment on the ground that the words 'from whatever source derived' permit the levy of a tax on incomes received from State * * * indebtedness * * *."

Governor Burke, of North Dakota, said:

"Some of the ablest lawyers in the land object to the broad terms in which the language giving the power to tax is couched. * * * While on the other hand just as able lawyers insist that the Constitution contemplates the independent exercise by the Nation and the States of their constitutional powers and the obligations of the State cannot be impaired by this grant of power."

To sum up, the situation with respect to the ratifying States was this: Mr. Hughes, as Governor of the State of New York, voiced fears that the proposed amendment might be interpreted as possibly opening the door to the taxation of the income from State and municipal bonds. This view, however, was officially controverted by Senators Borah, Root, and Brown. Of these three, Senator Borah was the leading spirit behind the amendment. Senator Brown officially introduced it and Senator Root was credited, by at least one authority, with being the actual author of the amendment; and, moreover, he was one of Governor Hughes' two representatives in the Senate. Following their respective interpretations, no one in the Senate or House rose to challenge their views. John Philip Wenchel, chief counsel, Bureau of Internal Revenue, has inadvertently created the impression that the opposition to the Borah-Root-Brown views was voiced on the floor of the Senate. Thus, in the paper entitled "Legal Discussion," which he filed before the Senate Committee on Intergovernmental Taxation, he quoted language from Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, which would indicate that the latter gentleman disagreed with or challenged the Borah-Root-Brown views on the floor of the Senate. What happened is this: Former Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, addressed a letter to a then Senator. In this letter the former Vermont Senator strongly condemned the possible taxation of State and municipal securities, as well as the whole theory of the income tax. The letter was printed in the RECORD, without discussion. Thus the States can reassert the proposition that the Borah-Root-Brown views of the amendment were not challenged in the Senate or House.

The Department of Justice erroneously and fallaciously concludes that when the States ratified the amendment without referring to either of two diverse schools of thought, the States must have accepted the view most favorable to the contentions urged by the Department of Justice. This is, of course, absurd on its face. And moreover if silence may be regarded as acquiescense (in some circumstances) it is absurd to argue that in this case it amounted to an acceptance of Governor Hughes' fears. If silence gives rise to acquiescence, surely it is acquiescence in the latest views expressed in a controversy. After Governor Hughes voiced his fears, others said they were groundless and unjustified under the language and intent of the amendment. The States submit, therefore, that it cannot be argued with force that because of a State's omission to challenge Governor Hughes' fears, it acquiesced in the surrender of its sovereignty.

It is, of course, absurd to suppose that the States intended—in ratifying the sixteenth amendment—to give up their immunity from tax by the Federal Government without the Federal Government in turn giving up its immunity. It is ridiculous to suppose that the States would have intended to ratify the amendment under such circumstances.

The record fails to support any conclusion that the amendment was ratified by the States in acceptance of the view that it was intended to vest Congress with the power to tax State and municipal bonds.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the time is rolling along toward the final vote on this measure. I have listened with much interest to the discussion of the Brown amendment. I am strongly opposed to any clause or line in the amendment which would seek to give the Federal Government the power to tax municipal, State, county, or taxing-district bonds within the States.

I shall not undertake to burden the Senate with a constitutional discussion. It seems to me that much of the discussion here has been along the line of establishing the principle that if it is lawful and if it is constitutional, therefore, we ought to do it. There are many things that are lawful that I do not believe a man ought to do. It may be lawful for me to jump from a second-floor window; I know of no law on the statute books that says one cannot jump from a second-story window; but simply because it is not against the law is no reason why I should suddenly take a notion to jump from a second-story window. I do not believe it is constitutional for the Federal Government to tax State, municipal, or city bonds, but a little later I want to assume that it can do so, and then I shall undertake to demonstrate that it would be extremely foolish, uneconomic, unwise, unfair, and unsound for the Federal Government to undertake to do such a thing, even if it should give to the States the so-called reciprocal advantage of taxing Federal issues.

Without going back to the lawbooks, but just talking, as it were, from first impressions, it is absolutely an unsound theory to assume that, under our dual system, one government has the right to tax another government. We have always been taught to believe that the States were supreme within their functions. Whatever those functions are, there is no higher governmental power in the world. As to the Federal jurisdiction and authority within that particular sphere, the Federal Government has no superior. It is the ultima thule of authority. No State, no principality, no kingdom, no empire, no potentate may overrule the action of the Federal Government within its proper sphere, and, by the same token, when the State government operates within its sphere, humble though it may be, whatever its functions may be, the State has no superior governmental authority on this revolving globe. Can a government be supreme, can it be sovereign, when its operations are subject to taxation by some other governmental agency? Is not that very conception repugnant to the thought of sovereignty? How can a State government or a Federal government be a sovereign when another government may come along and say, "I will lay a tax, I will lay a burden upon your operations"?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does not England remain a sovereignty, although we tax English bonds in this country?

Mr. CONNALLY. England remains sovereign over yonder, but not over here.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will permit me, let me say that England does not attempt to tax the bonds of Canada, Australia, or New Zealand.

Mr. TAFT. I do not see what difference it makes. The taxation of the bonds of a government is not any limitation on its sovereignty in any way that I can see.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not interpreting the matter for the Senator from Ohio; but I say to him, on the other hand, that when a State government issues its bonds and the Federal Government says to the State government, "We will tell any buyer of those bonds in advance that when he buys them he will not only have to pay the interest which you may exact but he will have to pay to the Federal Government also an income"—we will not call it interest but will call it a tax—when the Federal Government says to a State government, "Before you can issue a bond for a dime we will exact from the man who buys that bond an income to the Federal Government along with the tax which he may pay to the State government," I say that is an infringement of the right and power of the State government. We have no control over Great Britain, have we?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will yield in a moment. Let me first answer the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN. He is not in the Chamber at the moment.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Ohio must be a sharpshooter, for he fires a blank round and then retires to the woods. [Laughter.] England does not ask our consent and can sell her bonds wherever she pleases on the face of the earth.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Of course there is no analogy at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly not.

Mr. AUSTIN. England does not occupy the same geographical area with the United States, and we have no federalism with England.

Mr. CONNALLY. She is not a part of our governmental system; certainly.

I will say to the Senator from Ohio by remote control—I will speak to him by remote control [laughter]—that I was reminded earlier in the day that somebody said that taxing the income from a State bond is not taxing the State. No; it is not taxing the State by name, but it is taxing the State in effect. It might be said that you cannot attack me; it is against the law to attack me; but if you let somebody saw off my arm, and then saw off one of my legs, and then saw off another leg, the same result can be obtained without ever attacking me all over at one time. [Laughter.] Whenever the income of State bonds or municipal bonds or taxing-district bonds is taxed, a burden is laid upon the financial operations of the government itself. The courts are full of decisions that no State may lay a burden on interstate commerce. It is so sacred that even little burdens may not be laid on it; and yet these gentlemen say that without an amendment of the Constitution the Federal Government may reach out and grab a State and say, "You will have to pay me tribute. Come up and give to Caesar the things that are Caesar's."

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. What is the difference in the Senator's contemplation between a tax on the income from a bond issued by the State of Texas and a tax on the income which a contractor makes from constructing a new State house for the State of Texas? Each is a burden on the State. There may be a difference of degree, but they amount to exactly the same thing.

Mr. CONNALLY. I cannot agree with the Senator. I always like to agree with him when I may. My inclination, prompted by affection and things of that kind, frequently tugs mightily at my sense of duty and responsibility; but I cannot agree with the Senator from Michigan at all.

Mr. BROWN. Will not the Senator tell me how he disagrees with me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I can very easily do that.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it is evident that the Senator from Michigan is in complete disagreement with the Supreme Court.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was about to say that the Supreme Court held, as I understand, in what is known as the West Virginia case, that this was clearly distinguishable from the bondholder case. The Senators seem to think a great deal of Mr. Chief Justice Hughes when he was Governor, but they do not think much of him when he is Chief Justice. He says:

> There is no ineluctable logic—

Let me commend that word to the Senator from Michigan—

> There is no ineluctable logic which makes the doctrine of immunity with respect to Government bonds applicable to the earnings of an independent contractor rendering services to the Government. That doctrine recognizes the direct effect of a tax which would "operate on the power to borrow before it is exercised" (Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., supra)—

Although Senators have discredited that decision, let me finish reading from it.

Mr. BROWN. Of course, the tax is not collected until it gets into the hands of the taxpayer.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true. Let me quote this decision further. That is one of the distinctive points about it—> and which would directly affect the Government's obligation as a continuing security.

The Supreme Court puts its finger on the question when it says that the exaction of a tax in advance of the borrowing is a limitation on the power of that governmental unit to continue and to have security.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BROWN. When a contract is made between the State of Texas and a contractor for the construction of a statehouse, the money necessary to pay the Federal income tax is exacted before the contract is entered into or at the time the contract is entered into in just exactly the same way that the additional interest on a bond is exacted at the time the bond is sold. It is a distinction without a difference.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not agree with the Senator. I shall not spend much more time answering him. I want to let him and Mr. Chief Justice Hughes argue out this question at some convenient point.

Mr. Chief Justice Hughes further says:

> Vital considerations are there involved respecting the permanent relations of the Government to investors in its securities and its ability to maintain its credit—considerations which are not found in connection with contracts made from time to time for the services of independent contractors.

There are five or six distinctions that Mr. Chief Justice Hughes has raised, and there are possibly still others. The doctrine invoked by the Senator from Michigan would bring within the scope of income taxation every human transaction. Every time a dollar is spent it dribbles down into somebody else's pocket and becomes the subject, if there is any profit, of income taxation.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator remarked that there might be other distinctions. There are. The Supreme Court has spoken of them; and within the class of contracts which are contracts for labor and service and manufacture, and so on, there are distinctions. If the contract is one which affects a necessary function of the State, it enjoys the same type of immunity as the bond enjoys. That was so decided by Mr. Justice Stone in Helvering against Gerhardt, on page 8, where he says:

> Or to tax the manufacture and sale to a municipal corporation of equipment for its police force (Indian Motorcycle Co. v. United States, 283 U. S. 570).

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, how is a State capitol built? It is built with bonds which the State sells, and it is built by a contractor who constructs it. We now tax the contractor's income earned from the job. Under my amendment we will tax the income on the money loaned by the holder. It seems to me the cases are identical in principle.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Michigan for their contributions; but, Mr. President, I desire to cite only briefly an old, old decision, and that is the case of McCulloch against Maryland. McCulloch against Maryland points out so clearly the theories of dual jurisdiction of the States and the Federal Government that I feel that a brief reference to that decision ought to be made at this point.

I read only from the headnotes:

> The act of April 10, 1816, chapter 44, to incorporate the subscribers to the Bank of the United States, is a law made in pursuance of the Constitution.
>
> The Bank of the United States has, constitutionally, a right to establish its branches or offices of discount and deposit within any State.
>
> The State within which such branch may be established cannot—

Listen to this; I want all Senators to hear this:

> The State within which such branch may be established cannot, without violating the Constitution, tax that branch.

If Maryland cannot, without an amendment to the Constitution, tax the property of the Bank of the United States located in Baltimore, how can the Congress of the United States, without violating the Constitution, give the State of Maryland the right to tax Federal securities? Because that is what this amendment does. This amendment undertakes to give to the State of Maryland the right to tax the income from Federal securities; but John Marshall says Maryland cannot do that without violating the Constitution. If Maryland cannot do it without violating the Constitution, neither can the Congress of the United States do it without violating the Constitution.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I do not see how the Senator or anybody else can get any comfort for their position out of McCulloch against Maryland, because Chief Justice Marshall went on to say in the same opinion, if the Senator will bear with me:

> It has also been insisted that, as the power of taxation in the General and State Governments is acknowledged to be concurrent, every argument which would sustain the right of the General Government to tax banks chartered by the States will equally sustain the right of the States to tax banks chartered by the General Government. But the two cases are not on the same reason. The people of all the States have created the General Government and have conferred upon it the general power of taxation. The people of all the States, and the States themselves, are represented in Congress. * * * When they tax the chartered institutions of the States, they tax their constituents; and these taxes must be uniform. But when a State taxes the operations of the United States, it acts upon institutions created, not by their own constituents, but by people over whom they claim no control. * * * The difference is that which always exists, and always must exist, between the action of the whole on a part and the action of a part on the whole between the laws of a government—> declared to be supreme and those of a government which, when in opposition to those laws, is not supreme.

That is, the United States—

As I said the other day, I do not necessarily agree with the great Chief Justice; but he never assented to the proposition that the States could tax the instrumentalities of the Federal Government. He took exactly the contrary view.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is, by the amendment, asserting a right to give the States the power to tax Federal instrumentalities, is he not?

Mr. BROWN. We are consenting to it, just as we did in the public salary tax matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. No State has ever tried to assert the power. The Senator is not assenting to it, he is undertaking to confer it.

Mr. President, according to the theory of the Senator from Michigan, the Federal Government can tax the States, but the States cannot tax the Federal Government. In either event he is wrong, because he proposes to do both by the amendment; he proposes to tax the income from State and municipal bonds, and then he proposes to confer upon the States the reciprocal power to tax Federal securities.

The Federal Government is supreme within its activity. It has the war power. This may be a far-drawn comparison, but the Federal Government possesses the war power, and is it consistent to allow one of the States to lay a tax, we will say for the sake of the argument, upon war activities, and slow up and impede and hinder the making of war by the Federal Government, which is purely a Federal function? Of course that would not be argued. That is a strong example, but it illustrates what the States might do if they exerted to the limit the authority sought to be conferred.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, does the Senator mean to say that if a man had an income resulting from war, that income should not be subject to taxation?

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no; the Senator from Texas did not mean that, of course. I have before me a bill which, as soon as the pending amendment gets out of the way, I will present as an amendment to the tax bill to jerk all the war profits out of the manufacturers of things used in war, by legal means, by taxation.

Mr. LEE. I was about to say that the Senator could not mean that because he is the author of a bill to do what he has stated.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly. The Senator from Oklahoma wholly misconstrues my attitude. I do not see how the Senator could ever get that sort of an idea.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course the Senator agrees that a State would have authority to levy either a property tax, or an excise tax, or an income tax, on the income from the actual manufacture of munitions.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. At the same time, that would be taxation of war activities.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; there is no comparison there at all, no analogy there. We discussed that before the Senator came into the Chamber, earlier in the afternoon, as it would apply to a contract. The Senator from Michigan brought that to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. President, let us forget all the constitutional arguments and statesmanlike proposals, and let us suppose the Federal Government can tax local, municipal, and city bond issues; why should it do so? Why should it tax them? Are they not a part of our system of government? Do not these governmental subdivisions have to build schoolhouses, and city halls, and roads, and streets, and irrigation ditches, and all sorts of public improvements? How else can they build them except through taxation and the issuance of bonds, and through the sweat and blood and labor and toil of the people?

Mr. LEE. Is anyone advocating taxing such bonds?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; the Senator from Oklahoma is.

Mr. LEE. Indeed, I am not.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator will let me demonstrate, I will show him in a few minutes that he is. He is one of the most gallant and one of the most irresistible and one of the most militant Senators on this floor in favor of the Federal Government taxing school districts, road districts, irrigation districts, and I will leave it to a vote of the Senate, if the Senator wants to submit it to this tribunal.

Mr. LEE. The Senator then is claiming that the tax on the income from such bonds is a tax on the bonds?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. LEE. Then the Senator is opposing the statement of the Supreme Court. The Court says that a tax on the income is not a tax on the source.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is not the way I construe the action.

Mr. LEE. The Supreme Court does.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to demonstrate to the Senator that when we tax the income from a bond we tax the bond.

Mr. LEE. The Senator from Texas should have argued that to the Supreme Court. They held otherwise.

Mr. CONNALLY. If I had had a case there and had argued it, there probably would have been a different decision from the one about which the Senator is talking. [Laughter.] I did not have a case there, and I did not appear before the Court. I desire to demonstrate the point to the Senator from Oklahoma. The Senator from Michigan in his report admits that if the Federal Government taxes the income from State and municipal securities, those issuing authorities will have to pay from one-fourth to one-half of 1 percent in increased interest each year. Is that correct? That is in the report, is it not?

Mr. BROWN. Unquestionably the States will have to pay a little more.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not the report say from one-fourth to one-half of 1 percent?

Mr. BROWN. Not the report.

Mr. LEE. I think I can clear that up. Mr. Haynes, the Under Secretary, said that the increased cost would not be more than one-quarter or one-half of 1 percent.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what I had in mind, probably. A similar bill was pending in the House of Representatives as early as 1924; and who was Secretary of the Treasury at that time? Mr. Andrew W. Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury; and Mr. Mellon was urging, not that it be done by statute, but he was urging the adoption of a constitutional amendment, because it was generally admitted then that we did not have the power to do it by statute. That is where a great deal of the enthusiasm for this kind of a plan arises. Mr. Mellon was advocating that it was not fair to industry and was not fair to the great corporations to have to compete in the financial market with the securities of the governments of the States, municipalities, and the Federal Government, because, he said, so long as they were untaxed the buyers could afford to take the bonds at a lower interest rate. But when Mr.

Mellon went before the Committee on Ways and Means he admitted and testified that if the Federal Government taxed State or municipal securities the increased tax rate would be from one-half to 1 percent annually.

I have before me the record. At that time a man by the name of McCoy, a very able statistician, was the chief statistician for the Treasury Department. The Treasury was advocating this amendment, Mr. Mellon was advocating it. It cannot be said that Mr. Mellon was after the great taxpayers, the men who were hiding their earnings in tax-exempt bonds. He was not motivated by that sort of purpose. But Mr. Mellon thought it would be a good thing to have the Federal Government tax State securities so that the States could not issue so many of them. He believed in the authority of the great, centralized Federal Government laying its strong hand on the taxing districts within a State and saying, "We will put a burden on you, we will make it more difficult for you to issue bonds hereafter because you will have to pay a higher interest rate, and every man who buys your bonds will be told in advance that he must not only pay the interest, but that he must pay tribute to the Federal Government." For what? Did the Federal Government create the States? They were here before the Federal Government was. Why should the State of Colorado, or the State of Texas, or the State of Maine, or the State of Vermont, or the State of Oklahoma, be called up to the taxing counter of the Federal Government and be required to pay tribute? For what? Because it exists? The States existed long before there was any Federal Union.

Mr. President, the States were free from taxation when they achieved their independence at Yorktown. One of the chief causes of their revolt had been their assertion of the right to remain free from taxation by another power. For the first time they became free from taxation, and there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States by which the States conferred upon the Federal Government the power to tax either the States, their subdivisions, or their instrumentalities.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LEE. All other securities than governmental securities have to pay a tax on the same basis. If, then, the governmental securities do not have to pay, they are enjoying a special privilege.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. LEE. If that special privilege is removed, the Government has not placed an additional burden on them, it has merely removed a privilege which they have enjoyed and which the others do not possess.

Mr. CONNALLY. Call it what one may, the result is the same. They never have been taxed heretofore. Does the Senator think that the operations of private corporations, their power to finance themselves, and their power to issue bonds, should be placed upon the same level with the public securities of the Nation, the bond issues which a nation might issue to save its life in time of war, or to save its life in any other period of great emergency? Does he think that that purpose is no loftier and no higher and no greater than the desire of some corporation to issue bonds in order that it may make more money and obtain greater profits?

Mr. LEE. I believe that a man who earns his money by the sweat of his brow should not have to pay any more taxes than a man whose income is derived from tax-exempt securities.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, the Senator may think he answered the question, but he did not answer it. He evaded it—I do not mean intentionally—but with that intellectual celerity and skill which he possesses in a marked degree, he did not touch the question, side, top, or bottom. [Laughter.]

If a government has any sovereign power at all, it is the sovereign power to maintain itself, and one of the powers by which to maintain itself is the power of taxation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Texas on the amendment has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have 30 minutes on the bill, have I not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Except that the vote is to be taken at 4 o'clock.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall not take all my time, or I hope not. If not interrupted, I promise I shall not.

I previously said, suppose this power is given to the Federal Government, shall it lay this burden on the States and on the municipalities, when they will get nothing in return? Oh, but it is said, "They have the right to tax Federal bonds in return." How many Federal bonds are there in any little country school district which will have to pay perhaps 1 percent additional interest for 40 years? Some may say, "That is fine. Go ahead and pay that increased interest, and then you will get it back if all the Federal bonds in your locality, in your country school district, are taxed."

If the F. B. I. were sent in search of Federal bondholders in that country district they would not find a man who had enough income from Federal bonds to pay a dime of income tax. The Senator from Georgia knows that to be so in his own State, as it is in the State of the Senator from Texas.

In 1924, Mr. McCoy, in testifying, was asked if levying taxes by the Federal Government on school districts and on State bonds would not increase the interest rate. Mr. McCoy replied—and I quote him literally:

> They would have to pay an increased rate of interest, undoubtedly. They always would. It might be a lesser or a greater amount of rate of interest and might not be higher than the rate now prevailing, but it would be somewhat higher if this exemption were not allowed than with the exemption, naturally, and so would all Government issues.

There is the statement of the greatest statistical authority who has been in our Government within the last quarter of a century, Mr. McCoy, a man well known, I am sure, to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. He said that, of course, it would result in raising the interest rates on all Government securities. If the pending amendment shall be adopted, every State bond, every city bond, every county bond, every school-district bond, every road bond, every drainage-district bond hereafter issued will have to bear a higher interest rate than it otherwise would.

This is what Mr. Mellon himself said. He appeared before the committee, and the following discussion took place:

> Mr. FREAR.—

A member of the committee—

> Mr. FREAR. Does not this question arise there, Mr. Secretary, that there is an assumption that the three and one-half tax-free securities of the Government can be put out at par? Is that true?

It will be remembered that at that time we had the 3½-percent absolutely tax-free bonds, which were issued in 1917. Then we had the 4¼-percent, 4½-percent, and 4¾-percent bonds which were subject simply to the surtax, as most of the Federal bonds now are subject only to the surtax. So Mr. Frear asked whether we could sell 3½-percent bonds at par. Mr. Mellon replied—

> Probably.
> Mr. FREAR. That is true today that the Government can issue 3½-percent tax-free securities?
> Secretary MELLON. Perhaps. Now, to sell a security at par that is not tax-free—

This is Mr. Mellon speaking—

> The Government would have to pay a rate of interest today of more than 4 percent, of course.

Three and one-halfs were selling at par or above. Mr. Mellon said that if the exemption were removed the Government would have to pay at least 4 percent, not for 1 year, but for every year during which that bond was outstanding.

> Mr. CRISP. More than what?
> Secretary MELLON. More than 4 percent. I suppose it would depend upon the length of time they would have to run, but it would be somewhere from 4½ to 5 percent, depending on the length of time they would run.

Further on in the hearings we find a statement by Mr. Mills, who was then a Member of the House, and who afterward became Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. At the time the bonds are purchased the purchaser does not know what is the rate of tax?

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. He does not know what the rate of tax will be. It may go up. The State tax and the Federal tax may go up. The rate is unknown at the time of purchase. The rate of taxation may become very high in a period of 10 years. So the purchaser, in order to protect himself, must purchase at such a price that he could afford to pay a much higher rate than the present rate.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is exactly correct. If the tax were determinate and certain and fixed and could not exceed a certain sum, the bond buyer then could figure that, and take it into calculation, and make an exact bid on his bond. But so long as the tax is undetermined, so long as it is variable, so long as it may fluctuate up or down according to the will of the Congress, and according to the will of the various State legislatures, how can the bond buyer do anything except add a liberal slice of increased interest to take care of the hazard, of the chance of an increase in the tax rate?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator from Texas tell me how that situation differs in the slightest degree from the situation which faces the purchaser of any corporate bond? He is in exactly the same position.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. BROWN. The purchaser of bonds of the United States Steel Corporation or of any other corporation that issues bonds would be in exactly the same position as the one who purchased Government or State bonds.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is very true, but I still revert to the point that I regard the matter of Government financing as something more than a mere stock-market operation. I believe the issuance of bonds of the Government with which the sinews are to be obtained with which to operate the Government, by which it shall survive, is the loftiest function the Government can exercise, and I refuse to place it on the same basis as the operations of a utility company or of some gigantic corporation. The corporation may perish tomorrow, or it may go into bankruptcy tomorrow, with very little harm, perhaps, to the country at large, but when the financial operations of the Government of the United States are hindered the operations of a great people are hampered. Whenever the operations of even a little school district in a State are hampered an injury is done to untold generations that are to follow.

Let me quote what Mr. Mills said about increasing the tax rates. This is what Mr. Ogden Mills said in a statement before the committee:

Mr. Fordney asked a question in which I believe he stated that there was 1 percent difference.

One percent difference, mind you, between the interest rate of a taxable bond and a nontaxable bond. Mr. Mills continued:

The 3¾-percent bonds—

I should like to have Senators listen to this, because it is very vital. This is what Mr. Mills said in testifying before the House committee:

The 3¾-percent bonds were selling at 100.5, or did yesterday—and the Victory 4¾-percent, which pay taxes, were selling at exactly the same figure.

One hundred dollars and fifty cents for a $100 bond.

There is the test, Senators. Here is Mr. Mills, afterward Secretary of the Treasury, stating that the 3¾-percent tax-free bonds were selling on the market that day at $100.50 per bond, and that the 4¾-percent bonds, bearing an entire 1 percent more interest per year, and subject only to the surtax, were costing the Government 1 percent per annum more interest rate than the tax-free bonds.

Do Senators want anything plainer than that? If that will happen to Federal bonds, will it not happen to school bonds? The chances are that it will increase the interest rate on State securities more than it will on Federal securities, because the State bonds as a rule are not so good as those of the Federal Government, and therefore in the case of the municipalities or school districts and the cities and the counties, if they are made subject to a Federal tax, their interest burden will be increased more than will the interest burden on Federal bonds, because they are not as prime, they are not as gilt-edged now.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator does not want the Senate to believe that the sole consideration in the price of a bond on the market is the interest rate?

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no.

Mr. BROWN. There is the question of whether it is callable or not.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, yes.

Mr. BROWN. There is the question of how long it runs; what its maturity is.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. And unless we have all those factors it is unfair to compare them.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is very true. There are other factors, but they do not change the fact that the taxation feature is always there. Whether the bond be callable or not callable, the Federal tax will remain. Whether it be for a 10-year period or a 40-year period, the item of a Federal tax on that bond still remains. So the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan as to the other factors is not in point, because the factor of Federal taxation will always be present.

Mr. President, what did Mr. Mills further say?

And, of course, the Government is getting a full 1-percent benefit here on the reduction in the interest rate. I do not know whether it can be demonstrated mathematically that it is losing more in taxes than it is gaining in the interest rate, but the probabilities are that it is.

Mr. Mills further said:

It has been estimated that the advantage of tax exemption ranges between one-half percent and 1 percent. The present figures of the 4¾-percent bond and the 3¾ Victory notes do not indicate that. They indicate that it amounts to one whole percent.

That is Ogden Mills speaking. No one will dispute the fact that Mr. Mills knew as much about the financial structure of this Nation, even before he became Secretary of the Treasury, as did any other man of his day and generation.

Do we want to add 1 percent in the interest rate to every bond hereafter issued in the State of Nebraska or in the State of Oklahoma or in the State of Missouri, in every city, every county, every taxing district, every road district, and every school district, and turn over the increase in the interest rate mostly to the bond buyer, with only a little dribble to the Federal Government?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. Before the Senator leaves the subject of Mr. Mills, I wish to call attention to the fact that when he became Secretary of the Treasury he evidently changed his mind, because he is one of the several Secretaries of the Treasury who have condemned the further issuance of tax-exempt bonds.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not quoting him against it. He was then testifying in favor of it; but he was an honest man, and when he was cross-examined he had to admit——

Mr. BROWN. He was a Member of the House at that time.

Mr. CONNALLY. He was; but he was voting for it. There is no contradiction between the two statements. He was a Member of the House, but he afterward became Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BROWN. Are all the Senator's witnesses in favor of the proposal?

Mr. CONNALLY. No. I am quoting this witness as a fact witness. I am not quoting him on the law. I am quoting him on the facts. Mr. Mills said the cost would be 1 percent per annum more interest, even on Federal bonds.

Mr. BROWN. I think that is rather helpful to our side, because we believe that the increase is not more than one-quarter of 1 percent; and yet the Senator's witness, despite the tremendous additional cost, still says we ought not to issue any more tax-exempt bonds.

Mr. CONNALLY. That may be. He may have changed his mind. He was then supporting the proposal, as was Mr. Mellon. Mr. Mills and Mr. Mellon were hunting down rich taxpayers who had tax-exempt securities.

Mr. President, if it is sound to tax State bonds, why is it not sound to tax State courthouses and other State property? All through the States the Federal Government has post offices, Federal jails, and Federal instrumentalities of various kinds. They are all exempt from taxation. States do not undertake to tax post offices, Federal prisons, or Army posts. But if we are to tax everybody on the pretext of equality, the Federal Government ought to pay taxes to the States on all its tangible property. However, Mr. President, neither argument is sound. Each of the governments has the right to enjoy its own activities and its own instrumentalities free from taxation by the other.

There is no real evasion or advantage from the principle of exemption except to the States and to the Federal Government. Securities and values are like water; they seek their own level. If one should go to a bank tomorrow to buy a corporate bond, a Federal bond, or a State bond, he might be told, "The yield on this bond is 2½ percent." What does that mean? He would not be told what the bond would cost him, but what the yield would be, considering that one may have to pay a premium on the bond, and considering the interest rate on the bond. The yield, or net income, would be so much.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield, although my time is about to expire. I wish to hurry along.

Mr. BROWN. I merely wish to point out that if the Senator were a $5,000 taxpayer his yield on a 4-percent municipal bond would be only the interest on the bond, but if he were a $5,000,000 taxpayer the yield would be equivalent to 16 percent.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I do not agree with that doctrine at all.

As I was saying, when one goes to the bank to buy a tax-exempt bond, he is not receiving a special privilege. He is competing with every other man who would like to buy a tax-exempt bond; and the result is that such bonds pay a very low interest rate. Today many of the Treasury certificates pay less than 1 percent interest, and yet it is proposed to levy a tax on the fraction of 1 percent because of the idea that somebody is getting a great advantage through tax exemption. The man who buys a tax-exempt bond pays his tax when he buys the bond. He foregoes the privilege of receiving 5 percent interest on a bond which may be taxable. Instead of buying a 5-percent corporate bond which may be taxable, he says, "I will take a 2-percent bond which is not taxable." The reason why he is willing to take a 2-percent bond instead of a 5-percent bond is that he knows he will never have to pay a cent of tax on it. He does not have to lie awake nights worrying about the tax bill. He knows that it will never be taxed. But if it is to be taxed, and he does not know how much it may be taxed—because the Federal Government may raise its tax, or the State government may raise its tax—the bond buyer will add a sufficient cushion to take care, insofar as he can, of every hazard and every chance of loss. That is why bonds which are taxable bear a higher rate of interest. How can we say that we are giving a man a benefit when everybody admits that the tax-exempt bonds bear the lowest rate of interest?

We hear much said about tax-exempt bonds being held by the great millionaires. That is a misconception. The estimate in the Treasury Department report shows that in the great estates for which estate-tax returns are filed only 5.63 percent is in tax-exempt bonds. Those are not the small estates but the great estates about which we hear so much. Only 5 percent of them is in tax-exempt bonds—Federal, State, county, and municipal. Shall we punish 95 percent of the people to get at 5 percent? Shall we punish all the people in California by requiring tribute from every little school district, every little road district, and every little irrigation district in an effort to catch the 5 percent?

If we should catch the 5 percent, the result would be that they would simply quit buying such bonds. They would let somebody else buy them. What would happen? The people who do not pay any surtax would buy them. Most of the tax-exempt bonds owned by individuals are held by men with incomes of less than $5,000, and they do not pay any tax at all on those bonds. A large percentage of them are held by men with incomes of less than $5,000. The great bulk of tax-free bonds—State, county, and Federal—are owned by insurance companies, banks, and fiduciaries, which do not pay any surtax. They pay simply a flat corporation tax; so adding the surtaxes to them would not bring another dollar into the Treasury. It is a misconception that the amendment would punish great, rich concerns which have their money in tax-exempt securities. In the first place, most rich men keep their money in their business until they are ready to retire, and when they retire they may buy some tax-exempt bonds. However, it is not long before their estates are being administered. That is how it happens that only 5.63 percent of large estates consist of such bonds.

The junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] knows, because he is a great financial authority and comes from a financial district, that most of the tax-exempt bonds are not owned by individuals with large incomes. Surtaxes are paid on Federal bonds. The pending amendment would not further punish the holders of such bonds. Surtaxes are now paid on most Federal bonds. Therefore the great, rich fortunes do not invest in them.

Let us not fool ourselves. This bill is aimed at the States, at the counties, and at the school districts. They are the ones that would pay the added burden, and they would not get anything comparable in return.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the time of the Senator from Texas has expired, and, under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate will proceed to vote on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Frazier	King	Schwartz
Andrews	George	La Follette	Schwellenbach
Austin	Gerry	Lee	Sheppard
Bailey	Gibson	McKellar	Shipstead
Barkley	Gillette	McNary	Smathers
Bilbo	Glass	Maloney	Stewart
Brown	Green	Mead	Taft
Bulow	Guffey	Minton	Thomas, Idaho
Burke	Gurney	Murray	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Hale	Neely	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Harrison	Norris	Tobey
Capper	Hatch	Nye	Townsend
Clark, Idaho	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Clark, Mo.	Herring	Overton	Van Nuys
Connally	Hill	Pepper	Wagner
Danaher	Holt	Pittman	Walsh
Davis	Hughes	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Downey	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	White
Ellender	Johnson, Colo.	Russell	Wiley

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I am advised that, if present, he would vote as I am about to vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILEY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. Therefore I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER]. I understand that, if present, he would vote as I have already voted. Therefore I permit my vote to stand.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], who would vote "yea";

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], who would vote "nay"; and

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], who would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]. If the Senator from Maryland were present and voting, he would vote "yea," and the Senator from Illinois, if present, would vote "nay."

I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are necessarily absent from the Senate. I am advised that, if present and voting, these Senators would vote "nay."

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are unavoidably detained. I am advised that, if present and voting, these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 44, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1379) granting the consent of Congress to the Mackinac Straits Bridge Authority to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the Straits of Mackinac at or near a point between St. Ignace, Mich., and the Lower Peninsula of Michigan.

BRIDGE OR BRIDGES ACROSS THE STRAITS OF MACKINAC—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BROWN (for Mr. BAILEY) submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1379) granting the consent of Congress to the Mackinac Straits Bridge Authority to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the Straits of Mackinac at or near a point between Saint Ignace, Michigan, and the Lower Peninsula of Michigan, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments in sections 1 and 2 of the bill and agree thereto.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment of the title and agree thereto.

Both Houses agree to the bill with the amendments adopted by the House as herein cited.

JOSIAH W. BAILEY,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
A. H. VANDENBERG,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

EDWARD A. KELLY,
PEHR G. HOLMES,
DONALD L. O'TOOLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senate conferees, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], and my colleague [Mr. VANDENBERG], I move the adoption of the conference report.

When the bill passed the Senate, it conferred authority to construct a bridge across the Straits of Mackinac in my State of Michigan upon the Mackinac Straits Bridge Authority, an agency created by the State of Michigan. When my bill went to the House, it was amended to confer the authority on the State of Michigan itself. Some question arose as to whether or not this was done for the purpose of preventing the State from delegating its authority to construct a bridge. Construction by an agency is necessary unless the securities to be issued are to be the securities of the State itself. Having some doubt upon this subject when the bill came back, I decided to ask that the bill be sent to conference. This was done.

At the conference which I was privileged to attend, we were assured by the House conferees, Representative KELLY, of Illinois, and Representative HOLMES, of Massachusetts, who are the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee in charge of the bill as well as conferees, that there was no intention to prevent the State from conferring authority to construct a bridge to any State agency. Inasmuch as this construction of the House measure was entirely satisfactory to me, I requested that we agree to the House bill. I think it best to have the authority conferred upon the State with authority upon the part of the State to delegate the construction to any State agency. That this construction is the construction of the House conferees, is evidenced by the appended letter which was written me by the House conferees. The letter follows:

SEPTEMBER 11, 1940.

Hon. PRENTISS M. BROWN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BROWN: As a result of the conference participated in by the undersigned and the Senate conferees on S. 1379 on September 11, 1940, we are satisfied that under the terms of the House bill delegating authority to the State of Michigan to construct what is known as the Mackinac Straits Bridge, it will confer upon the State authority to construct the bridge itself or to delegate the authority to construct such bridge to any State agency.

Very truly yours,

EDWARD A. KELLY,
PEHR G. HOLMES,
Conferees on the part of the House.

There can be no question that under these circumstances we have an entirely satisfactory bill which will enable construction of the bridge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, last week the Senate by unanimous consent ordered that the conference report on Senate bill 3550, to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate commerce and for other purposes, be disposed of on Tuesday, September 17. But the Senate was not in session on that day and this order of business was automatically annulled.

I now give notice that tomorrow, immediately after the convening of the Senate, I shall renew my efforts in behalf of the adoption of this long-delayed conference report.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield I will say to him that on Monday the Senate, by unanimous consent, agreed to take up the conference report in question immediately following the disposition of the tax bill.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, my fear that the debate that is now raging may continue till Christmas and that the tax bill may never be passed will impel me to urge action on the conference report tomorrow.

CORPORATION INCOME AND EXCESS-PROFITS TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOWNEY obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so I may offer a clarifying amendment?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 153, lines 4 and 5, it is proposed to strike out "sixtieth" and insert "one hundred and twentieth."

Mr. HARRISON. This amendment is offered because we changed the date under the amortization plan from July 10, 1940, to January 1, 1940, and we thought that the certification to be made by the National Defense Council should be extended for 30 days.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I send forward a clarifying amendment, to which I think the Senator from Mississippi will have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 94, after line 24, it is proposed to add a new subparagraph——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the amendment would simply permit another category of deductions in normal income to apply to the excess-profits tax, so that where the parent company——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I inquire if the clerk read the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No. The Chair may say that he understands that the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky is to an amendment which has been adopted. Therefore it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Now I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 94, after line 24, after the amendments heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to add a new subparagraph reading as follows:

(J) Bad-debt deductions: The deduction under 23 (K) for any taxable year for bad debts shall be decreased by an amount representing unrecovered loans made by a parent corporation to its subsidiary.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to the amendment going to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for a very brief period of time in moving an amendment to the pending measure which in effect would increase the exemption before the computation of excess profits from $10,000 to the sum of $25,000. Specifically, I desire to present an amendment to change the figures "$10,000" on page 86, in line 6, to the figures "$25,000."

Mr. President, in the first place, I desire to state that I do not believe the assertion can be controverted by a single Senator here that by this measure we are laying upon all the small corporations of this Nation a burden of harassment entirely out of proportion to any benefit which may accrue to the American Government in the way of revenue.

During the past decade we have seriously complicated our laws, our governmental bureaus, and particularly our tax system; and by this measure, while we are raising a comparatively small amount of revenue, we are creating large burdens and greater complications for the small corporations.

I am not here speaking for the large corporations. They are well able, by their experts and by their attorneys, to take care of themselves, and this bill to a large measure provides for their relief; but every Senator in this Chamber has in his State literally hundreds, if not thousands, of corporations with comparatively small businesses which will be worried and handicapped by the enactment of this measure.

If the exemption could be increased from $10,000 to $25,000, the amount of revenue which would be lost to the Federal Government would be only $20,000,000. Thus, we are here creating a burdensome tax against thousands of small corporations which will be thereby compelled to employ experts, attorneys, and accountants, and will raise therefrom in this fiscal year the comparatively small sum of $20,000,000, about one-fifth of 1 percent of the amount of money we are appropriating for armament purposes this year. I say to you, Mr. President, that there is absolutely no justification in harassing the small-business men of America by a tax of this kind.

There is a second and more potent reason why this exemption should be allowed. In the first place, I take it all of you will agree with me that any corporation which is making only $25,000 a year is a small corporation. I say to you that this particular tax levied upon the small corporations of America which are expanding and growing will be a burden tending to handicap and prevent their development. You may say to me, "How can any tax levied against excess profits prevent the expansion of a business?"—because necessarily it would appear that if the tax is levied against excess profits, the corporation must be successfully expanding and growing. Let us analyze that for a moment.

In the first place, the normal tax provided in this bill, plus the average State tax on corporation profits, will leave us with about a 30-percent levy against the net profits of corporations. In the case of a small corporation which is profitable and expanding and growing, the excess-profits tax will probably, on an average, take about 20 percent of all of the net profits made by the corporations. Thus, under the bill there will be a total taking of 50 percent of the net profits of small corporations. I should like to point out to the majority leader of the Senate the fact that if a small corporation is profitable and expanding, a substantial part of its earnings has necessarily to flow into increasing business. If a business is profitable, if it is growing, if it is expanding, there are increasing book accounts; there are increasing inventories; there must be the increasing use of machinery, materials, and factories; and with only 50 percent of the net earnings left, the average small growing corporation, as a matter of fact, probably will not have sufficient earnings left to allow for its expansion, and certainly nothing at all for dividends.

So, Mr. President, what we are doing here is placing such a burden upon small corporations, seizing approximately 50 percent of their total earnings, that they will be unable to carry out the very industrial expansion which we desire to carry on; and I speak now for the small corporations from California, from which I have heard in great number, when I declare that this measure is grossly unfair to them; that it will not only harass and burden them, but will prevent the fair development and growth of their business, the very thing we desire to accomplish in this crisis.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. DOWNEY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. There are in the United States some five-hundred-thousand-odd corporations, as I recall. Under the House bill, which has a $5,000 exemption, only 70,000 of those five-hundred-thousand-odd corporations would pay any excess-profits tax. Under the $10,000 exemption of the Senate bill that number would be reduced to some forty or fifty thousand. Under the Senator's amendment I am informed that there would be only about 10,000 corporations of the five-hundred-thousand-odd that would pay any excess-profits tax at all. Does the fact that there may be 40,000 which can pay a tax out of 500,000 very seriously handicap growing corporations or small corporations in the Senator's view?

Mr. DOWNEY. Let me say to the majority leader that, in my opinion, it certainly does handicap several thousand small corporations which are earning, say, up to and less than $25,000 a year. I think it does.

Mr. BARKLEY. Any tax on a corporation is a handicap of some sort, as it is on all taxpayers. It is a handicap to all of us to pay taxes. But it seems to me that even 40,000 corporations which would pay a tax under the Senate committee bill is a small proportion compared with the over 500,000 which exist in the United States.

Mr. DOWNEY. If the figures stated by the majority leader are correct—and I am willing to assume they are, because the figures I have received are conflicting—if the proposed exemption would decrease from 50,000 to 25,000 the number of corporations which would have to bear the burden of the tax, and if it would reduce the revenue from the proposed law only by $20,000,000, then I say that in my opinion the amendment should immediately be accepted.

Mr. BARKLEY. The $20,000,000 estimated by the Senator is only for 1940, which is nearly gone. His amendment would reduce the income received by the Government next year and during all succeeding years anywhere from $50,000,000 up, depending on the amount of profits.

Mr. DOWNEY. I realize that in the next fiscal year there would be a greater loss, but I would say that certainly so far as small, growing, and expanding corporations are concerned, corporations which will vitally need a substantial amount of their earnings for their own development, the Government could well afford to forego $20,000,000 this year and whatever increasing sums which would occur hereafter.

A word or two more, and I shall have concluded. There are many other arguments which could be offered against the pending measure, which in my opinion is a totally unsatisfactory, complicated, unfair, insufficient, and futile measure, but extensive and exhaustive arguments were made by the distinguished Senators from Michigan and from Wisconsin [Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I can add nothing to the very imperative reasons they urged why this measure should be defeated. I myself desire to commit myself to their arguments and to the position of those Senators against the bill in its entirety.

Mr. President, I should like to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the very able statement made by Mr. Leonard E. Read, general manager of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, before the joint committee considering this subject. Mr. Read is an economist of note and highly talented in tax matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE EXCESS-PROFITS TAX

(By Leonard E. Read, general manager, Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce)

FOREWORD

The so-called excess profits tax proposal now before Congress should be considered first and last from the standpoint of its effects on the public welfare. How will it affect the execution and financing of the defense program? How will it affect employment and wage levels? How will it affect the system of free enterprise and our representative form of government? These are the questions to be answered in discussing legislative policies today.

At the outset, however, there should be noted certain principles which must be accepted as basic for any discussion of increased profits taxation.

(1) The public credit should not be further jeopardized by large-scale borrowings to finance the defense program. Either by economies in other governmental expenditures or by increased taxation, or both, public revenues and expenditures should be speedily brought into balance.

(2) Private enterprise should continue to be our main reliance, at least in the absence of a declared state of war, both because of its proven superior efficiency in production and because it is the only economic basis for democratic institutions whose present continuance we believe is desired by an overwhelming majority of United States citizens.

(3) A marked expansion of employment in private industry is a goal of primary importance for the United States at the present time both for political and economic reasons.

(4) The financial and other burdens of the defense program should be equitably distributed. Perfect justice is never attainable, but every precaution must be taken to prevent any class of citizens profiting at the expense of the community. Specifically, it is repugnant to every sense of justice that producers behind the lines should grow wealthy while their fellows on the fighting lines risk life and all that makes life worth while.

ARGUMENTS ON BEHALF OF AN EXCESS-PROFITS TAX

(1) The excess-profits tax is proposed at this time as a substitute for the 7 to 8 percent profits limitations imposed by the Vinson-Trammell Act on Government contracts in connection with the defense program. This act was found to prevent the placing of contracts (a) because existing amortization allowances appeared inadequate, (b) because certain necessary expenses could not be included in costs, and (c) because unforeseeable expenses and losses were not sufficiently compensated by the 7 to 8 percent maximum profit set by law. The excess profits tax bill therefore greatly liberalizes the amortization provisions of the income-tax laws for investments certified to be necessary for the defense program and repeals the limitation on the rate of profits.

(2) Some form of limitations on profits from armament making, however, is felt to be necessary to protect the public against profiteering.

(3) Provisions against war profiteering are politically expedient or necessary as an accompaniment to conscription of men. They are a part of the program for maintaining morale.

(4) To finance the defense program increased taxation is necessary. Part of this increased tax burden should fall on corporation profits. This seems especially reasonable in view of the financial benefits accruing to business from the Government's increased expenditures.

ARGUMENTS AGAINST AN EXCESS-PROFITS TAX

(1) The immediate pressing need is for liberalizing amortization provisions of income-tax laws relating to Government contracts. This, however, bears no necessary relation to the Vinson-Trammell limitation on rate of profits or to an excess-profits tax. The new bill proposes that the amortization period on investments necessary for the defense program be made 5 years, or less than 5 years if the President declares the state of emergency ended before that time; that is, in industries essential to the defense program, producers may, for income-tax purposes, set at a higher figure than formerly their annual depreciation charges. This will raise their cost figures and reduce their net earnings subject to corporation income taxes.

Fears have been expressed that, under the new amortization provisions, businessmen may amortize their investments more quickly than the assets lose their economic value. In other words, it is feared that businessmen will charge high prices to cover costs of their investment in a short time, at the same time reducing their tax assessments by artificially high depreciation charges. Then they would have received back from sale of their products the entire amount of their original investment and yet their equipment would still possess considerable earning power. Excess profits, it is assumed, would then be the result. Therefore, according to this view, an excess-profits tax must accompany any provisions to liberalize the amortization provisions of our income-tax laws.

The above view, however, fails to take into account the position of the enterpriser with regard to taxes and negotiation of Government contracts in case he has amortized his investment during a period shorter than the economic life of his assets. If he maintains his prices and volume of business, income-tax assessments will rise by the amount formerly charged for depreciation. The Treasury would then collect from him as much in total taxes as if he had amortized his investment more slowly. Moreover, future rates of taxation are likely to be higher than those existing now. Therefore, the total taxes paid by such an enterpriser would be higher than if he had charged off his investment more slowly.

It is unlikely, however, that he will be able to maintain his prices in view of the Government's power to modify the terms of his contracts. Army and Navy engineers make their own estimates of reasonable costs for the materials ordered from private business. They are not accustomed to favor business with overgenerous estimates of cost. If they find that business has written off the costs of investments, they can and doubtless will reduce the price offered in Government contracts.

Under conditions of liberal amortization privileges, moreover, competition for Government business will be keener and will act as a further influence to prevent profiteering.

It cannot be too strongly emphasized, however, that the enterpriser cannot escape his fair share of taxes or make increased profits by charging off his investment at abnormally high rates. At most he can merely postpone payment and protect himself against taxes on profits he has never earned. Such excessive taxes are now frequently levied to the detriment of both business and the public when actual obsolescence and depreciation occur at a more rapid rate than recognized by the Treasury Department. Liberalizing amortization provisions of the tax laws in this case only protects against losses from taxation of nonexistent profits. It does not permit excess profits or call for an excess-profits tax.

(2) The chief objections to the excess-profits tax, however, are that it penalizes efficiency, discourages enterprise, and checks needed business expansion.

The firm which uses its capital and labor most efficiently, getting highest output at lowest cost, will earn highest profits on a given capital base. The firm which shows most enterprise in reducing costs, increasing service, and extending its markets will show greatest increases in earnings over the base years. Therefore under an excess-profits tax such firms will pay taxes graduated upward according to their efficiency and enterprise.

Said Prof. E. R. A. Seligman, outstanding tax authority, concerning the principle of excess-profits tax:

"Something can be said for a graduated tax on income; something can even be said for a graduated tax on capital; but it is difficult to say anything in defense of a tax which is graduated on the varying percentage which income bears to capital. To penalize enterprise and ingenuity in a way that is not accomplished by a tax on either capital or income—this is the unique distinction of the law. * * * While it is entirely proper that a share of the profits should go to the community, it is not at all clear that the tax should be graduated according to the degree of inventiveness displayed." (Political Science Quarterly XXXIII, p. 17 ff.)

(3) The burden of the excess-profits tax is especially heavy on new and growing businesses and on small or moderate-sized firms. These are likely to have the highest rate of return on invested capital; they find it most difficult to raise capital unless they can invest sizable amounts of earnings, and it is from the growth of such firms that there is most hope of future industrial progress.

Professor Seligman continues on this point:

"Almost all large businesses have grown from humble beginnings, and it is precisely in these humble beginnings that the percentage of the profits to the capital invested is apt to be the greatest. The criterion selected, therefore, is the one best calculated to repress industry, to check enterprise in its inception, and to confer artificial advantages on large and well-established concerns. Nothing could be devised which would more effectively run counter to the long-established policy of the American Government toward the maintenance of competition."

A good case in point is a Los Angeles firm which has shown unusual courage and public spirit in accepting the so-called educational orders of the War Department. This firm accepted contracts and put in new equipment under conditions of great uncertainty. It could not know in advance what its costs were to be on the new products it was to turn out. It had no guaranty that it would ever receive more than the first order. Yet it went ahead, did a high-quality job of production, and put back its earnings year after year in improved equipment and methods. Today that firm is able to produce in volume and at low cost. Its prices to the Government are continually being reduced on successive orders and standards of specifications being raised. It can meet these new terms because it has never paid a dividend but put back every cent of earnings, beyond the owner's modest salary, in raising its ability to produce large volume at low cost. This thrifty and self-sacrificing policy of reinvesting earnings was the only way this firm could have expanded, for at the outset it could not have borrowed the necessary funds, or could only have borrowed by sacrificing the owner's initiative and introducing more conservative methods which would have prevented acceptance of the risky War Department contracts.

This firm is showing the way to other firms in reducing costs and is having a noticeable effect in getting reduced prices to the Government on current armament contracts. Such a firm of proven enterprise and ability should be encouraged to continue its development. It is still a comparatively small firm, but if permitted can become a leader in its field. We need such industrial leaders as never before, but this particular firm would find its growth seriously checked by an excess-profits tax.

The importance of this point at the present time cannot be too strongly emphasized. The greatest advantage which private enterprise possesses over Fascist or Communist forms of economic organization is its ability to make rapid progress. When it is easy for men with new ideas to expand their operations rapidly, industrial progress is rapid. And this rapid expansion of operations by a new firm can take place only insofar as opportunities for good profits exist and insofar as these profits can be put back into development of the business. It is doubtful if private enterprise has any important advantage in competition between nations except this one of superior capacity for progress. If we are to penalize and prevent progress by the new, small, and growing firms, we might as well at once switch over to a Fascist form of society.

(4) Serious administrative difficulties exist in an excess-profits tax which do not exist in the income tax. Added to the difficulty of measuring income is the much greater difficulty of measuring capital worth. Prof. William Shultz, New York tax authority, says this puts "an impossible auditing task" on the tax administration. The situation with respect to the World War excess-profits tax he terms "a hopeless administrative muddle" (American Public Finance 1939, p. 454). The persistence 20 years later of lawsuits growing out of this tax is supporting evidence of Professor Shultz's opinion.

The difficulty of measuring capital worth puts tremendous power and responsibility in the hands of Treasury officials and adds a most serious factor of uncertainty to every business, whether it is making profits or not.

When rates are moderate, this uncertainty is not serious and the consequences of arbitrary and unfair decisions are not fatal. But when the rates are set at the levels contemplated in the present proposal, and when they are added to taxes which already take over half the profits of the best years and an estimated 65 to 70 percent of profits in a year like 1938, the danger to private business is very great. If business cannot earn enough to build reserves in good years, it cannot survive poor years.

(5) Personal gains from armament making are likely to be moderate in view of existing income-tax rates. Tax rates on the higher income brackets are now higher than in 1918. As recognized by men like Senator LA FOLLETTE, noted for support of the ability principle of taxation, taxes on higher incomes are at or near their limit of peacetime productivity. Federal, State, and local taxes on business, furthermore, in 1937, the year of greatest profits since 1929, took 56 percent of corporation net income, as against 48 percent in 1918, the year of highest war taxes. Corporation dividend policies are now more liberal and taxes on dividends higher than in 1918. State income taxes, moreover, have been added to the load borne by personal incomes.

Profits are not personal income but productive capital until paid out as salaries or dividends. They can only be converted into personal income or tax payments by liquidating productive assets or by reducing purchases of productive equipment. Therefore, as further control of war gains is needed, it should be secured by increased personal income taxes, especially in the middle brackets.

The whole subject of war profits, however, should be reexamined in the light of present conditions. Inflationary policies adopted in the World War caused a rapid rise in price levels and consequent appearance of exceptional profits and wages in certain war industries and losses in other lines. Most of the gains to these war industries, however, were offset by rising taxes and by the deflation which followed the end of the war. In fact, the purchasing power of all persons receiving more than $25,000 a year was decreased by 70 percent or more, according to the figures of Wilford I. King (The National Income and Its Purchasing Power, p. 171), and total net property income and profits in terms of purchasing power actually declined each year from 1917 to 1921, inclusive (W. I. King, p. 112).

Today, in the absence of inflationary policies, there is little or no reason for expecting any important increase in profit levels from the defense program. In fact, the opposite is more likely to be the case. Costs will rise and volume of business decline in the nonessential industries as consumers' purchasing power is reduced by taxation and as labor is taken for the Army and war industries. Even in the war industries, high costs of labor and increased taxation will reduce profit opportunities.

It is true that inflation may occur. But is this the reasoning back of the excess-profits tax? The bill is an administration measure. Is the administration willing to come out openly and say that it is necessitated by the danger of inflation resulting from its own financial policies?

One more point should be noted in connection with the possibilities of "excess profits" resulting from the defense program. Profiteering implies the existence of a degree of monopoly. It is true that in nonnegotiated contracts an element of monopoly exists, but in these cases the degree of monopoly is greater on the side of the Government than on the side of the businessman. The Government is the sole buyer, or by all odds the biggest customer, whereas the businessman is not likely to have a complete monopoly of the source of supply. As mentioned above, the Government has its own experts for making cost estimates to check the figures presented by businessmen in their bids to Government contracts. The businessman, once he has made his investment in specialized equipment, is at the mercy of his customer—the Government. This is a further check to profiteering.

In any case where monopoly does exist, moreover, the excess-profits tax would not stop profiteering. It would only return a part of the profits to the Government. The best way, therefore, to guard against profiteering is to prevent it by stimulating competition. And the opportunity for high profits to the exceptionally efficient producer is one of the best means of stimulating competition and reducing prices. An occasional high prize is much more effective in getting a large number of competitors to enter the lists than a large number of small prizes even when the total amount of the small prizes is greater than the single prize. Accordingly the Government will find it cheaper to permit a few firms to earn good profits, especially if they are largely reinvested in expanding production than in operating on any cost-plus basis or its equivalent through profits limitations or excess-profits taxation. Under competitive conditions most firms make small profits or actually lose money. They are kept going largely by hopes, never to be realized, of gaining the large profits earned by a few leaders. In this way high profits to the most efficient and successful has proven to be the most effective way of getting increased output at low cost. Any firm which is to stay in business, moreover, must make good profits occasionally to compensate for losses.

(6) In any case the yield of the excess-profits tax will not be significant in comparison with the total Budget. The Treasury estimates lie between $190,000,000 and $400,000,000. But from this should be deducted losses in income-tax yields since dividend payments will be reduced by the excess-profits tax.

CONCLUSION

Wanted: Machines

Men can't build guns, tanks, airplanes, and battleships with their bare hands. If they could, China would be the world's greatest military power.

Only with the help of machines—thousands of them; big, powerful, and complicated—can we produce the great quantities of munitions and huge weapons needed for our military defenses.

Machines are also needed to create jobs at which workers can earn high wages. In other words, machines are needed to turn out the great quantities of cars, radios, electric refrigerators, as well as low-cost food, shoes, and clothing which go to make up a high standard of living and peacetime prosperity for our people.

Until recently we have been losing sight of these facts. Now, however, we see what men with machines can do in crunching along over the bodies and lands of other people less well equipped. This should remind us that mechanical power is the material basis for national strength, security, and prosperity.

How can we best get the machines we need?

Whether in Russia, Germany, or the United States, machines can be secured only by self-denial and thrift. They are bought out of someone's savings. What is spent on machinery by way of money or labor cannot for the time being go to buying or producing goods for immediate enjoyment of consumers.

In Soviet Russia and Nazi Germany these savings have been taken from people chiefly by force; that is, by taxes, rationing of consumers, and forced wage reductions. Whereas under private enterprise we have relied mainly on voluntary saving and investment.

The sources of savings on which private enterprise chiefly relied in the past, however, are being dried up by taxes or closed by bureaucratic control. These sources are the savings of the well-to-do, and profits reinvested (saved) by business firms.

Taxes on the higher incomes seem to have reached nearly their limit. But taxes on profits are likely to be increased considerably in the near future. What effect will this have in checking the modernizing and expansion of plant and equipment, machinery and tools, so sorely needed by America today? What effect will increased-profits taxation have on reducing costs and securing for the taxpayer the most for his money spent on armament building?

Proponents of the excess-profits tax argue that expansion and modernizing of equipment can come out of borrowings. They point to huge excess bank reserves and low interest rates to prove that credit is abundant and cheap.

But can or will business borrow to expand if our tax policies prevent growth from within by reinvestment of earnings?

Reinvested profits—the growth-bud of industry

Reinvestment of profits is a most important factor in industrial growth.

When a firm expands by borrowed funds it must go to the trouble and expense of persuading outsiders that the new investment will be profitable. If it has earnings to reinvest, however, it need persuade only its own management—a much simpler and less expensive task, especially for new firms and for small or medium-sized concerns.

Since 1933, moreover, under the securities acts and new banking regulations, the ambitious firm has also been required to persuade various Government officials before it could borrow for expansion. This persuasion has often involved great expense and trouble even when the company's credit and honesty were of the highest order.

True, the income-tax authorities are now looking more and more suspiciously on the firm which puts back earnings into its business. But it has usually been easier and cheaper to persuade the Treasury Department than the Federal Securities Commission.

Reinvestment of profits improves credit and preserves initiative

New investors, especially purchasers of bonds, prefer to invest in companies which are building up surplus out of earnings. This surplus provides additional security to the creditors and therefore reduces interest charges on new funds.

Furthermore, good financial managers themselves want to provide this security to their creditors. Without such a backlog the creditors will take over control more quickly when earnings temporarily decline or disappear—as earnings frequently do for many firms.

In fact, all businessmen prefer to finance expansion entirely out of earnings if possible. Borrowing or selling of stock to outsiders always means turning over some of the control to the creditors or new stockholders. It means sacrificing a certain amount of initiative and freedom of action.

Therefore many excellent businessmen refuse to borrow funds unless occasionally for short-term purposes. Henry Ford is a well-known example. And no careful businessmen will expand as far or as rapidly on borrowed funds as on reinvested earnings, if the latter are available.

Reinvestment of profits is, therefore, the growth bud of industry. When this reinvestment is made difficult through declining profits, or through taxation and legal obstacles, business expansion is correspondingly checked.

During the past 10 years business as a whole has paid out in taxes and dividends about $30,000,000,000 more than it has earned. During the first part of the depression this was due to reduced earnings. Since 1936 it has been due to rapidly mounting taxes and political pressure. And the drain still continues!

This may explain why private business does not take up the slack in employment and why investment funds stagnate in our banks.

Probable results of the proposed excess-profits tax

If the expansion of private business at the present juncture is stopped or seriously checked by increased profits taxation Government is likely to attempt to supply the deficiency. Either the urgency of the defense program or the employment and wages problems, or both, will drive any administration in this direction.

Experience has shown, however, that Government management is in general uneconomic and inefficient. Aside from the political consequences of a further advance toward socialism there would be a reduction in standards of living and a failure to achieve the defense program of which this Nation is capable.

Alternative proposals

Insofar as increased taxes are necessary to balance the Federal Budget, it is our opinion that they should fall on personal incomes—dividends, interest, salaries, and wages—and on luxury goods. It is by this means that maximum fiscal revenue can be obtained with the least discouragement to necessary industries.

Efficient, low-cost firms should be given greater encouragement and opportunity to expand, not further penalized by new and discriminatory taxation. Even in the production of nonessentials, insofar as consumers are to be left enough income to enjoy them, it is important that the efficient, low-cost firms shall replace those which use more labor and capital to turn out a given product. Existing provisions against tax avoidance through unproductive reinvestment of earnings should be reexamined in the light of the present situation with a view to strengthening them where necessary.

In any modification of existing taxes on business, however, reinvestment of earnings in plant and equipment for essential industries should be given special encouragement by tax exemptions or reduced rates of taxation. Not only will such a policy increase the ability of private enterprise to produce more goods at less cost, but it will also improve business credit. Not only will it stimulate competition and reduce prices, but it will also stimulate the circulation and expansion of credit and buying power. Not only will it give the public more for its money in building our defenses, but it will also increase personal incomes and taxpaying ability. In short, it will stimulate business, not only to produce more goods but to expand and circulate the purchasing medium necessary for taking the goods off the market.

Such stimulation to private enterprise is needed to expand employment, to rebuild confidence in free enterprise, and to restore mutual trust and cooperation between employers and employees, creditors and debtors, political leaders and citizens. This rebuilding of our morale is a vital part of the program for rebuilding the defenses of our Nation and safeguarding our free institutions. It deserves the courageous support of every citizen and every statesman.

Mr. HARRISON and Mr. LEE addressed the Chair.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from Oklahoma desire to speak on the pending amendment?

Mr. LEE. No; I wish to offer an amendment, when the Senator yields the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to occupy the floor for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment would not be in order until the pending amendment shall be disposed of.

Mr. DOWNEY. I should like to have a vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Committee on Finance gave long consideration to the question now presented. When the bill came over from the House, an exemption of $5,000 was given to corporations, and that applied to those which elected either method. The committee on Finance increased the exemption in the bill from $5,000 to $10,000. That would cost the Government some $19,000,000. The pending amendment would cost about $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 more, and there would be only about 10,000 corporations which would have to pay any tax, if the amendment should be agreed to. We feel we have been as fair as possible under the circumstances, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to a reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following new title:

TITLE V—DRAFT OF WEALTH

SEC. 501. Whenever Congress shall declare war, or shall declare that the imminence of war has created an emergency which in the judgment of the President is sufficiently serious to necessitate an increase in the Military Establishment by the drafting of manpower, the President is authorized and requested to cause to be taken a census of the net wealth of the Nation. Such census shall be taken in such manner as the President shall by regulations prescribe and by such agency or agencies of the Government as he may designate or establish for such purpose. Such regulations shall require every citizen of the United States, every resident alien, and every nonresident alien having any wealth in the United States to file with such person or agency as the President may designate a sworn declaration in such form as the President may prescribe with respect to his gross wealth and financial obligations: Provided, That such declaration in the case of a nonresident alien shall be only with respect to his gross wealth in the United States and financial obligations therein. For the purposes of this title, an individual shall be deemed to own any property held in trust for him or his benefit. Upon the completion of such census the President shall cause to be computed, and shall prepare a list setting forth, the net wealth of each person covered by such census which is subject to section 502 of this title and the portion of the net wealth of each such person which is subject to the borrowing power of the United States under this title.

SEC. 502. The following portions of the net wealth of every citizen of the United States and of every resident alien, and of that part of the net wealth of every nonresident alien which is located in the United States, shall be subject to the borrowing power of the United States under this title:

In the case of net wealth not in excess of $1,000, none.

In the case of net wealth in excess og $1,000 and not in excess of $10,000, 5 percent of such excess.

$450 in the case of net wealth of $10,000; and in the case of net wealth in excess of $10,000 but not in excess of $100,000, 10 percent in addition of such excess.

$9,450 in the case of net wealth of $100,000; and in the case of net wealth in excess of $100,000 and not in excess of $250,000, 15 percent in addition of such excess.

$31,950 in the case of net wealth of $250,000; and in the case of net wealth in excess of $250,000 and not in excess of $500,000, 20 percent in addition of such excess.

$81,950 in the case of net wealth of $500,000; and in the case of net wealth in excess of $500,000 and not in excess of $1,000,000, 25 percent in addition of such excess.

$206,950 in the case of net wealth of $1,000,000; and in the case of net wealth in excess of $1,000,000 and not in excess of $2,000,000, 30 percent in addition of such excess.

$506,950 in the case of net wealth of $2,000,000; and in the case of net wealth in excess of $2,000,000 and not in excess of $3,000,000, 35 percent in addition of such excess.

$856,950 in the case of net wealth of $3,000,000; and in the case of net wealth in excess of $3,000,000 and not in excess of $4,000,000, 40 percent in addition of such excess.

$1,256,950 in the case of net wealth of $4,000,000; and in the case of net wealth in excess of $4,000,000 and not in excess of $5,000,000, 45 percent in addition of such excess.

$1,706,950 in the case of net wealth of $5,000,000; and in the case of net wealth in excess of $5,000,000 and not in excess of $7,500,000, 50 percent in addition of such excess.

$2,956,950 in the case of net wealth of $7,500,000; and in the case of net wealth in excess of $7,500,000 and not in excess of $10,000,000, 55 percent in addition of such excess.

$4,331,950 in the case of net wealth of $10,000,000; and in the case of net wealth in excess of $10,000,000 and not in excess of $25,000,000, 60 percent in addition of such excess.

$13,331,950 in the case of net wealth of $25,000,000; and in the case of net wealth in excess of $25,000,000 and not in excess of $50,000,000, 65 percent in addition of such excess.

$29,581,950 in the case of net wealth of $50,000,000; and in the case of net wealth in excess of $50,000,000 and not in excess of $100,000,000, 70 percent in addition of such excess.

$64,581,950 in the case of net wealth of $100,000,000; and in the case of net wealth in excess of $100,000,000, 75 percent in addition of such excess.

SEC. 503. (a) The Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time determine the sums that will be necessary to prosecute to a successful conclusion any war declared by Congress or to provide for such expenditures for the national defense as may be necessary to meet any emergency declared by Congress which in the judgment of the President necessitates an increase in the Military Establishment by the drafting of manpower, and shall issue bonds for such sums. Such bonds shall be issued in convenient sizes and denominations, shall not be transferable, shall bear interest at a rate not in excess of 1 percent per annum, and shall not be tax-exempt either as to principal or interest. The President shall prorate among the persons covered by any census taken pursuant to this title the sums which such persons are required to invest in each separate issue of such bonds so that so far as practicable the percentage of the net wealth subject to the borrowing power of the United States (computed on the basis of the graduated scale set forth in section 502 of this title) which any such person is required to invest will not be larger than the percentage which any other such person is required to invest, and the President shall proclaim the time limit within which such persons are required to purchase such bonds and shall notify each person the amount of such bonds he is required to purchase. Each person shall then purchase such bonds in the amounts so allotted and within the time so prescribed. If the aggregate amount which any such person shall have been required to invest in all the bonds so issued during any one such war or to meet any one such emergency shall have equaled that part of his net wealth which is subject to the borrowing power of the United States under section 502 of this title, such person shall remain subject to the borrowing power of the United States under this title but in computing that part of his net wealth which he may be required to invest there shall be deducted from his total wealth the amount of such bonds previously purchased by him.

(b) The borrowing power of the United States under this title shall not be exercised after the President proclaims the termination of the war or the emergency which has brought such power into existence.

(c) It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress that, whenever bonds are issued pursuant to the provisions of this title, the proceeds resulting from the levy of any additional taxes or increased rates of taxation imposed by reason of the war or emergency as a result of which such bonds are issued shall, except insofar as they are needed in the immediate interests of national defense, be applied to the retirement of such bonds.

SEC. 504. (a) The President is authorized to establish, in the several States, Territories, and possessions, such number of local boards of wealth appraisers as may be necessary for the purpose of accurately determining the net wealth of the Nation. Each such local board shall be appointed by the President and shall consist of three or more members, none of whom shall be connected with the Military Establishment, to be chosen from citizens residing in the area within the jurisdiction of such board as determined in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the President. Such boards shall have power within their respective jurisdictions to hear and determine, subject to review as provided in subsection (b) of this section, all questions arising under this title with respect to the ownership and valuation of wealth.

(b) The President is further authorized to establish in each Federal judicial district of the United States such number of district boards of appraisers as he may find necessary, and each such district board shall consist of such number of citizens of the United States, none of whom shall be connected with the Military Establishment, as the President may determine. The respective jurisdictions of such district boards shall be determined in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the President, and each such district board shall have power, under rules and regulations prescribed by the President, to review on appeal, and to affirm, modify, or reverse, any decision of any local board of appraisers having jurisdiction in any area within the jurisdiction of such district board. The decisions of such district boards shall be final except that, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, he may affirm, modify, or reverse any such decision.

(c) The district courts of the United States, the United States courts of any Territory, and the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction of offenses and violations under this title and the rules and regulations prescribed thereunder, and, concurrent with State and Territorial courts, of all suits in equity and actions at law to enforce any liability or duty created by this title; but no question within the jurisdiction of any local board of appraisers shall be litigated in any such court unless the person litigating such question has invested in bonds as provided for by section 503 of this title and until a final decision with respect to such question has been rendered pursuant to subsection (b) of this section. Any such suit or action may be brought in the district wherein the defendant is found, or is an inhabitant, or transacts business, and process in such cases may be served in any other district of which the defendant is an inhabitant, or wherever the defendant may be found. No judgment or decree rendered by any such court in any proceeding instituted by any such person shall require the United States or any of its agents to make reparation to the plaintiff, other than to repurchase from him such bonds as he was not rightfully compelled to purchase. Judgments and decrees so rendered shall be subject to review as provided in sections 128 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 28, secs. 225 and 347). No case arising under this title and brought in any State court of competent jurisdiction shall be removed to any court of the United States.

SEC. 505. (a) The President is authorized, in his discretion, to provide, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the acceptance by the United States of property or services which are valuable for the prosecution of war or the improvement of the national defense in payment for the bonds provided for by section 503 of this title. Such rules and regulations shall provide for the method of valuation of any such property or services.

(b) The President is further authorized to provide, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the acceptance from any person, in payment for the bonds authorized by section 503 of this title, of notes or other obligations of such person, bearing interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum and adequately secured by liens upon specified property.

(c) The President is authorized to issue currency, notes, or other obligations of the United States upon the security of property, notes, or other obligations accepted under subsections (a) or (b) of this section; but the amount of the currency, notes, or other obligations so issued shall not exceed the value of the security held against them and the security so held shall be used or disposed of solely for the purpose of discharging or retiring such currency, notes, or other obligations.

(d) The President is authorized to take such action as may be necessary to enforce any lien accepted under this section and to sell or otherwise dispose of any property acquired under this section. In the event that any person fails to pay the amount of any note or other obligation made by him and accepted under subsection (b), and the property securing such note or obligation is insufficient to discharge the indebtedness in full, a sum sufficient to discharge the balance of such indebtedness shall be withheld in redeeming the bonds issued under this title to such person.

SEC. 506. The President is authorized to make such rules and regulations, in addition to those specifically provided for herein, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

SEC. 507. (a) Whoever shall make any false statement in any sworn declaration required to be filed by the first section of this title, and whoever shall violate any provision of any rule or regulation made by the President under this title, shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both.

(b) Whoever shall fail to purchase the amount of bonds which he is required to purchase under the provisions of this title or shall fail to purchase such bonds within the time prescribed under the provisions of this title shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $100,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both: Provided, That the maximum penalties which may be imposed upon any person convicted of failing to purchase the required amount of such bonds shall be reduced in proportion to the extent of his compliance.

SEC. 508. The powers conferred upon the President and the duties and liabilities to which owners of wealth are subjected by this title are declared to be supplementary to and not in limitation of or in substitution for any powers, duties, and liabilities with respect to the national defense under any other title.

SEC. 509. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, if I can have the attention of the Senate, I give my colleagues my word as a Senator that I will not delay the Senate long on the amendment.

This matter has been before the Senate on a point of order. The bill provides for the compulsory sale of bonds in an emergency which is of sufficient moment to call for drafting of men and when the Government needs to raise money.

The amendment is not a tax bill. It provides for forced loans. We are facing a situation which will require the Government to borrow fourteen or more billion dollars through the issuance of bonds. The first few billions of those bonds might sell easily. After that, how are we to sell the bonds unless we have a method of borrowing according to ability to lend just as we tax according to ability to pay?

The amendment does not provide for a capital levy. Under a capital levy nothing is repaid. Under the amendment the bonds would be repaid. The amendment merely provides a method of Government borrowing the credit of a man and using it as a backlog for financing national defense.

The amendment provides the same method of financing as was used in the World War, with four major changes. In the first place, instead of the sale being voluntary, it would be mandatory. Second, instead of the amount purchased by each individual being determined by his patriotism, or pressure put on him, or the desire for profit from tax-exempt, high-interest-bearing bonds, the amount would be determined by a schedule based on his net wealth. Third, the bonds would not be profitable from an investment standpoint. They would bear 1-percent interest. Fourth, they would not be transferable. That is an important point, because we would prohibit much profit that is made by virtue of a poor man buying a bond when he is not able to buy the bond, and then not being able to hold it, discounting it, and selling it to someone else, and letting the other person make the profit.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator gave four characteristics of the bonds. I think there is a fifth. They would be worthless.

Mr. LEE. No; the Government's obligations are not worthless. The bonds would not be sold on the market, if that is what the Senator means, because they would be nontransferable.

Mr. BAILEY. One could not transfer them, he would get only 1-percent interest, and under the Senator's doctrine announced today, we would tax them, and I think we could say they would be absolutely worthless. I could not put them up, I could not sell them, I could not do anything with them.

Mr. LEE. No; the Government promises to pay the bond at the maturity of the bond, and that is a very important point, because during the World War, when money was borrowed at the forks of the creek, the buyer could not hold the bonds; so he sold them, and they went to New York, and at maturity the money went to New York instead of to Oklahoma, and Florida, and Colorado, and North Carolina, and other sections of the country. Instead of expanding buying power, it added to the concentration of wealth, and caused a worse after-the-war slump than would have occurred if the bonds had been nontransferable, and, when they matured and were paid off, the money had gone out to the forks of the creek and to the grass roots, to the original purchasers.

Mr. President, three things are necessary to prosecute a war—men, money, and material. We have provided for the drafting of men and material but we have not provided for the compulsory method of financing war. Unless we turn to some plan of this kind, we will reach the point—mark my words—where we will have to fight a war here at home, as we did in the World War, in order to sell the bonds. The first few will sell easily because the banks are full of money, and then the defense program will swing into action and money will receive attractive offers, and it will be profitable to invest it; but, if the war crisis comes closer to us, money will hide, as it always does, and we shall reach such a point that it will be increasingly more difficult to sell those bonds. Then we will turn to Liberty Loan committees and strong-arm squads, and we will resort to kangaroo-court methods and methods of bludgeoning people into buying bonds beyond their ability to buy.

The method provided by my amendment is a sane and sensible method of doing the same thing in the field of finance that we have already done in the field of industry and insofar as drafting manpower is concerned.

The important thing, if we enter a war, is to win the war. Everything else must be of secondary importance. It is desirable to take the profits out of war. It is desirable to equalize the burdens of war as much as possible, but even those high ideals must take second place to the one prime motive, and that is to win the war.

Money has been called the sinews of war. Every government that has ever depended upon the voluntary method of raising money in time of war, in a major war, has reached the point where the voluntary method broke down, and the Government was forced to turn to the printing presses and issue fiat money, whereby it destroyed itself, when it still had wealth, but had no method of reaching it.

When we think of wealth in this country we must think of land, buildings, plants, physical properties. There is not enough cash in the country to carry forward our defense program, much less to fight a war. We must have some method of translating the country's nonliquid property into liquid cash so the Government may borrow it. My plan provides the machinery.

During the Civil War the South had property, but had no means of translating it into cash, so they turned to the printing press. The North had property, but it had no method for turning it into cash, and Lincoln issued greenbacks. Those greenbacks depreciated. They did not become entirely worthless, but they depreciated in value, and if the war had gone on longer who can say that they would not have become worthless. Yet here were two sections of a great country which had wealth, but no way of reaching it. A nation cannot pay as it fights. That has been proven. Therefore it must have some method, either of borrowing on the future or of using some accumulated savings. My amendment provides the machinery for doing that. It is fair and just that we be able to finance a war if we ask men to serve where they are subject to danger.

We were not in the World War very long. The outcome was never doubted. We knew we would be successful, and yet it became increasingly more difficult to raise the necessary money. I pay tribute to one of our colleagues, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. Due to his courage and the courage of those around him the Government was able to raise the necessary money. They went before the people and said, "We must have it." But what a battle it was to raise the money. Four-minute speakers were provided. There were pretty girl revues; there were Boy Scout solicitors; there were Girl Scout solicitors. Captured war material was brought to the United States, and trainloads of it were sent throughout the country in order to excite the people so they would buy Government bonds. Wounded soldiers were called out of hospitals, and they traveled around throughout the country exposing their broken bodies in order to get people to buy war bonds. Posters were made depicting little babies with tiny, chubby hands lifted up begging people to buy Liberty bonds. The Statue of Liberty, with flaming eyes, from posters everywhere shouted, "Buy Liberty Bonds!" It cost the Government $48,000,000 to beg the people to buy the bonds with which to finance the war. Yet here we are faced with the need of having to borrow no telling how many billion dollars, when we had the experience in the World War that it was almost impossible to do it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I am somewhat amazed at the statement of cost. I wonder if the Senator knows what the items of cost were? The Senator said $48,000,000 was required for that purpose.

Mr. LEE. Yes. That statement is already in the RECORD. It is in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. It cost $48,000,000-plus to conduct the campaign to sell the bonds The items of cost were listed. The cost increased with every successive bond issue. The advertising cost alone doubled with every successive bond campaign, and there were five of them.

I will say further, to show that it was increasingly more difficult to sell the bonds as the war proceeded, that it was necessary to increase the interest rates—to step the interest rates up. The first bonds bore 3½-percent interest. The next bonds bore 4-percent interest. The next bonds bore 4¼-percent interest. The last bonds bore 4¾-percent interest. Had we been in a war, as England is today with her back to the wall, there is no telling—perhaps we would have reached such a point that we could not have borrowed money at any rate of interest.

It has been said that each issue of bonds was oversubscribed, but that is very misleading. When one thinks of a bond issue being oversubscribed he thinks of a crowd rushing up to the Treasury waving check-books and money, trying to buy bonds, and the Secretary finally closing the gate in the faces of the prospective buyers, and saying, "The bond issue has been oversubscribed. We do not need any more money."

Instead advertisements were placed in every nook and corner of the country putting the pressure on the people to buy, and when the results were totaled up it was found that there was oversubscription. The rate of oversubscription tells the story. The first bonds were oversubscribed 52 percent. The second bonds were oversubscribed 54 percent. The next bond issue plummeted down to 39 percent. The next bond issue was oversubscribed 16½ percent. The last one was oversubscribed 16⅔ percent. In other words, with all the pressure that could be put on the people by the most flamboyant selling campaign that has ever been staged in the world, the oversubscription slumped from a high of 54 percent to a low of 16½ percent, and all the time the interest rate was going up. So we ought to have a plan of financing. We have provided for drafting men and material. Why not provide for the other requirement, which is money?

Men and money are necessary to win a war. If we have one and do not have the other we shall be defeated.

Mr. President, I shall not longer detain the Senate on the pending question. I appreciate the opportunity to explain this important measure—I think it is important—to the extent I have explained it. Of course, any money question is usually involved, and I could speak a long time on this question because I have made a special study of it. I am very much of the opinion that the amendment ought to be adopted at this time, but I shall not further detain the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senate is familiar with the question under consideration. It has been before the Senate previously and voted down. I hope the proposal will be voted down at this time also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNALLY. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator's amendment an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. CONNALLY. No. It is an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 173, after line 12, it is proposed to insert a new title: "Title V," the War Emergency Act.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand, this is the war profits tax bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to the Senate adopting the amendment and letting it go to conference.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Mississippi very much for his agreement to accept the amendment and have it go to conference. I do not like to have him put an accent on its going to conference, however. I should like to have him accept it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator's hearing must be bad. I did not put any emphasis on its going to conference. For the information of the Senator, I will state that when the amendment goes to conference I shall fight diligently for it. I do not know whether or not I can persuade the House conferees, but I accept the amendment in good faith.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. I should prefer not to have the Senator express any doubt, before going to conference, as to his ability to convince the conferees.

Mr. President, this is a war-profits tax amendment which the Senate adopted in June, I think, by a yea-and-nay vote of 51 yeas and 28 nays. It is a bill which was prepared after many months of diligent work by a subcommittee of the Finance Committee appointed by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. The bill is the result of the labors of that subcommittee. Afterward it was in substance approved by the full Finance Committee, and it represents a scientific and well-prepared measure. I want it to go to conference, and I want the conferees to fight for it. The House conferees ought to accept it. In view of the fact that the Senate has heretofore voted on it by a yea-and-nay vote of 51 yeas and 28 nays, I shall not insist on a yea-and-nay vote at this time.

I wish to put in the RECORD a brief statement about the bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONNALLY WAR PROFITS TAX AMENDMENT

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 19.—Senator TOM CONNALLY offered as an amendment to the excess-profits tax the taxation provision of H. R. 4141, known as the Connally war-profits bill.

The amendment is operative only during a state of war declared by Congress. Upon such declaration of a state of war with a foreign government and the declaration by Congress that the existence of such state of war creates a grave national emergency, the terms of the war-tax amendment automatically come into force.

The amendment deals only with individual income taxes and corporation income taxes.

TAX RATES AND EXEMPTIONS—INDIVIDUALS

Exemption

The personal exemptions have been set at $800 and $1,600 in the case of single and married persons, respectively. In the case of dependents the credit is fixed at $250. The subcommittee fully recognizes that during a war period the cost of living may be substantially increased over peacetime. The urgent need for revenue, however, makes it advisable to place the exemption at such a point as will leave free of tax an amount that approximates the cost of the necessities of life.

Rates of tax

The proposed amendment provides for a normal tax of 10 percent and includes a schedule of surtax rates beginning with 6 percent on the first thousand dollars in excess of the exemption and $1,000, and reaching a maximum of 80 percent on surtax net income in excess of $50,000.

Individual income-tax rates vary from $40 on a $2,000 income on a married person with no dependents to $880,510 on an income of $1,000,000 on a married person with no dependents. The rates are graduated from 2 percent on a net income of $2,000 to 88.05 percent on a net income of $1,000,000.

CORPORATION TAXES

In the case of corporation taxes, the flat rate is 35 percent normal tax. The amendment also provides for an excess-profits tax in the case of corporations in which taxable income is in excess of 5 percent of the invested capital for the taxable year. A specific exemption of $3,000 to all corporations is allowed. The excess-profit rates are graduated to 60 percent of the amount of the net income in excess of 25 percent of such invested capital.

The rates carried in the amendment are designed to take the profits out of war by taxing all of the increased income created by a state of war.

Senator CONNALLY in discussing the objectives of the amendment said:

"The Senate Finance Committee, in 1936, appointed a subcommittee, of which I had the honor to be chairman, to study and report on wartime profits legislation pending before the Senate. After months of hard and exhaustive research and hearings, the amendment which I now offer was drafted.

"In its labors, the Finance Committee had the assistance of its own staff of expert tax authorities, and also consulted with and had the advice and counsel of tax experts of the Treasury.

"It is true that the amendment carries heavy rates of taxation both on incomes of individuals and on corporations. However, I believe that in time of war, when millions of our countrymen may be required to render service to the Government at trifling compensation and under circumstances involving sacrifice and personal danger, those citizens who remain at home should likewise bear heavy burdens in the form of taxation to provide the equipment, the supplies, the arms, munitions, artillery, warships, and all of the machinery to enable our armed forces to successfully wage war.

"It is my belief that the people of the United States are willing to bear heavy burdens in the national defense and for the protection of our country and its institutions.

"The public debt of the United States has been substantially increased in recent years. The present session of Congress has authorized the expenditure of about $15,000,000,000 for armaments, navies, airplanes, artillery, tanks, and all of the equipment and mechanism for equipping and arming the Nation for defense. These staggering sums must be met. The Government has no other means than taxation. It is the purpose of the bill, as nearly as possible, to provide for, during the existence of a state of war, a large part of the cost of war through current taxation.

"The Treasury Department in 1936, at the time the original amendment was prepared, estimated that the individual income-tax rate carried in the bill on the basis of income for 1928 would produce annually $7,800,000,000. No estimate at that time was available for the amount to be derived from corporation taxes.

"In short, the amendment which I offered is a real war-profits bill, operative only during a state of war, carrying heavy and high rates with a view to exacting from every citizen and every industry its contribution toward the prosecution of the war, as nearly comparable to the sacrifices to be made by those in the naval and military service as is possible under their different circumstances. The amendment has been carefully and painstakingly drawn to effectuate its purpose."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The amendment was agreed to, as follows: On page 173, after line 12, to insert:

(e) Foreign corporations—Supplement I.

(f) Individual citizens of any possession of the United States who are not otherwise citizens of the United States and who are not residents of the United States—Supplement J.

(g) Individual citizens of the United States or domestic corporations, satisfying the conditions of section 251 by reason of deriving a large portion of their gross income from sources within a possession of the United States—Supplement J.

(h) China Trade Act corporations—Supplement K.

(i) Foreign personal holding companies and their shareholders—Supplement P.

(j) Mutual investment companies—Supplement Q.

SUBTITLE B—GENERAL PROVISIONS

PART I—RATES OF TAX

SEC. 11. Normal tax on individuals.

There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual a normal tax of 10 percent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits against net income provided in section 25.

SEC. 12. Surtax on individuals.

(a) Definitions of "Surtax Net Income": As used in this section the term "surtax net income" means the amount of the net income in excess of the credits against net income provided in section 25 (b).

(b) Rates of surtax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the surtax net income of every individual a surtax as follows:

Upon a surtax net income of $1,000 there shall be no surtax; upon surtax net incomes in excess of $1,000 and not in excess of $2,000, 6 percent of such excess.

$60 upon surtax net incomes of $2,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $2,000 and not in excess of $3,000, 9 percent in addition of such excess.

$150 upon surtax net incomes of $3,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $4,000, 12 percent in addition of such excess.

$270 upon surtax net incomes of $4,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $4,000 and not in excess of $6,000, 15 percent in addition of such excess.

$570 upon surtax net incomes of $6,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $6,000 and not in excess of $8,000, 18 percent in addition of such excess.

$930 upon surtax net incomes of $8,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $8,000 and not in excess of $10,000, 21 percent in addition of such excess.

$1,350 upon surtax net incomes of $10,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $10,000 and not in excess of $14,000, 25 percent in addition of such excess.

$2,350 upon surtax net incomes of $14,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $14,000 and not in excess of $18,000, 30 percent in addition of such excess.

$3,550 upon surtax net incomes of $18,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $18,000 and not in excess of $24,000, 40 percent in addition of such excess.

$5,950 upon surtax net incomes of $24,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $24,000 and not in excess of $30,000, 50 percent in addition of such excess.

$8,950 upon surtax net incomes of $30,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $30,000 and not in excess of $40,000, 60 percent in addition of such excess.

$14,950 upon surtax net incomes of $40,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $40,000 and not in excess of $50,000, 70 percent in addition of such excess.

$21,950 upon surtax net incomes of $50,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $50,000, 80 percent in addition of such excess.

(c) Tax in case of capital gains or losses: For rate and computation of alternative tax in lieu of normal tax and surtax in the case of a capital gain or loss from the sale or exchange of capital assets held for more than 18 months, see section 117 (c).

(d) Sale of oil or gas properties: For limitation of surtax attributable to the sale of oil or gas properties, see section 105.

(e) Tax on personal holding companies: For surtax on personal holding companies, see title IA.

(f) Avoidance of surtaxes by incorporation: For surtax on corporations which accumulate surplus to avoid surtax on shareholders, see section 102.

SEC. 13. Tax on corporations in general.

(a) Definitions: For the purposes of this title—

(1) Adjusted net income: The term "adjusted net income" means the net income minus the credit provided in section 26 (a), relating to interest on certain obligations of the United States and Government corporations.

(2) Normal-tax net income: The term "normal-tax net income" means the adjusted net income minus the credit for dividends received provided in section 26 (b).

(b) Imposition of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the normal-tax net income of every corporation the normal-tax net income of which is more than $25,000 (except a corporation subject to the tax imposed by sec. 14, sec. 231 (a), Supp. G, or Supp. Q) whichever of the following taxes is the lesser:

(1) General rule: A tax of 22 percent of the normal-tax net income; or

(2) Alternative tax (corporation with normal-tax net income slightly more than $25,000): A tax of $4,025, plus 35 percent of the amount of the normal-tax net income in excess of $25,000.

(c) Exempt corporations.—

For corporations exempt from taxation under this title, see section 101.

(d) Tax on personal holding companies.—

For surtax on personal holding companies, see section 500.

(e) Improper accumulation of surplus.—

For surtax on corporations which accumulate surplus to avoid surtax on shareholders, see section 102.

SEC. 14. Tax on special classes of corporations.

(a) Imposition of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the normal-tax net income of the following corporations (in lieu of the tax imposed by sec. 13) the tax hereinafter in this section specified.

(b) Corporations with normal-tax net incomes of not more than $25,000: If the normal-tax net income of the corporation is not more than $25,000, and if the corporation does not come within one of the classes specified in subsection (c), (d), or (e) of this section, the tax shall be as follows:

Upon normal-tax net incomes not in excess of $5,000, 14½ percent.

Seven hundred and twenty-five dollars upon normal-tax net incomes of $5,000, and upon normal-tax net incomes in excess of $5,000 and not in excess of $20,000, 16 percent in addition of such excess.

Three thousand one hundred and twenty-five dollars upon normal-tax net incomes of $20,000, and upon normal-tax net incomes in excess of $20,000, 18 percent in addition of such excess.

(c) Foreign corporations.—

(1) In the case of a foreign corporation engaged in trade or business within the United States or having an office or place of business therein, the tax shall be an amount equal to 22 percent of the normal-tax net income, regardless of the amount thereof.

(2) In the case of a foreign corporation not engaged in trade or business within the United States and not having an office or place of business therein, the tax shall be as provided in section 231 (a).

(d) Insurance companies: In the case of insurance companies, the tax shall be as provided in Supplement G.

(e) Mutual investment companies: In the case of mutual investment companies, as defined in Supplement Q, the tax shall be as provided in such supplement.

(f) Exempt corporations.—

For corporations exempt from taxation under this title, see section 101.

(g) Tax on personal holding companies.—

For surtax on personal holding companies, see section 500.

(h) Improper accumulation of surplus.—

For surtax on corporations which accumulate surplus to avoid surtax on shareholders, see section 102.

PART II—COMPUTATION OF NET INCOME

SEC. 21. Net income.

(a) Definition: "Net income" means the gross income computed under section 22, less the deductions allowed by section 23.

(b) Cross references: For definition of "adjusted net income" and "normal-tax net income," see section 13.

SEC. 22. Gross income.

(a) General definition: "Gross income" includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service (including personal service as an officer or employee of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing), of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever. In the case of Presidents of the United States and judges of courts of the United States taking office after June 6, 1932, the compensation received as such shall be included in gross income; and all acts fixing the compensation of such Presidents and judges are hereby amended accordingly. In the case of judges of courts of the United States who took office on or before June 6, 1932, the compensation received as such shall be included in gross income.

(b) Exclusions from gross income: The following items shall not be included in gross income and shall be exempt from taxation under this title:

(1) Life insurance: Amounts received under a life-insurance contract paid by reason of the death of the insured, whether in a single sum or otherwise (but if such amounts are held by the insurer under an agreement to pay interest thereon, the interest payments shall be included in gross income):

(2) Annuities, etc.: Amounts received (other than amounts paid by reason of the death of the insured and interest payments on such amounts and other than amounts received as annuities) under a life insurance or endowment contract, but if such amounts (when added to amounts received before the taxable year under such contract) exceed the aggregate premiums or consideration paid (whether or not paid during the taxable year) then the excess shall be included in gross income. Amounts received as an annuity under an annuity or endowment contract shall be included in gross income; except that there shall be excluded from gross income the excess of the amount received in the taxable year over an amount equal to 3 percent of the aggregate premiums or consideration paid for such annuity (whether or not paid during such year), until the aggregate amount excluded from gross income under this title or prior income-tax laws in respect of such annuity equals the aggregate premiums or consideration paid for such annuity. In the case of a transfer for a valuable consideration, by assignment or otherwise, of a life insurance, endowment, or annuity contract, or any interest therein, only the actual value of such consideration and the amount of the premiums and other sums subsequently paid by the transferee shall be exempt from taxation under paragraph (1) or this paragraph;

(3) Gifts, bequests, and devises: The value of property acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance (but the income from such property shall be included in gross income);

(4) Tax-free interest: Interest upon (A) the obligations of a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia; or (B) obligations of a corporation organized under act of Congress, if such corporation is an instrumentality of the United States; or (C) the obligations of the United States or its possessions. Every person owning any of the obligations enumerated in clause (A), (B), or (C) shall, in the return required by this title, submit a statement showing the number and amount of such obligations owned by him and the income received therefrom, in such form and with such information as the Commissioner may require. In the case of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917 (other than postal savings certificates of deposit) and in the case of obligations of a corporation organized under act of Congress, the interest shall be exempt only if and to the extent provided in the respective acts authorizing the issue thereof as amended and supplemented, and shall be excluded from gross income only if and to the extent it is wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this title;

(5) Compensation for injuries or sickness: Amounts received, through accident or health insurance or under workmen's compensation acts, as compensation for personal injuries or sickness, plus the amount of any damages received, whether by suit or agreement, on account of such injuries or sickness.

(6) Ministers: The rental value of a dwelling house and appurtenances thereof furnished to a minister of the gospel as part of his compensation;

(7) Income exempt under treaty: Income of any kind, to the extent required by any treaty obligation of the United States;

(8) Miscellaneous items: The following items, to the extent provided in section 116:

The income of foreign governments;

Income of States, municipalities, and other political subdivisions;

Receipts of shipowners' mutual protection and indemnity associations;

Dividends from China Trade Act corporations;

Compensation of employees of foreign governments.

(9) Income from discharge of indebtedness: In the case of a corporation, the amount of any income of the taxpayer attributable to the discharge, within the taxable year, of any indebtedness of the taxpayer or for which the taxpayer is liable evidenced by a security (as hereinafter in this paragraph defined) if—

(A) it is established to the satisfaction of the Commissioner, or

(B) it is certified to the Commissioner by any Federal agency authorized to make loans on behalf of the United States to such corporation or by any Federal agency authorized to exercise regulatory power over such corporation, that at the time of such discharge the taxpayer was in an unsound financial condition, and if the taxpayer makes and files at the time of filing the return, in such manner as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, by regulations prescribes, its consent to the regulations prescribed under section 113 (b) (3) then in effect. In such case the amount of any income of the taxpayer attributable to any unamortized premium (computed as of the first day of the taxable year in which such discharge occurred) with respect to such indebtedness shall not be included in gross income and the amount of the deduction attributable to any unamortized discount (computed as of the first day of the taxable year in which such discharge occurred) with respect to such indebtedness shall not be allowed as a deduction. As used in this paragraph the term "security" means any bond, debenture, note, or certificate, or other evidence of indebtedness, issued by any corporation, in existence on June 1, 1939. This paragraph shall not apply to any discharge occurring in a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1942.

(c) Inventories: Whenever in the opinion of the Commissioner the use of inventories is necessary in order clearly to determine the income of any taxpayer, inventories shall be taken by such taxpayer upon such basis as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe as conforming as nearly as may be to the best accounting practice in the trade or business and as most clearly reflecting the income.

(d) Inventories in certain industries: (1) A taxpayer may use the following method (whether or not such method has been prescribed under subsection (c)) in inventorying goods specified in the application required under paragraph (2):

(A) Inventory them at cost;

(B) Treat those remaining on hand at the close of the taxable year as being: First, those included in the opening inventory of the taxable year (in the order of acquisition) to the extent thereof, and second, those acquired in the taxable year; and

(C) Treat those included in the opening inventory of the taxable year in which such method is first used as having been acquired at the same time and determine their cost by the average cost method.

(2) The method described in paragraph (1) may be used—

(A) Only in inventorying goods (required under subsection (c) to be inventoried) specified in an application to use such method filed at such time and in such manner as the Commissioner may prescribe; and

(B) Only if the taxpayer establishes to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that the taxpayer has used no procedure other than that specified in subparagraphs (B) and (C) of paragraph (1) in inventorying (to ascertain income, profit, or loss, for credit purposes, or for the purpose of reports to shareholders, partners, or other proprietors, or to beneficiaries) such goods for any period beginnning with or during the first taxable year for which the method described in paragraph (1) is to be used.

(3) The change to, and the use of, such method shall be in accordance with such regulations as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe as necessary in order that the use of such method may clearly reflect income.

(4) In determining income for the taxable year preceding the taxable year for which such method is first used, the closing inventory of such preceding year of the goods specified in such application shall be at cost.

(5) If a taxpayer, having complied with paragraph (2), uses the method described in paragraph (1) for any taxable year, then such method shall be used in all subsequent taxable years unless—

(A) With the approval of the Commissioner a change to a different method is authorized; or

(B) The Commissioner determines that the taxpayer has used for any period beginning with or during any subsequent taxable year some procedure other than that specified in subparagraph (B) of paragraph (1) in inventorying (for ascertaining income, profit, or loss, for credit purposes, or for the purpose of reports to shareholders, partners, or other proprietors, or to beneficiaries) the goods specified in the application, and requires a change to a method different from that prescribed in paragraph (1) beginning with such subsequent taxable year or any taxable year thereafter.

In either of the above cases, the change to, and the use of the different method shall be in accordance with such regulations as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe as necessary in order that the use of such method may clearly reflect income.

(e) Distribution by corporations: Distributions by corporations shall be taxable to the shareholders as provided in section 115.

(f) Determination of gain or loss: In the case of a sale or other disposition of property, the gain or loss shall be computed as provided in section 111.

(g) Gross income from sources within and without United States: For computation of gross income from sources within and without the United States, see section 119.

(h) Foreign personal holding companies: For provisions relating to gross income of foreign personal holding companies and of their shareholders, see section 334.

(i) Consent dividends: For inclusion in gross income of amounts specified in shareholders' consents, see section 125.

SEC. 23. Deductions from gross income.

In computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions:

(a) Expenses.—

(1) In general: All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered; traveling expenses (including the entire amount expended for meals and lodging) while away from home in the pursuit of a trade or business; and rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession, for purposes of the trade or business, of property to which the taxpayer has not taken or is not taking title or in which he has no equity.

(2) Corporate charitable contributions: No deduction shall be allowable under paragraph (1) to a corporation for any contribution or gift which would be allowable as a deduction under subsection (q) were it not for the 5-percent limitation therein contained and for the requirement therein that payment must be made within the taxable year.

(b) Interest: All interest paid or accrued within the taxable year on indebtedness, except on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry obligations (other than obligations of the United States issued after September 24, 1917, and originally subscribed for by the taxpayer) the interest upon which is wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this title.

(c) Taxes generally: Taxes paid or accrued within the taxable year, except—

(1) Federal income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes (other than the excess-profits tax imposed by title I B of this act, by section

106 of the Revenue Act of 1935, by section 602 of the Revenue Act of 1938, or by section 600 of the Internal Revenue Code);

(2) income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes imposed by the authority of any foreign country or possession of the United States; but this deduction shall be allowed in the case of a taxpayer who does not signify in his return his desire to have to any extent the benefits of section 131 (relating to credit for taxes of foreign countries and possessions of the United States);

(3) estate, inheritance, legacy, succession, and gift taxes; and

(4) taxes assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed; but this paragraph shall not exclude the allowance as a deduction of so much of such taxes as is properly allocable to maintenance or interest charges.

(d) Taxes of shareholder paid by corporation: The deduction for taxes allowed by subsection (c) shall be allowed to a corporation in the case of taxes imposed upon a shareholder of the corporation upon his interest as shareholder which are paid by the corporation without reimbursement from the shareholder, but in such cases no deduction shall be allowed the shareholder for the amount of such taxes.

(e) Losses by individuals: In the case of an individual, losses sustained during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise—

(1) if incurred in trade or business; or

(2) if incurred in any transaction entered into for profit, though not connected with the trade or business; or

(3) of property not connected with the trade or business, if the loss arises from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, or from theft. No loss shall be allowed as a deduction under this paragraph if at the time of the filing of the return such loss has been claimed as a deduction for estate tax purposes in the estate tax return.

(f) Losses by corporations: In the case of a corporation, losses sustained during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise.

(g) Capital losses:

(1) Limitation: Losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets shall be allowed only to the extent provided in section 117.

(2) Securities becoming worthless: If any securities (as defined in paragraph (3) of this subsection) become worthless during the taxable year and are capital assets, the loss resulting therefrom shall, for the purposes of this title, be considered as a loss from the sale or exchange, on the last day of such taxable year, of capital assets.

(3) Definition of securities: As used in this subsection the term "securities" means (A) shares of stock in a corporation, and (B) rights to subscribe for or to receive such shares.

(h) Wagering losses: Losses from wagering transactions shall be allowed only to the extent of the gains from such transactions.

(i) Basis for determining loss: The basis for determining the amount of deduction for losses sustained, to be allowed under subsection (e) or (f), and for bad debts, to be allowed under subsection (k), shall be the adjusted basis provided in section 113 (b) for determining the loss from the sale or other disposition of property.

(j) Loss on wash sales of stock or securities: For disallowance of loss deduction in the case of sales of stock or securities where within 30 days before or after the date of the sale the taxpayer has acquired substantially identical property, see section 118.

(k) Bad debts:

(1) General rule: Debts ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the taxable year (or, in the discretion of the Commissioner, a reasonable addition to a reserve for bad debts); and when satisfied that a debt is recoverable only in part, the Commissioner may allow such debt, in an amount not in excess of the part charged off within the taxable year, as a deduction. This paragraph shall not apply in the case of a taxpayer, other than a bank, as defined in section 104, with respect to a debt evidenced by a security as defined in paragraph (3) of this subsection.

(2) Securities becoming worthless: If any securities (as defined in paragraph (3) of this subsection) are ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the taxable year and are capital assets, the loss resulting therefrom shall, in the case of a taxpayer other than a bank, as defined in section 104, for the purposes of this title, be considered as a loss from the sale or exchange, on the last day of such taxable year, of capital assets.

(3) Definition of securities: As used in this subsection, the term "securities" means bonds, debentures, notes, or certificates, or other evidences of indebtedness, issued by any corporation (including those issued by a government or political subdivision thereof), with interest coupons or in registered form.

(l) Depreciation: A reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear, and tear of property used in the trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for obsolescence. In the case of property held by one person for life with remainder to another person, the deduction shall be computed as if the life tenant were the absolute owner of the property and shall be allowed to the life tenant. In the case of property held in trust the allowable deduction shall be apportioned between the income beneficiaries and the trustee in accordance with the pertinent provisions of the instrument creating the trust, or, in the absence of such provisions, on the basis of the trust income allocable to each.

(m) Depletion: In the case of mines, oil and gas wells, other natural deposits, and timber, a reasonable allowance for depletion and for depreciation of improvements, according to the peculiar conditions in each case; such reasonable allowance in all cases to be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary. In any case in which it is ascertained as a result of operations or of development work that the recoverable units are greater or less than the prior estimate thereof, then such prior estimate (but not the basis for depletion) shall be revised and the allowance under this subsection for subsequent taxable years shall be based upon such revised estimate. In the case of leases the deduction shall be equitably apportioned between the lessor and lessee. In the case of property held by one person for life with remainder to another person, the deduction shall be computed as if the life tenant were the absolute owner of the property and shall be allowed to the life tenant. In the case of property held in trust the allowable deduction shall be apportioned between the income beneficiaries and the trustee in accordance with the pertinent provisions of the instrument creating the trust, or, in the absence of such provisions, on the basis of the trust income allocable to each. (For percentage depletion allowable under this subsection, see section 114 (b), (3) and (4).)

(n) Basis for depreciation and depletion: The basis upon which depletion, exhaustion, wear and tear, and obsolescence are to be allowed in respect of any property shall be as provided in section 114.

(o) Charitable and other contributions: In the case of an individual, contributions or gifts payment of which is made within the taxable year to or for the use of:

(1) the United States, and State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof or the District of Columbia, or any possession of the United States, for exclusively public purposes;

(2) a corporation, trust, or community chest, fund, or foundation, created or organized in the United States or in any possession thereof or under the law of the United States or of any State or Territory or of any possession of the United States, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation;

(3) the special fund for vocational rehabilitation authorized by section 12 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924;

(4) posts or organizations of war veterans, or auxiliary units or societies of any such posts or organizations, if such posts, organizations, units, or societies are organized in the United States or any of its possessions, and if no part of their net earnings inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual; or

(5) a domestic fraternal society, order, or association, operating under the lodge system, but only if such contributions or gifts are to be used exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals; to an amount which in all the above cases combined does not exceed 15 percent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this subsection. Such contributions or gifts shall be allowable as deductions only if verified under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary. (For unlimited deduction if contributions and gifts exceed 90 percent of the net income, see section 120.)

(p) Pension trusts:

(1) General rule: An employer establishing or maintaining a pension trust to provide for the payment of reasonable pensions to his employees shall be allowed as a deduction (in addition to the contributions to such trust during the taxable year to cover the pension liability accruing during the year, allowed as a deduction under subsection (a) of this section) a reasonable amount transferred or paid into such trust during the taxable year in excess of such contributions, but only if such amount (1) has not theretofore been allowable as a deduction, and (2) is apportioned in equal parts over a period of 10 consecutive years beginning with the year in which the transfer or payment is made.

(2) Deductions under prior income tax acts: Any deduction allowable under section 23 (q) of the Revenue Act of 1928 or the Revenue Act of 1932 or the Revenue Act of 1934, or under section 23 (p) of the Revenue Act of 1936, or the Revenue Act of 1938 or the Internal Revenue Code which under such section was apportioned to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1937, shall be allowed as a deduction in the years to which so apportioned to the extent allowable under such section if it had remained in force with respect to such year.

(3) Exemption of trusts under section 165: The provisions of paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall be subject to the qualification that the deduction under either paragraph shall be allowable only with respect to a taxable year (whether the year of the transfer or payment or a subsequent year) of the employer ending within or with a taxable year of the trust with respect to which the trust is exempt from tax under section 165.

(q) Charitable and other contributions by corporations: In the case of a corporation, contributions or gifts, payment of which is made within the taxable year to or for the use of a corporation, trust, or community chest, fund, or foundation, created or organized in the United States or in any possession thereof or under the law of the United States, or of any State or Territory, or of the District of Columbia, or of any possession of the United States, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes or for the prevention of cruelty to children (but in the case of contributions or gifts to a trust, chest, fund, or foundation, only if such contributions or gifts are to be used within the United States or any of its possessions exclusively for such purposes), no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation; to an amount which does not exceed 5 percent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this subsection. Such contributions or gifts shall be allowable as deductions only if verified under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary.

(r) For deduction of dividends paid by certain banking corporations, see section 121.

(s) Net operating loss deduction: For any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1939, the net operating loss deduction computed under section 122.

SEC. 24. Items not deductible.

(a) General rule: In computing net income no deductions shall in any case be allowed in respect of—

(1) Personal, living, or family expenses;

(2) Any amount paid out for new buildings or for permanent improvements or betterments made to increase the value of any property or estate;

(3) Any amount expended in restoring property or in making good the exhaustion thereof for which an allowance is or has been made;

(4) Premiums paid on any life insurance policy covering the life of any officer or employee, or of any person financially interested in any trade or business carried on by the taxpayer, when the taxpayer is directly or indirectly a beneficiary under such policy; or

(5) Any amount otherwise allowable as a deduction which is allocable to one or more classes of income other than interest (whether or not any amount of income of that class or classes is received or accrued) wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this title.

(b) Losses from sales or exchanges of property:

(1) Losses disallowed: In computing net income no deduction shall in any case be allowed in respect of losses from sales or exchanges of property, directly or indirectly—

(A) Between members of a family, as defined in paragraph (2) (D);

(B) Except in the case of distributions in liquidation, between an individual and a corporation more than 50 percent in value of the outstanding stock of which is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for such individual;

(C) Except in the case of distributions in liquidation, between two corporations more than 50 percent in value of the outstanding stock of each of which is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for the same individual, if either one of such corporations, with respect to the taxable year of the corporation preceding the date of the sale or exchange was, under the law applicable to such taxable year, a personal holding company or a foreign personal holding company;

(D) Between a grantor and a fiduciary of any trust;

(E) Between the fiduciary of a trust and the fiduciary of another trust, if the same person is a grantor with respect to each trust; or

(F) Between a fiduciary of a trust and a beneficiary of such trust.

(2) Stock ownership, family, and partnership rule: For the purposes of determining, in applying paragraph (1), the ownership of stock—

(A) Stock owned, directly or indirectly, by or for a corporation, partnership, estate, or trust, shall be considered as being owned proportionately by or for its shareholders, partners, or beneficiaries;

(B) An individual shall be considered as owning the stock owned, directly or indirectly, by or for his family;

(C) An individual owning (otherwise than by the application of subparagraph (B)) any stock in a corporation shall be considered as owning the stock owned, directly or indirectly, by or for his partner;

(D) The family of an individual shall include only his brothers and sisters (whether by the whole or half blood), spouse, ancestors, and lineal descendants; and

(E) Constructive ownership as actual ownership: Stock constructively owned by a person by reason of the application of subparagraph (A) shall, for the purpose of applying subparagraph (A), (B), or (C), be treated as actually owned by such person, but stock constructively owned by an individual by reason of the application of subparagraph (B) or (C) shall not be treated as owned by him for the purpose of again applying either of such subparagraphs in order to make another the constructive owner of such stock.

(c) Unpaid expenses and interest: In computing net income no deduction shall be allowed under section 23 (a), relating to expenses incurred, or under section 23 (b), relating to interest accrued—

(1) If such expenses or interest are not paid within the taxable year or within 2½ months after the close thereof; and

(2) If, by reason of the method of accounting of the person to whom the payment is to be made, the amount thereof is not, unless paid, includible in the gross income of such person for the taxable year in which or with which the taxable year of the taxpayer ends; and

(3) If, at the close of the taxable year of the taxpayer or at any time within 2½ months thereafter, both the taxpayer and the person to whom the payment is to be made are persons between whom losses would be disallowed under section 24 (b).

(d) Holders of life or terminable interest: Amounts paid under the laws of any State, Territory, District of Columbia, possession of the United States, or foreign country as income to the holder of a life or terminable interest acquired by gift, bequest, or inheritance shall not be reduced or diminished by any deduction for shrinkage (by whatever name called) in the value of such interest due to the lapse of time, nor by any deduction allowed by this title (except the deductions provided for in subsections (l) and (m) of section 23) for the purpose of computing the net income of an estate or trust but not allowed under the laws of such State, Territory, District of Columbia, possession of the United States, or foreign country for the purpose of computing the income to which such holder is entitled.

(e) Tax withheld on tax-free covenant bonds: For nondeductibility of tax withheld on tax-free covenant bonds, see section 143 (a) (3).

SEC. 25. Credits of individual against net income.

(a) Credits for normal tax only: There shall be allowed for the purpose of the normal tax, but not for the surtax, the following credits against the net income:

(1) Interest on United States obligations: The amount received as interest upon obligations of the United States which is included in gross income under section 22.

(2) Interest on obligations of instrumentalities of the United States: The amount received as interest on obligations of a corporation organized under act of Congress, if (A) such corporation is an instrumentality of the United States; and (B) such interest is included in gross income under section 22; and (C) under the act authorizing the issue thereof, as amended and supplemented, such interest is exempt from normal tax.

(b) Credits for both normal tax and surtax: There shall be allowed for the purposes of the normal tax and the surtax the following credits against net income:

(1) Personal exemption: In the case of a single person, or a married person not living with husband or wife, a personal exemption of $800; or in the case of the head of a family or a married person living with husband or wife, a personal exemption of $1,600. A husband and wife living together shall receive but one personal exemption. The amount of such personal exemption shall be $1,600. If such husband and wife make separate returns, the personal exemption may be taken by either or divided between them.

(2) Credit for dependents: $250 for each person (other than husband or wife) dependent upon and receiving his chief support from the taxpayer if such dependent person is under 18 years of ago or is incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective.

(3) Change of status: If the status of the taxpayer insofar as it affects the personal exemption or credit for dependents, changes during the taxable year, the personal exemption and credit shall be apportioned, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission with the approval of the Secretary, in accordance with the number of months before and after such change. For the purpose of such apportionment a fractional part of a month shall be disregarded unless it amounts to more than half a month in which case it shall be considered as a month.

SEC. 26. Credits of corporations.

In the case of a corporation the following credits shall be allowed to the extent provided in the various sections imposing tax—

(a) Interest on obligations of the United States and its instrumentalities: The amount received as interest upon obligations of the United States or of corporations organized under act of Congress which is allowed to an individual as a credit for purposes of normal tax by section 25 (a) (1) or (2).

(b) Dividends received: 85 percent of the amount received as dividends from a domestic corporation which is subject to taxation under this title, but not in excess of 85 percent of the adjusted net income. The credit allowed by this subsection shall not be allowed in respect of dividends received from a corporation organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, or from a corporation which under section 251 is taxable only on its gross income from sources within the United States by reason of its receiving a large percentage of its gross income from sources within a possession of the United States.

(c) Dividends paid credit: For corporation dividends paid credit, see section 124.

(d) Consent dividends credit: For corporation consent dividends credit, see section 125.

PART III—CREDITS AGAINST TAX

SEC. 31. Taxes of foreign countries and possessions of United States.

The amount of income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes imposed by foreign countries or possessions of the United States shall be allowed as a credit against the tax to the extent provided in section 131.

SEC. 32. Taxes withheld at source.

The amount of tax withheld at the source under section 143 or 144 shall be allowed as a credit against the tax.

SEC. 33. Credit for overpayments.

For credit against the tax of overpayment of taxes imposed by this title for other taxable years, see section 322.

PART IV—ACCOUNTING PERIODS AND METHODS OF ACCOUNTING

SEC. 41. General rule.

The net income shall be computed upon the basis of the taxpayer's annual accounting period (fiscal year or calendar year, as the case may be) in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed in keeping the books of such taxpayer; but if no such method of accounting has been so employed, or if the method employed does not clearly reflect the income, the computation shall be made in accordance with such method as in the opinion of the Commissioner does clearly reflect the income. If the taxpayer's annual accounting period is other than a fiscal year as defined in section 48 or if the taxpayer has no annual accounting period or does not keep books, the net income shall be computed on the basis of the calendar year. (For use of inventories, see section 22 (c), (d).)

SEC. 42. Period in which items of gross income included.

The amount of all items of gross income shall be included in the gross income for the taxable year in which received by the taxpayer, unless, under methods of accounting permitted under section 41, any such amounts are to be properly accounted for as of a different period. In the case of the death of a taxpayer there shall be included in computing net income for the taxable period in which falls the date of his death, amounts accrued up to the date of his death if not otherwise properly includible in respect of such period or a prior period.

SEC. 43. Period for which deductions and credits taken.

The deductions and credits (other than the corporation dividends paid credit provided in section 124) provided for in this title shall be taken for the taxable year in which "paid or accrued" or "paid or incurred," dependent upon the method of accounting upon the basis of which the net income is computed, unless in order to clearly reflect the income the deductions or credits should be taken as of a different period. In the case of the death of a taxpayer there shall be allowed as deductions and credits for the taxable period in which falls the date of his death (except deductions under section 23 (o)) amounts accrued up to the date of his death if not otherwise properly allowable in respect of such period or a prior period.

SEC. 44. Installment basis.

(a) Dealers in personal property: Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, a person who regularly sells or otherwise disposes of personal property on the installment plan may return as income therefrom in any taxable year that proportion of the installment payments actually received in that year which the gross profit realized or to be realized when payment is completed, bears to the total contract price.

(b) Sales of realty and casual sales of personalty: In the case (1) of a casual sale or other casual disposition of personal property (other than property of a kind which would properly be included in the inventory of the taxpayer if on hand at the close of the taxable year), for a price exceeding $1,000, or (2) of a sale or other disposition of real property, if in either case the initial payments do not exceed 30 percent of the selling price (or, in case the sale or other disposition was in a taxable year beginning prior to January 1, 1934, the percentage of the selling price prescribed in the law applicable to such year), the income may, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, be returned on the basis and in the manner above prescribed in this section. As used in this section the term "initial payments" means the payments received in cash or propery other than evidences of indebtedness of the purchaser during the taxable period in which the sale or other disposition is made.

(c) Change from accrual to installment basis: If a taxpayer entitled to the benefits of subsection (a) elects for any taxable year to report his net income on the installment basis, then in computing his income for the year of change or any subsequent year, amounts actually received during any such year on account of sales or other dispositions of property made in any prior year shall not be excluded.

(d) Gain or loss upon disposition of installment obligations: If an installment obligation is satisfied at other than its face value or distributed, transmitted, sold, or otherwise disposed of, gain or loss shall result to the extent of the difference between the basis of the obligation and (1) in the case of satisfaction at other than face value or a sale or exchange—the amount realized, or (2) in case of a distribution, transmission, or disposition otherwise than by sale or exchange—the fair market value of the obligation at the time of such distribution, transmission, or disposition. Any gain or loss so resulting shall be considered as resulting from the sale or exchange of the property in respect of which the installment obligation was received. The basis of the obligation shall be the excess of the face value of the obligation over an amount equal to the income which would be returnable were the obligation satisfied in full. This subsection shall not apply to the transmission at death of installment obligations if there is filed with the Commissioner, at such time as he may by regulation prescribe, a bond in such amount and with such sureties as he may deem necessary, conditioned upon the return as income, by the person receiving any payment on such obligations, of the same proportion of such payment as would be returnable as income by the decedent if he had lived and had received such payment. If an installment obligation is distributed by one corporation to another corporation in the course of a liquidation, and under section 112 (b) (6) no gain or loss with respect to the receipt of such obligation is recognized in the case of the recipient corporation, then no gain or loss with respect to the distribution of such obligation shall be recognized in the case of the distributing corporation.

SEC. 45. Allocation of income and deductions.

In any case of two or more organizations, trades, or businesses (whether or not incorporated, whether or not organized in the United States, and whether or not affiliated) owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the same interests, the Commissioner is authorized to distribute, apportion, or allocate gross income or deductions between or among such organizations, trades, or businesses, if he determines that such distribution, apportionment, or allocation is necessary in order to prevent evasion of taxes or clearly to reflect the income of any of such organizations, trades, or businesses.

SEC. 46. Change of accounting period.

If a taxpayer changes his accounting period from fiscal year to calendar year, from calendar year to fiscal year, or from one fiscal year to another, the net income shall, with the approval of the Commissioner, be computed on the basis of such new accounting period, subject to the provisions of section 47.

SEC. 47. Returns for a period of less than 12 months.

(a) Returns for short period resulting from change of accounting period: If a taxpayer, with the approval of the Commissioner, changes the basis of computing net income from fiscal year to calendar year a separate return shall be made for the period between the close of the last fiscal year for which return was made and the following December 31. If the change is from calendar year to fiscal year, a separate return shall be made for the period between the close of the last calendar year for which return was made and the date designated as the close of the fiscal year. If the change is from one fiscal year to another fiscal year a separate return shall be made for the period between the close of the former fiscal year and the date designated as the close of the new fiscal year.

(b) Income computed on basis of short period: Where a separate return is made under subsection (a) on account of a change in the accounting period, and in all other cases where a separate return is required or permitted, by regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, to be made for a fractional part of a year, then the income shall be computed on the basis of the period for which separate return is made.

(c) Income placed on annual basis: If a separate return is made (except returns of the income of a corporation) under subsection (a) on account of a change in the accounting period, the net income, computed on the basis of the period for which separate return is made, shall be placed on an annual basis by multiplying the amount thereof by 12 and dividing by the number of months included in the period for which the separate return is made. The tax shall be such part of the tax computed on such annual basis as the number of months in such period is of 12 months.

(d) Reduction of credits against net incomes: In the case of a return made for a fractional part of a year, except a return made under subsection (a), on account of a change in the accounting period, the personal exemption and credit for dependents shall be reduced respectively to amounts which bear the same ratio to the full credits provided as the number of months in the period for which return is made bears to 12 months.

(e) Closing of taxable year in case of jeopardy: For closing of taxable year in case of jeopardy, see section 146.

SEC. 48. Taxable period embracing years with different laws.

In cases where the effective date of this act does not coincide with the beginning of the calendar year, or the fiscal year of the taxpayer, the tax for the taxable period covered by the first return under this title shall be the sum of (1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under the Revenue Act in effect immediately preceding the effective date of this act which the portion of such period covered by such preceding act is of the entire period; and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title which the portion of such period for which this act is effective is of the entire period.

SEC. 49. Definitions.

When used in this title—

(a) Taxable year: "Taxable year" means the calendar year, or the fiscal year ending during such calendar year, upon the basis of which the net income is computed under this part. "Taxable year" includes, in the case of a return made for a fractional part of a year under the provisions of this title or under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, the period for which such return is made.

(b) Fiscal year: "Fiscal year" means an accounting period of 12 months ending on the last day of any month other than December.

(c) Paid, incurred, accrued: The terms "paid or incurred" and "paid or accrued" shall be construed according to the method of accounting upon the basis of which the net income is computed under this part.

(d) Trade or business: The term "trade or business" includes the performance of the functions of a public office.

PART V—RETURNS AND PAYMENT OF TAX

SEC. 51. Individual returns.

(a) Requirement: The following individuals shall each make under oath a return stating specifically the items of his gross income and the deductions and credits allowed under this title and such other information for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title as the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may by regulations prescribe—

(1) Every individual who is single or who is married but not living with husband or wife, if having a gross income for the taxable year of $800 or over;

(2) Every individual who is married and living with husband or wife, if no joint return is made under subsection (b) and if—

(A) Such individual has for the taxable year a gross income of $1,600 or over, and the other spouse has no gross income; or

(B) Such individual and his spouse each has for the taxable year a gross income and the aggregate gross income of the two is $1,600 or over.

(b) Husband and wife: In the case of a husband and wife living together the income of each (even though one has no gross income) may be included in a single return made by them jointly, in which case the tax shall be computed on the aggregate income, and the liability with respect to the tax shall be joint and several. No joint return may be made if either the husband or wife is a nonresident alien.

(c) Persons under disability: If the taxpayer is unable to make his own return, the return shall be made by a duly authorized agent or by the guardian or other person charged with the care of the person or property of such taxpayer.

(d) Signature presumed correct: The fact that an individual's name is signed to a filed return shall be prima facie evidence for all purposes that the return was actually signed by him.

(e) Fiduciaries:

For returns to be made by fiduciaries, see section 142.

SEC. 52. Corporation returns.

Every corporation subject to taxation under this title shall make a return, stating specifically the items of its gross income and the deductions and credits allowed by this title and such other information for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title as the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may by regulations prescribe. The return shall be sworn to by the president, vice president, or other principal officer, and by the treasurer, assistant treasurer, or chief accounting officer. In cases where receivers, trustees in bankruptcy, or assignees are operating the property or business of corporations, such receivers, trustees, or assignees shall make return for such corporations in the same manner and form as corporations are required to make returns. Any tax due on the basis of such returns made by receivers, trustees, or assignees shall be collected in the same manner as if collected from the corporations of whose business or property they have custody and control.

SEC. 53. Time and place for filing returns.

(a) Time for filing:

(1) General rule: Returns made on the basis of the calendar year shall be made on or before the 15th day of March following the close of the calendar year. Returns made on the basis of a fiscal year shall be made on or before the 15th day of the third month following the close of the fiscal year.

(2) Extension of time: The Commissioner may grant a reasonable extension of time for filing returns, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe with the approval of the Secretary. Except in the case of taxpayers who are abroad, no such extension shall be for more than 6 months.

(b) To whom return made:

(1) Individuals: Returns (other than corporation returns) shall be made to the collector for the district in which is located the legal residence or principal place of business of the person making the return, or, if he has no legal residence or principal place of business in the United States, then to the collector at Baltimore, Md.

(2) Corporations: Returns of corporations shall be made to the collector of the district in which is located the principal place of business or principal office or agency of the corporation, or, if it has no principal place of business or principal office or agency in the United States, then to the collector at Baltimore, Md.

SEC. 54. Records and special returns.

(a) By taxpayer: Every person liable to any tax imposed by this title or for the collection thereof, shall keep such records, render under oath such statements, make such returns, and comply with such rules and regulations, as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may from time to time prescribe.

(b) To determine liability to tax: Whenever in the judgment of the Commissioner necessary he may require any person, by notice served upon him, to make a return, render under oath such statements, or keep such records, as the Commissioner deems sufficient to show whether or not such person is liable to tax under this title.

(c) Information at the source: For requirement of statements and returns by one person to assist in determining the tax liability of another person, see sections 147 to 150.

(d) Copies of returns: If any person, required by law or regulations made pursuant to law to file a copy of any income return for any taxable year, fails to file such copy at the time required, there shall be due and assessed against such person $5 in the case of an individual return or $10 in the case of a fiduciary, partnership, or corporation return, and the collector with whom the return is filed shall prepare such copy. Such amount shall be collected and paid, without interest, in the same manner as the amount of tax due in excess of that shown by the taxpayer upon a return in the case of a mathematical error appearing on the face of the return. Copies of returns filed or prepared pursuant to this subsection shall remain on file for a period of not less than two years from the date they are required to be filed, and may be destroyed at any time thereafter under the direction of the Commissioner.

(e) Foreign personal holding companies: For information returns by officers, directors, and large shareholders, with respect to foreign personal holding companies, see sections 338, 339, and 340.

SEC. 55. Publicity of returns.

(a) Returns made under this title shall be open to inspection in the same manner, to the same extent, and subject to the same provisions of law, including penalties, as returns made under section 55 of the Internal Revenue Code.

SEC. 56. Payment of tax.

(a) Time of payment: The total amount of tax imposed by this title shall be paid on the 15th day of March following the close of the calendar year, or, if the return should be made on the basis of a fiscal year, then on the 15th day of the third month following the close of the fiscal year.

(b) Installment payments: The taxpayer may elect to pay the tax in four equal installments, in which case the first installment shall be paid on the date prescribed for the payment of the tax by the taxpayer, the second installment shall be paid on the 15th day of the third month, the third installment on the 15th day of the sixth month, and the fourth installment on the 15th day of the ninth month, after such date. If any installment is not paid on or before the date fixed for its payment, the whole amount of the tax unpaid shall be paid upon notice and demand from the collector.

(c) Extension of time for payment.—

(1) General rule: At the request of the taxpayer, the Commissioner may extend the time for payment of the amount determined as the tax by the taxpayer, or any installment thereof, for a period not to exceed 6 months from the date prescribed for the payment of the tax or an installment thereof. In such case the amount in respect of which the extension is granted shall be paid on or before the date of the expiration of the period of the extension.

(2) Liquidation of personal holding companies: At the request of the taxpayer, the Commissioner may (under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) extend (for a period not to exceed 5 years from the date prescribed for the payment of the tax) the time for the payment of such portion of the amount determined as the tax by the taxpayer as is attributable to the short-term or long-term capital gain derived by the taxpayer from the receipt by him of property other than money upon the complete liquidation (as defined in section 115 (c)) of a corporation. This paragraph shall apply only if the corporation, for its taxable year preceding the year in which occurred the complete liquidation (or the first of the series of distributions referred to in such section), was, under the law applicable to such taxable year, a personal holding company or a foreign personal holding company. An extension under this paragraph shall be granted only if it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that the failure to grant it will result in undue hardship to the taxpayer. If an extension is granted the amount with respect to which the extension is granted shall be paid on or before the date of the expiration of the extension. If an extension is granted under this paragraph the Commissioner may require the taxpayer to furnish a bond in such amount, not exceeding double the amount with respect to which the extension is granted, and with such sureties as the Commissioner deems necessary, conditioned upon the payment of the amount with respect to which the extension is granted in accordance with the terms of the extension.

(d) Voluntary advance payment: A tax imposed by this title, or any installment thereof, may be paid, at the election of the taxpayer, prior to the date prescribed for its payment.

(e) Advance payment in case of jeopardy: For advance payment in case of jeopardy (see section 146).

(f) Tax withheld at source: For requirement of withholding tax at the source in the case of nonresident aliens and foreign corporations, and in the case of so-called "tax-free covenant bonds" (see sections 143 and 144).

(g) Fractional parts of cent: In the payment of any tax under this title a fractional part of a cent shall be disregarded unless it amounts to one-half cent or more, in which case it shall be increased to 1 cent.

(h) Receipts: Every collector to whom any payment of any income tax is made shall upon request give to the person making such payment a full written or printed receipt therefor.

SEC. 57. Examination of return and determination of tax.

As soon as practicable after the return is filed the Commissioner shall examine it and shall determine the correct amount of the tax.

SEC. 58. Additions to tax and penalties.

(a) For additions to the tax in the case of negligence or fraud in the nonpayment of tax or failure to file return therefor, see Supplement M.

(b) For criminal penalties for nonpayment of tax or failure to file return therefor, see section 145.

SEC. 59. Administrative proceedings.

For administrative proceedings in respect of the nonpayment or overpayment of a tax imposed by this title, see as follows:

(a) Supplement L, relating to assessment and collection of deficiencies.

(b) Supplement M, relating to interest and additions to tax.

(c) Supplement N, relating to claims against transferees and fiduciaries.

(d) Supplement O, relating to overpayments.

PART VI—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 61. Laws made applicable.

All administrative, special, or stamp provisions of law, including the law relating to the assessment of taxes, so far as applicable, are hereby extended to and made a part of this title.

SEC. 62. Rules and regulations.

The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe and publish all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of this title.

SEC. 63. Taxes in lieu of taxes under 1936 act.

The taxes imposed by this title shall be in lieu of the taxes imposed by chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code, or corresponding taxes imposed by acts subsequent to the Internal Revenue Code for the period for which this title shall be in effect.

SEC. 64. Short title.

This title may be cited as the "War Revenue Act."

SUBTITLE C—SUPPLEMENTAL PROVISIONS

SUPPLEMENT A—RATES OF TAX

[Supplementary to Subtitle B, Part I]

SEC. 101. Exemptions from tax on corporations.

The following organizations shall be exempt from taxation under this title—

(1) Labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations;

(2) Mutual savings banks not having a capital stock represented by shares;

(3) Fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations, (A) operating under the lodge system or for the exclusive benefit of the members of a fraternity itself operating under the lodge system; and (B) providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other bnefits to the members of such society, order, or association or their dependents;

(4) Domestic building and loan associations substantially all the business of which is confined to making loans to members; and cooperative banks without capital stock organized and operated for mutual purposes and without profit;

(5) Cemetery companies owned and operated exclusively for the benefit of their members or which are not operated for profit; and any corporation chartered solely for burial purposes as a cemetery corporation and not permitted by its charter to engage in any business not necessarily incident to that purpose, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual;

(6) Corporations, and any community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation;

(7) Business leagues, chambers of commerce, real-estate boards, or boards of trade, not organized for profit and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual;

(8) Civic leagues or organizations not organized for profit but operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare, or local associations of employees, the membership of which is limited to the employees of a designated person or persons in a particular municipality, and the net earnings of which are devoted exclusively to charitable, educational, or recreational purposes;

(9) Clubs organized and operated exclusively for pleasure, recreation, and other nonprofitable purposes, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder;

(10) Benevolent life insurance associations of a purely local character, mutual ditch or irrigation companies, mutual or cooperative telephone companies, or like organizations; but only if 85 percent or more of the income consists of amounts collected from members for the sole purpose of meeting losses and expenses;

(11) Farmers' or other mutual hail, cyclone, casualty, or fire insurance companies or associations (including interinsurers and reciprocal underwriters) the income of which is used or held for the purpose of paying losses or expenses;

(12) Farmers', fruit growers', or like associations organized and operated on a cooperative basis (a) for the purpose of marketing the products of members or other producers, and turning back to them the proceeds of sales, less the necessary marketing expenses, on the basis of either the quantity or the value of the products furnished by them, or (b) for the purpose of purchasing supplies and equipment for the use of members or other persons, and turning over such supplies and equipment to them at actual cost, plus necessary expenses. Exemption shall not be denied any such association because it has capital stock, if the dividend rate of such stock is fixed at not to exceed the legal rate of interest in the State of incorporation or 8 percent per annum, whichever is greater, on the value of the consideration for which the stock was issued, and if substantially all such stock (other than nonvoting preferred stock, the owners of which are not entitled or permitted to participate, directly or indirectly, in the profits of the association, upon dissolution or otherwise, beyond the fixed dividends) is owned by producers who market their products or purchase their supplies and equipment through the association; nor shall exemption be denied any such association because there is accumulated and maintained by it a reserve required by State law or a reasonable reserve for any necessary purpose. Such an association may market the products of nonmembers in an amount the value of which does not exceed the value of the products marketed for members, and may purchase supplies and equipment for nonmembers in an amount the value of which does not exceed the value of the supplies and equipment purchased for members, provided the value of the purchases made for persons who are neither members nor producers does not exceed 15 percent of the value of all its purchases. Business done for the United States or any of its agencies shall be disregarded in determining the right to exemption under this paragraph;

(13) Corporations organized by an association exempt under the provisions of paragraph (12), or members thereof, for the purpose of financing the ordinary crop operations of such members or other producers, and operated in conjunction with such association. Exemption shall not be denied any such corporation because it has capital stock, if the dividend rate of such stock is fixed at not to exceed the legal rate of interest in the State of incorporation or 8 percent per annum, whichever is greater, on the value of the consideration for which the stock was issued, and if substantially all such stock (other than nonvoting preferred stock, the owners of which are not entitled or permitted to participate, directly or indirectly, in the profits of the corporation, upon dissolution or otherwise, beyond the fixed dividends) is owned by such association, or members thereof; nor shall exemption be denied any such corporation because there is accumulated and maintained by it a reserve required by State law or a reasonable reserve for any necessary purpose;

(14) Corporations organized for the exclusive purpose of holding title to property, collecting income therefrom, and turning over the entire amount thereof, less expenses, to an organization which itself is exempt from the tax imposed by this title;

(15) Corporations organized under act of Congress, if such corporations are instrumentalities of the United States and if, under such act, as amended and supplemented, such corporations are exempt from Federal income taxes;

(16) Voluntary employees' beneficiary associations providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such association or their dependents, if (A) no part of their net earnings inures (other than through such payments) to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and (B) 85 percent or more of the income consists of amounts collected from members for the sole purpose of making such payments and meeting expenses;

(17) Teachers' retirement fund associations of a purely local character, if (A) no part of their net earnings inures (other than through payment of retirement benefits) to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and (B) the income consists solely of amounts received from public taxation, amounts received from assessments upon the teaching salaries of members, and income in respect of investments.

(18) Religious or apostolic associations or corporations, if such associations or corporations have a common treasury or community treasury, even if such associations or corporations engage in business for the common benefit of the members, but only if the members thereof include (at the time of filing their returns) in their gross income their entire pro rata shares, whether distributed or not, of the net income of the association or corporation for such year. Any amount so included in the gross income of a member shall be treated as a dividend received.

(19) Voluntary employees' beneficiary associations providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such association or their dependents or their designated beneficiaries, if (A) admission to membership in such association is limited to individuals who are officers or employees of the United States Government, and (B) no part of the net earnings of such association inures (other than through such payments) to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.

SEC. 102. Surtax on corporations improperly accumulating surplus.

(a) Imposition of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year (in addition to other taxes imposed by this title) upon the net income of every corporation (other than a personal holding company as defined in Title IA or a foreign personal holding company as defined in Supplement P) if such corporation, however created or organized, is formed or availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of the surtax upon its shareholders or the shareholders of any other corporation, through the medium of permitting earnings or profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed, a surtax equal to the sum of the following:

Fifty percent of the amount of the undistributed section 102 net income not in excess of $100,000, plus

Seventy percent of the undistributed section 102 net income in excess of $100,000.

(b) Prima facie evidence: The fact that any corporation is a mere holding or investment company shall be prima facie evidence of a purpose to avoid surtax upon shareholders.

(c) Evidence determinative of purpose: The fact that the earnings or profits of a corporation are permitted to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs of the business shall be determinative of the purpose to avoid surtax upon shareholders unless the corporation by the clear preponderance of the evidence shall prove to the contrary.

(d) Definitions: As used in this title—

(1) Section 102 net income: The term "section 102 net income" means the net income, computed without the net operating loss deduction provided in section 23 (s), minus the sum of—

(A) Taxes: Federal income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes paid or accrued during the taxable year, to the extent not allowed as a deduction by section 23, but not including the tax imposed by this section or a corresponding section of a prior income-tax law.

(B) Disallowed charitable, etc., contributions: Contributions or gifts, payment of which is made within the taxable year, not otherwise allowed as a deduction, to or for the use of donees described in section 23 (o), for the purposes therein specified.

(C) Disallowed losses: Losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets which are disallowed as a deduction by section 117 (d).

(2) Undistributed section 102 net income: The term "undistributed section 102 net income" means the section 102 net income minus the basic surtax credit provided in section 124 (b), but the computation of such credit under section 124 (b) (1) shall be made without its reduction by the amount of the credit provided in section 26 (a), relating to interest on certain obligations of the United States and Government corporations.

(e) Tax on personal holding companies: For surtax on personal holding companies, see Title IA.

SEC. 103. Rates of tax on citizens and corporations of certain foreign countries.

Whenever the President finds that, under the laws of any foreign country, citizens or corporations of the United States are being subjected to discriminatory or extraterritorial taxes, the President shall so proclaim and the rates of tax imposed by sections 11, 12, 13, 14, 201 (b), 204 (a), 207, 211 (a), 231, and 362 shall, for the taxable year during which such proclamation is made and for each taxable year thereafter, be doubled in the case of each citizen and corporation of such foreign country; but the tax at such doubled rate shall be considered as imposed by section 11, 12, 13, 14, 201 (b), 204 (a), 207, 211 (a), 231 or 362, as the case may be. In no case shall this section operate to increase the taxes imposed by such sections (computed without regard to this section) to an amount in excess of 80 percent of the net income of the taxpayer. Whenever the President finds that the laws of any foreign country with respect to which the President has made a proclamation under the preceding provisions of this section have been modified so that discriminatory and extraterritorial taxes applicable to citizens and corporations of the United States have been removed, he shall so proclaim, and the provisions of this section providing for doubled rates of tax shall not apply to any citizen or corporation of such foreign country with respect to any taxable year beginning after such proclamation is made.

SEC. 104. Banks and trust companies.

(a) Definition: As used in this section the term "bank" means a bank or trust company incorporated and doing business under the laws of the United States (including laws relating to the District of Columbia), of any State, or of any Territory, a substantial part of the business of which consists of receiving deposits and making loans and discounts, or of exercising fiduciary powers similar to those permitted to national banks under section 11 (k) of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, and which is subject by law to supervision and examination by State, Territorial, or Federal authority having supervision over banking institutions.

(b) Rate of tax: Banks shall be subject to tax under section 13 or section 14 (b).

SEC. 105. Sale of oil or gas properties.

In the case of a bona fide sale of any oil or gas property, or any interest therein, where the principal value of the property has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration or discovery work done by the taxpayer, the portion of the tax imposed by section 12 attributable to such sale shall not exceed 30 percent of the selling price of such property or interest.

SEC. 106. Claims against United States involving acquisition of property.

In the case of amounts (other than interest) received by a taxpayer from the United States with respect to a claim against the United States involving the acquisition of property and remaining unpaid for more than 15 years, the portion of the tax imposed by section 12 attributable to such receipt shall not exceed 30 percent of the amount (other than interest) so received.

SEC. 107. Compensation for services rendered for a period of 5 years or more.

In the case of compensation (a) received, for personal services rendered by an individual in his individual capacity, or as a member of a partnership, and covering a period of 5 calendar years or more from the beginning to the completion of such services, (b) paid (or not less than 95 percent of which is paid) only on completion of such services, and (c) required to be included in gross income of such individual for any taxable year, the tax attributable to such compensation shall not be greater than the aggregate of the taxes attributable to such compensation had it been received in equal portions in each of the years included in such period.

SUPPLEMENT B—COMPUTATION OF NET INCOME

[Supplementary to subtitle B, part II]

SEC. 111. Determination of amount of, and recognition of, gain or loss.

(a) Computation of gain or loss: The gain from the sale or other disposition of property shall be the excess of the amount realized therefrom over the adjusted basis provided in section 113 (b) for determining gain, and the loss shall be the excess of the adjusted basis provided in such section for determining loss over the amount realized.

(b) Amount realized: The amount realized from the sale or other disposition of property shall be the sum of any money received, plus the fair market value of the property (other than money) received.

(c) Recognition of gain or loss: In the case of a sale or exchange, the extent to which the gain or loss determined under this section shall be recognized for the purposes of this title shall be determined under the provisions of section 112.

(d) Installment sales: Nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent (in the case of property sold under contract providing for payment in installments) the taxation of that portion of any installment payment representing gain or profit in the year in which such payment is received.

SEC. 112. Recognition of gain or loss.

(a) General rule: Upon the sale or exchange of property the entire amount of the gain or loss, determined under section 111, shall be recognized, except as hereinafter provided in this section.

(b) Exchanges solely in kind:

(1) Property held for productive use or investment: No gain or loss shall be recognized if property held for productive use in trade or business or for investment (not including stock in trade or other property held primarily for sale, nor stocks, bonds, notes, choses in action, certificates of trust or beneficial interest, or other securities or evidences of indebtedness or interest) is exchanged solely for property of a like kind to be held either for productive use in trade or business or for investment.

(2) Stock for stock of same corporation: No gain or loss shall be recognized if common stock in a corporation is exchanged solely for common stock in the same corporation, or if preferred stock in a corporation is exchanged solely for preferred stock in the same corporation.

(3) Stock for stock on reorganization: No gain or loss shall be recognized if stock or securities in a corporation a party to a reorganization are, in pursuance of the plan of reorganization, exchanged solely for stock or securities in such corporation or in another corporation a party to the reorganization.

(4) Same—gain of corporation: No gain or loss shall be recognized if a corporation a party to a reorganization exchanges property, in pursuance of the plan of reorganization, solely for stock or securities in another corporation a party to the reorganization.

(5) Transfer to corporation controlled by transferor: No gain or loss shall be recognized if property is transferred to a corporation by one or more persons solely in exchange for stock or securities in such corporation, and immediately after the exchange such person or persons are in control of the corporation; but in the case of an exchange by two or more persons this paragraph shall apply only if the amount of the stock and securities received by each is substantially in proportion to his interest in the property prior to the exchange. Where the transferee assumes a liability of a transferor, or where the property of a transferor is transferred subject to a liability, then for the purpose only of determining whether the amount of stock or securities received by each of the transferors is in the proportion required by this paragraph, the amount of such liability (if under subsection (k) it is not to be considered as "other property or money") shall be considered as stock or securities received by such transferor.

(6) Property received by corporation on complete liquidation of another: No gain or loss shall be recognized upon the receipt by a corporation of property distributed in complete liquidation of another corporation. For the purposes of this paragraph a distribution shall be considered to be in complete liquidation only if—

(A) the corporation receiving such property was, on the date of the adoption of the plan of liquidation, and has continued to be at all times until the receipt of the property, the owner of stock (in such other corporation) possessing at least 80 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote and the owner of at least 80 percent of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock (except nonvoting stock which is limited and preferred as to dividends) and was at no time on or after the date of the adoption of the plan of liquidation and until the receipt of the property the owner of a greater percentage of any class of stock than the percentage of such class owned at the time of the receipt of the property; and

(B) no distribution under the liquidation was made before the first day of the first taxable year of the corporation beginning after December 31, 1935; and either

(C) the distribution is by such other corporation in complete cancelation or redemption of all its stock, and the transfer of all the property occurs within the taxable year; in such case the adoption by the shareholders of the resolution under which is authorized the distribution of all the assets of such corporation in complete cancelation or redemption of all its stock, shall be considered an adoption of a plan of liquidation, even though no time for the completion of the transfer of the property is specified in such resolution; or

(D) such distribution is one of a series of distribution by such other corporation in complete cancelation or redemption of all its stock in accordance with a plan of liquidation under which the transfer of all the property under the liquidation is to be completed within 3 years from the close of the taxable year during which is made the first of the series of distributions under the plan, except that if such transfer is not completed within such period, or if the taxpayer does not continue qualified under subparagraph (A) until the completion of such transfer, no distribution under the plan shall be considered a distribution in complete liquidation.

If such transfer of all the property does not occur within the taxable year the Commissioner may require of the taxpayer such bond, or waiver of the statute of limitations on assessment and collection, or both, as he may deem necessary to insure, if the transfer of the property is not completed within such 3-year period, or if the taxpayer does not continue qualified under subparagraph (A) until the completion of such transfer, the assessment and collection of all income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes then imposed by law for such taxable year or subsequent taxable years, to the extent attributable to property so received. A distribution otherwise constituting a distribution in complete liquidation within the meaning of this paragraph shall not be considered as not constituting such a distribution merely because it does not constitute a distribution or liquidation within the meaning of the corporate law under which the distribution is made; and for the purposes of this paragraph a transfer of property of such other corporation to the taxpayer shall not be considered as not constituting a distribution (or one of a series of distributions) in complete cancelation or redemption of all the stock of such other corporation, merely because the carrying out of the plan involves (i) the transfer under the plan to the taxpayer by such other corporation of property, not attributable to shares owned by the taxpayer, upon an exchange described in paragraph (4) of this subsection, and (ii) the complete cancelation or redemption under the plan, as a result of exchanges described in paragraph (3) of this subsection, of the shares not owned by the taxpayer.

(7) Exchanges and distributions in obedience to orders of Securities and Exchange Commission: In the case of any exchange or distribution described in section 371, no gain or loss shall be recognized to the extent specified in such section with respect to such exchange or distribution.

(c) Gain from exchanges not solely in kind.—

(1) If an exchange would be within the provisions of subsection (b) (1), (2), (3), or (5) of this section if it were not for the fact that the property received in exchange consists not only of property permitted by such paragraph to be received without the recognition of gain, but also of other property or money, then the gain, if any, to the recipient shall be recognized, but in an amount not in excess of the sum of such money and the fair market value of such other property.

(2) If a distribution made in pursuance of a plan of reorganization is within the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection but has the effect of the distribution of a taxable dividend, then there shall be taxed as a dividend to each distributee such an amount of the gain recognized under paragraph (1) as is not in excess of his ratable share of the undistributed earnings and profits of the corporation accumulated after February 28, 1913. The remainder, if any, of the gain recognized under paragraph (1) shall be taxed as a gain from the exchange of property.

(d) Same—gain of corporation: If an exchange would be within the provisions of subsection (b) (4) of this section if it were not for the fact that the property received in exchange consists not only of stock or securities permitted by such paragraph to be received without the recognition of gain, but also of other property or money, then—

(1) If the corporation receiving such other property or money distributes it in pursuance of the plan of reorganization, no gain to the corporation shall be recognized from the exchange, but

(2) If the corporation receiving such other property or money does not distribute it in pursuance of the plan of reorganization, the gain, if any, to the corporation shall be recognized, but in an amount not in excess of the sum of such money and the fair market value of such other property so received, which is not so distributed.

(e) Loss from exchanges not solely in kind: If an exchange would be within the provisions of subsection (b) (1) to (5), inclusive, of this section if it were not for the fact that the property received in exchange consists not only of property permitted by such paragraph to be received without the recognition of gain or loss, but also of other property or money, then no loss from the exchange shall be recognized.

(f) Involuntary conversions: If property (as a result of its destruction in whole or in part, theft or seizure, or an exercise of the power of requisition or condemnation, or the threat or imminence thereof) is compulsorily or involuntarily converted into property similar or related in service or use to the property so converted, or into money which is forthwith in good faith, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, expended in the acquisition of other property similar or related in service or use to the property so converted, or in the acquisition of control of a corporation owning such other property, or in the establishment of a replacement fund, no gain or loss shall be recognized. If any part of the money is not so expended, the gain, if any, shall be recognized, but in an amount not in excess of the money which is not so expended.

(g) Definition of reorganization: As used in this section and section 113—

(1) The term "reorganization" means (A) a statutory merger or consolidation, or (B) the acquisition by one corporation, in exchange solely for all or a part of its voting stock, of at least 80 percent of the voting stock and at least 80 percent of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock of another corporation, or (C) the acquisition by one corporation, in exchange solely for all or a part of its voting stock, of substantially all the properties of another corporation, but in determining whether the exchange is solely for voting stock the assumption by the acquiring corporation of a liability of the other, or the fact that property acquired is subject to a liability, shall be disregarded, or (D) a transfer by a corporation of all or a part of its assets to another corporation if immediately after the transfer the transferor or its shareholders or both are in control of the corporation to which the assets are transferred, or (E) a recapitalization, or (F) a mere change in identity, form, or place of organization, however effected.

(2) The term "a party to a reorganization" includes a corporation resulting from a reorganization and includes both corporations in the case of a reorganization resulting from the acquisition by one corporation of stock or properties of another.

(h) Definition of control: As used in this section the term "control" means the ownership of stock possessing at least 80 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote and at least 80 percent of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock in the corporation.

(i) Foreign corporations: In determining the extent to which gain shall be recognized in the case of any of the exchanges described in subsection (b) (3), (4), (5), or (6), or described in so much of subsection (c) as refers to subsection (b) (3) or (5), or described in subsection (d), a foreign corporation shall not be considered as a corporation unless, prior to such exchange, it has been established to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that such exchange is not in pursuance of a plan having as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of Federal income taxes.

(j) Installment obligations: For nonrecognition of gain or loss in the case of installment obligations, see section 44 (d).

(k) Assumption of liability not recognized: Where upon an exchange the taxpayer receives as part of the consideration property which would be permitted by subsection (b) (4) or (5) of this section to be received without the recognition of gain if it were the sole consideration, and as part of the consideration another party to the exchange assumes a liability of the taxpayer or acquires from the taxpayer property subject to a liability, such assumption or acquisition shall not be considered as "other property or money" received by the taxpayer within the meaning of subsections (c), (d), or (e) of this section and shall not prevent the exchange from being within the provisions of subsection (b) (4) or (5); except that if, taking into consideration the nature of the liability and the circumstances in the light of which the arrangement for the assumption or acquisition was made, it appears that the principal purpose of the taxpayer with respect to the assumption or acquisition was a purpose to avoid Federal income tax on the exchange, or, if not such purpose, was not a bona fide business purpose, such assumption or acquisition (in the amount of the liability) shall, for the purposes of this section, be considered as money received by the taxpayer upon the exchange. In any suit or proceeding where the burden is on the taxpayer to prove that such assumption or acquisition is not to be considered as money received by the taxpayer, such burden shall not be considered as sustained unless the taxpayer sustains such burden by the clear preponderance of the evidence.

SEC. 113. Adjusted basis for determining gain or loss.

(a) Basis (unadjusted) of property: The basis of property shall be the cost of such property; except that—

(1) Inventory value: If the property should have been included in the last inventory, the basis shall be the last inventory value thereof.

(2) Gifts after December 31, 1920: If the property was acquired by gift after December 31, 1920, the basis shall be the same as it would be in the hands of the donor or the last preceding owner by whom it was not acquired by gift, except that for the purpose of determining loss the basis shall be the basis so determined or the fair market value of the property at the time of the gift, whichever is lower. If the facts necessary to determine the basis in the hands of the donor or the last preceding owner are unknown to the donee, the Commissioner shall, if possible, obtain such facts from such donor or last preceding owner, or any other person cognizant thereof. If the Commissioner finds it impossible to obtain such facts, the basis in the hands of such donor or last preceding owner shall be the fair market value of such property as found by the Commissioner as of the date or approximate date at which, according to the best information that the Commissioner is able to obtain, such property was acquired by such donor or last preceding owner.

(3) Transfer in trust after December 31, 1920: If the property was acquired after December 31, 1920, by a transfer in trust (other than by a transfer in trust by a bequest or devise) the basis shall be the same as it would be in the hands of the grantor, increased in the amount of gain or decreased in the amount of loss recognized to the grantor upon such transfer under the law applicable to the year in which the transfer was made.

(4) Gift or transfer in trust before January 1, 1921: If the property was acquired by gift or transfer in trust on or before December 31, 1920, the basis shall be the fair market value of such property at the time of such acquisition.

(5) Property transmitted at death: If the property was acquired by bequest, devise, or inheritance, or by the decedent's estate from the decedent, the basis shall be the fair market value of such property at the time of such acquisition. In the case of property transferred in trust to pay the income for life to or upon the order or direction of the grantor, with the right reserved to the grantor at all times prior to his death to revoke the trust, the basis of such property in the hands of the persons entitled under the terms of the trust instrument to the property after the grantor's death shall, after such death, be the same as if the trust instrument had been a will executed on the day of the grantor's death. For the purpose of this paragraph property passing without full and adequate consideration under a general power of appointment exercised by will shall be deemed to be property passing from the individual exercising such power by bequest or devise. If the property was acquired by bequest, devise, or inheritance, or by the decedent's estate from the decedent, and if the decedent died after August 26, 1937, and if the property consists of stock or securities of a foreign corporation, which with respect to its taxable year next preceding the date of the decedent's death was, under the law applicable to such year, a foreign personal holding company, then the basis shall be the fair market value of such property at the time of such acquisition or the basis in the hands of the decedent, whichever is lower.

(6) Tax-free exchanges generally: If the property was acquired, after February 28, 1913, upon an exchange described in section 112 (b) to (e), inclusive, the basis (except as provided in paragraphs (15), (17), or (18) of this subsection) shall be the same as in the case of the property exchanged, decreased in the amount of any money received by the taxpayer and increased in the amount of gain or decreased in the amount of loss to the taxpayer that was recognized upon such exchange under the law applicable to the year in which the exchange was made. If the property so acquired consisted in part of the type of property permitted by section 112 (b) to be received without the recognition of gain or loss, and in part of other property, the basis provided in this paragraph shall be allocated between the properties (other than money) received, and for the purpose of the allocation there shall be assigned to such other property an amount equivalent to its fair market value at the date of the exchange. Where as part of the consideration to the taxpayer another party to the exchange assumed a liability of the taxpayer or acquired from the taxpayer property subject to a liability, such assumption or acquisition (in the amount of the liability) shall, for the purposes of this paragraph, be considered as money received by the taxpayer upon the exchange. This paragraph shall not apply to property acquired by a corporation by the issuance of its stock or securities as the consideration in whole or in part for the transfer of the property to it.

(7) Transfers to corporation: If the property was acquired—

(A) after December 31, 1917, and in a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1936, by a corporation in connection with a reorganization, and immediately after the transfer an interest or control in such property of 50 percent or more remained in the same persons or any of them, or

(B) in a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1935, by a corporation in connection with a reorganization, then the basis shall be the same as it would be in the hands of the transferor, increased in the amount of gain or decreased in the amount of loss recognized to the transferor upon such transfer under the law applicable to the year in which the transfer was made. This paragraph shall not apply if the property acquired consists of stock or securities in a corporation a party to the reorganization, unless acquired by the issuance of stock or securities of the transferee as the consideration in whole or in part for the transfer.

(8) Property acquired by issuance of stock or as paid-in surplus: If the property was acquired after December 31, 1920, by a corporation—

(A) by the issuance of its stock or securities in connection with a transaction described in section 112 (b) (5) (including, also, cases where part of the consideration for the transfer of such property to the corporation was property or money, in addition to such stock or securities), or

(B) as paid-in surplus or as a contribution to capital,

then the basis shall be the same as it would be in the hands of the transferor, increased in the amount of gain or decreased in the amount of loss recognized to the transferor upon such transfer under the law applicable to the year in which the transfer was made.

(9) Involuntary conversion: If the property was acquired, after February 28, 1913, as the result of a compulsory or involuntary conversion described in section 112 (f), the basis shall be the same as in the case of the property so converted, decreased in the amount of any money received by the taxpayer which was not expended in accordance with the provisions of law (applicable to the year in which such conversion was made) determining the taxable status of the gain or loss upon such conversion, and increased in the amount of gain or decreased in the amount of loss to the taxpayer recognized upon such conversion under the law applicable to the year in which such conversion was made.

(10) Wash sales of stock: If the property consists of stock or securities the acquisition of which (or the contract or option to acquire which) resulted in the nondeductibility (under section 118 of this title or corresponding provisions of prior income tax laws, relating to wash sales) of the loss from the sale or other disposition of substantially identical stock or securities, then the basis shall be the basis of the stock or securities so sold or disposed of, increased or decreased, as the case may be, by the difference, if any, between the price at which the property was acquired and the price at which such substantially identical stock or securities were sold or otherwise disposed of.

(11) Property acquired during affiliation: In the case of property acquired by a corporation, during a period of affiliation, from a corporation with which it was affiliated, the basis of such property, after such period of affiliation, shall be determined, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, without regard to inter-company transactions in respect of which gain or loss was not recognized. For the purposes of this paragraph, the term "period of affiliation" means the period during which such corporations were affiliated (determined in accordance with the law applicable thereto) but does not include any taxable year beginning on or after January 1, 1922, unless a consolidated return was made, nor any taxable year after the taxable year 1928. The basis in case of property acquired by a corporation during any period, in the taxable year 1929 or any subsequent taxable year, in respect of which a consolidated return is made by such corporation under section 141 of this title or the Revenue Act of 1928, 45 Stat. 831, or the Revenue Act of 1932, 47 Stat. 213, or the Revenue Act of 1934, 48 Stat. 720, or the Revenue Act of 1936, 49 Stat. 1698, or the Revenue Act of 1938 or the Internal Revenue Code, shall be determined in accordance with regulations prescribed under section 141 (b) of this title or the Revenue Act of 1928 or the Revenue Act of 1932 or the Revenue Act of 1934 or the Revenue Act of 1936 or the Revenue Act of 1938 or the Internal Revenue Code. The basis in the case of property held by a corporation during any period, in the taxable year 1929 or any subsequent taxable year, in respect of which a consolidated return is made by such corporation under section 141 of this title or the Revenue Act of 1928 or the Revenue Act of 1932 or the Revenue Act of 1934 or the Revenue Act of 1936 or the Revenue Act of 1938 or the Internal Revenue Code, shall be adjusted in respect of any items relating to such period, in accordance with regulations prescribed under section 141 (b) of this title or the Revenue Act of 1928 or the Revenue Act of 1932 or the Revenue Act of 1934 or the Revenue Act of 1936 or the Revenue Act of 1938, or the Internal Revenue Code, applicable to such period.

(12) Basis established by Revenue Act of 1932: If the property was acquired, after February 28, 1913, in any taxable year beginning prior to January 1, 1934, and the basis thereof, for the purposes of the Revenue Act of 1932 (47 Stat. 199), was prescribed by section 113 (a) (6), (7), or (9) of such act, then for the purposes of this title the basis shall be the same as the basis therein prescribed in the Revenue Act of 1932.

(13) Partnerships: If the property was acquired after February 28, 1913, by a partnership and the basis is not otherwise determined under any other paragraph of this subsection, then the basis shall be the same as it would be in the hands of the transferor, increased in the amount of gain or decreased in the amount of loss recognized to the transferor upon such transfer under the law applicable to the year in which the transfer was made. If the property was distributed in kind by a partnership to any partner, the basis of such property in the hands of the partner shall be such part of the basis in his hands of his partnership interest as is properly allocable to such property.

(14) Property acquired before March 1, 1913: In the case of property acquired before March 1, 1913, if the basis otherwise determined under this subsection, adjusted (for the period prior to March 1, 1913) as provided in subsection (b), is less than the fair market value of the property as of March 1, 1913, then the basis for determining gain shall be such fair market value. In determining the fair market value of stock in a corporation as of March 1, 1913, due regard shall be given to the fair market value of the assets of the corporation as of that date.

(15) Property received by a corporation on complete liquidation of another: If the property was received by a corporation upon a distribution in complete liquidation of another corporation within the meaning of section 112 (b) (6), then the basis shall be the same as it would be in the hands of the transferor. The basis of property with respect to which election has been made in pursuance of the last sentence of section 113 (a) (15) of the Revenue Act of 1936, as amended, shall, in the hands of the corporation making such election, be the basis prescribed in the Revenue Act of 1934, as amended.

(16) Basis established by Revenue Act of 1934: If the property was acquired, after February 28, 1913, in any taxable year beginning prior to January 1, 1936, and the basis thereof, for the purposes of the Revenue Act of 1934, was prescribed by section 113 (a) (6), (7), or (8) of such act, then for the purposes of this title the basis shall be the same as the basis therein prescribed in the Revenue Act of 1934.

(17) Property acquired in connection with exchanges and distributions in obedience to certain orders of Securities and Exchange Commission: If the property was acquired in any manner described in section 372, the basis shall be that prescribed in such section with respect to such property.

(18) Property received in certain corporate liquidations: If the property was acquired by a shareholder in the liquidation of a corporation in cancelation or redemption of stock with respect to which gain was realized, but with respect to which, as the result of an election made by him under paragraph (7) of section 112 (b), of the Revenue Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 487), the extent to which gain was recognized was determined under such paragraph, then the basis shall be the same as the basis of such stock canceled or redeemed in the liquidation, decreased in the amount of any money received by him, and increased in the amount of gain recognized to him.

(19) (A) If the property was acquired by a shareholder in a corporation and consists of stock in such corporation, or rights to acquire such stock, acquired by him after February 28, 1913, in a distribution by such corporation (hereinafter in this paragraph called "new stock"), or consists of stock in respect of which such distribution was made (hereinafter in this paragraph called "old stock"); and

(i) the new stock was acquired in a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1936; or

(ii) the new stock was acquired in a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1935, and its distribution did not constitute income to the shareholder within the meaning of the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution;

then the basis of the new stock and of the old stock, respectively, shall, in the shareholder's hands, be determined by allocating between the old stock and the new stock the adjusted basis of the old stock; such allocation to be made under regulations which shall be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

(B) Where the new stock consisted of rights to acquire stock and such rights were sold in a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1939, and there was included in the gross income for such year the entire amount of the proceeds of such sale, then, if before the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1939 the taxpayer has not asserted (by claim for a refund or credit or otherwise) that any part of the proceeds of the sale of such new stock should be excluded from gross income for the year of its sale, the basis of the old stock shall be determined without regard to subparagraph (A); and no part of the proceeds of the sale of such new stock shall ever be excluded from the gross income of the year of such sale.

(C) Subparagraph (A) shall not apply if the new stock was acquired in a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1936, and there was included, as a dividend, in gross income for such year an amount on account of such stock, and after such inclusion such amount was not (before the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1939) excluded from gross income for such year.

(D) Subparagraph (A) shall not apply if the new stock or the old stock was sold or otherwise disposed of in a taxable year beginning prior to January 1, 1936, and the basis (determined by a decision of a court or the Board of Tax Appeals, or a closing agreement, and the decision or agreement became final before the ninetieth day after the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1939) for determining gain or loss on such sale or other disposition was ascertained by a method other than that of allocation of the basis of the old stock.

(b) Adjusted basis: The adjusted basis for determining the gain or loss from the sale or other disposition of property, whenever acquired, shall be the basis determined under subsection (a), adjusted as hereinafter provided.

(1) General rule: Proper adjustment in respect of the property shall in all cases be made—

(A) for expenditures, receipts, losses, or other items, properly chargeable to capital account, including taxes and other carrying charges on unimproved and unproductive real property, but no such adjustment shall be made for taxes or other carrying charges for which deductions have been taken by the taxpayer in determining net income for the taxable year or prior taxable years;

(B) in respect of any period since February 28, 1913, for exhaustion, wear and tear, obsolescence, amortization, and depletion, to the extent allowed (but not less than the amount allowable) under this title or prior income tax laws. Where for any taxable year prior to the taxable year 1932 the depletion allowance was based on discovery value or a percentage of income, then the adjustment for depletion for such year shall be based on the depletion which would have been allowable for such year if computed without reference to discovery value or a percentage of income;

(C) in respect of any period prior to March 1, 1913, for exhaustion, wear and tear, obsolescence, amortization, and depletion, to the extent sustained;

(D) in the case of stock (to the extent not provided for in the foregoing subparagraphs) for the amount of distributions previously made which, under the law applicable to the year in which the distribution was made, either were tax-free or were applicable in reduction of basis (not including distributions made by a corporation, which was classified as a personal service corporation under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1918, Feb. 24, 1919, c. 18, 40 Stat. 1057, or the Revenue Act of 1921, Nov. 23, 1921, c. 136, 42 Stat. 227, out of its earnings or profits which were taxable in accordance with the provisions of section 218 of the Revenue Act of 1918 or 1921);

(E) to the extent provided in section 337 (f) in the case of the stock of United States shareholders in a foreign personal holding company; and

(F) to the extent provided in section 28 (h) in the case of amounts specified in a shareholder's consent made under section 28.

(G) in the case of property pledged to the Commodity Credit Corporation, to the extent of the amount received as a loan from the Commodity Credit Corporation and treated by the taxpayer as income for the year in which received pursuant to section 123 of this title, and to the extent of any deficiency on such loan with respect to which the taxpayer has been relieved from liability.

(2) Substituted basis: The term "substituted basis" as used in this subsection means a basis determined under any provision of subsection (a) of this section or under any corresponding provision of a prior income-tax law, providing that the basis shall be determined—

(A) by reference to the basis in the hands of a transferor, donor, or grantor, or

(B) by reference to other property held at any time by the person for whom the basis is to be determined.

Whenever it appears that the basis of property in the hands of the taxpayer is a substituted basis, then the adjustments provided in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be made after first making in respect of such substituted basis proper adjustments of a similar nature in respect of the period during which the property was held by the transferor, donor, or grantor, or during which the other property was held by the person for whom the basis is to be determined. A similar rule shall be applied in the case of a series of substituted bases.

(3) Discharge of indebtedness: Where in the case of a corporation any amount is excluded from gross income under section 22 (b) (9) on account of the discharge of indebtedness the whole or a part of the amount so excluded from gross income shall be applied in reduction of the basis of any property held (whether before or after the time of the discharge) by the taxpayer during any portion of the taxable year in which such discharge occurred. The amount to be so applied (not in excess of the amount so excluded from gross income, reduced by the amount of any deduction disallowed under section 22 (b) (9)) and the particular properties to which the reduction shall be allocated, shall be determined under regulations (prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) in effect at the time of the filing of the consent by the taxpayer referred to in section 22 (b) (9). The reduction shall be made as of the first day of the taxable year in which the discharge occurred except in the case of property not held by the taxpayer on such first day, in which case it shall take effect as of the time the holding of the taxpayer began.

SEC. 114. Basis for depreciation and depletion.

(a) Basis for depreciation: The basis upon which exhaustion, wear and tear, and obsolescence are to be allowed in respect of any property shall be the adjusted basis provided in section 113 (b) for the purpose of determining the gain upon the sale or other disposition of such property.

(b) Basis for depletion.—

(1) General rule: The basis upon which depletion is to be allowed in respect of any property shall be the adjusted basis provided in section 113 (b) for the purpose of determining the gain upon the sale or other disposition of such property, except as provided in paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of this subsection.

(2) Discovery value in case of mines: In the case of mines (other than metal, coal, or sulphur mines) discovered by the taxpayer after February 28, 1913, the basis for depletion shall be the fair market value of the property at the date of discovery or within 30 days thereafter, if such mines were not acquired as the result of purchase of a proven tract or lease, and if the fair market value of the property is materially disproportionate to the cost. The depletion allowance under section 23 (n) based on discovery value provided in this paragraph shall not exceed 50 percent of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property upon which the discovery was made, except that in no case shall the depletion allowance under section 23 (n) be less than it would be if computed without reference to discovery value. Discoveries shall include minerals in commercial quantities contained within a vein or deposit discovered in an existing mine or mining tract by the taxpayer after February 28, 1913, if the vein or deposit thus discovered was not merely the uninterrupted extension of a continuing commercial vein or deposit already known to exist, and if the discovered minerals are of sufficient value and quantity that they could be separately mined and marketed at a profit.

(3) Percentage depletion for oil and gas wells: In the case of oil and gas wells the allowance for depletion under section 23 (n) shall be 27½ percent of the gross income from the property during the taxable year, excluding from such gross income an amount equal to any rents or royalties paid or incurred by the taxpayer in respect of the property. Such allowance shall not exceed 50 percent of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property, except that in no case shall the depletion allowance under section 23 (n) be less than it would be if computed without reference to this paragraph.

(4) Percentage depletion for coal and metal mines and sulphur: The allowance for depletion under section 23 (n) shall be, in the case of coal mines, 5 percent, in the case of metal mines 15 percent, and in the case of sulphur mines or deposits 23 percent of the gross income from the property during the taxable year, excluding from such gross income an amount equal to any rents or royalties paid or incurred by the taxpayer in respect of the property. Such allowance shall not exceed 50 percent of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property. A taxpayer making his first return under this title in respect of a property shall state whether he elects to have the depletion allowance for such property for the taxable year for which the return is made computed with or without regard to percentage depletion, and the depletion allowance in respect of such property for such year shall be computed according to the election thus made. If the taxpayer fails to make such statement in the return, the depletion allowance for such property for such year shall be computed without reference to percentage depletion. The method, determined as above, of computing the depletion allowance shall be applied in the case of the property for all taxable years in which it is in the hands of such taxpayer, or of any other person if the basis of the property (for determining gain) in his hands is, under section 113, determined by reference to the basis in the hands of such taxpayer, either directly or through one or more substituted bases, as defined in that section. The above right of election shall be subject to the qualification that this paragraph shall, for the purpose of determining whether the method of computing the depletion allowance follows the property, be considered a continuation of section 114 (b) (4) of the Revenue Act of 1934, the Revenue Act of 1936, the Revenue Act of 1938, and the Internal Revenue Code, and as giving no new election in cases where such section would, if applied, give no new election.

SEC. 115. Distributions by corporations.

(a) Definition of dividend: The term "dividend" when used in this title (except in section 203 (a) (3) and section 207 (c) (1), relating to insurance companies) means any distribution made by a corporation to its shareholders, whether in money or in other property, (1) out of its earnings or profits accumulated after February 28, 1913, or (2) out of the earnings or profits of the taxable year (computed as of the close of the taxable year without diminution by reason of any distributions made during the taxable year), without regard to the amount of the earnings and profits at the time the distribution was made.

(b) Source of distributions: For the purposes of this title every distribution is made out of earnings or profits to the extent thereof, and from the most recently accumulated earnings or profits. Any earnings or profits accumulated, or increase in value of property accrued, before March 1, 1913, may be distributed exempt from tax, after the earnings and profits accumulated after February 28, 1913, have been distributed, but any such tax-free distribution shall be applied against and reduce the adjusted basis of the stock provided in section 113.

(c) Distributions in liquidation: Amounts distributed in complete liquidation of a corporation shall be treated as in full payment in exchange for the stock, and amounts distributed in partial liquidation of a corporation shall be treated as in part or full payment in exchange for the stock. The gain or loss to the distributee resulting from such exchange shall be determined under section 111, but shall be recognized only to the extent provided in section 112. Despite the provisions of section 117, the gain so recognized shall be considered as a short-term capital gain, except in the case of amounts distributed in complete liquidation. For the purpose of the preceding sentence, "complete liquidation" includes any one of a series of distributions made by a corporation in complete cancellation or redemption of all of its stock in accordance with a bona fide plan of liquidation and under which the transfer of the property under the liquidation is to be completed within a time specified in the plan, not exceeding, from the close of the taxable year during which is made the first of the series of distributions under the plan, (1) three years, if the first of such series of distributions is made in a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1937, or (2) 2 years, if the first of such series of distributions was made in a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1938. In the case of amounts distributed (whether before January 1, 1939, or on or after such date) in partial liquidation (other than a distribution to which the provisions of subsection (h) of this section are applicable) the part of such distribution which is properly chargeable to capital account shall not be considered a distribution of earnings or profits. If any distribution in complete liquidation (including any one of a series of distributions made by the corporation in complete cancelation or redemption of all its stock) is made by a foreign corporation which with respect to any taxable year beginning on or before, and ending after, August 26, 1937, was a foreign personal holding company, and with respect to which a United States group (as defined in sec. 331 (a) (2)) existed after August 26, 1937, and before January 1, 1938, then, despite the foregoing provisions of this subsection, the gain recognized resulting from such distribution shall be considered as a short-term capital gain—

(1) Unless such liquidation is completed before July 1, 1938; or

(2) Unless (if it is established to the satisfaction of the Commissioner by evidence submitted before July 1, 1938, that due to the laws of the foreign country in which such corporation is incorporated, or for other reason, it is or will be impossible to complete the liquidation of such company before such date) the liquidation is completed on or before such date as the Commissioner may find reasonable, but not later than December 31, 1938.

(d) Other distributions from capital: If any distribution made by a corporation to its shareholders is not out of increase in value of property accrued before March 1, 1913, and is not a dividend, then the amount of such distribution shall be applied against and reduce the adjusted basis of the stock provided in section 113, and if in excess of such basis, such excess shall be taxable in the same manner as a gain from the sale or exchange of property. This subsection shall not apply to a distribution in partial or complete liquidation or to a distribution which, under subsection (f) (1), is not treated as a dividend, whether or not otherwise a dividend.

SEC. 116. Exclusions from gross income.

In addition to the items specified in section 22 (b), the following items shall not be included in gross income and shall be exempt from taxation under this title:

(a) Income of foreign governments: The income of foreign governments received from investments in the United States in stocks, bonds, or other domestic securities, owned by such foreign governments, or from interest on deposits in banks in the United States of moneys belonging to such foreign governments, or from any other source within the United States.

(b) Income of States, municipalities, etc.: Income derived from any public utility or the exercise of any essential governmental function and accruing to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, or income accruing to the government of any possession of the United States, or any political subdivision thereof.

Whenever any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, prior to September 8, 1916, entered in good faith into a contract with any person, the object and purpose of which is to acquire, construct, operate, or maintain a public utility—

(1) If by the terms of such contract the tax imposed by this title is to be paid out of the proceeds from the operation of such public utility, prior to any division of such proceeds between the person and the State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, and if, but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title, a part of such proceeds for the taxable year would accrue directly to or for the use of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, then a tax upon a net income from the operation of such public utility shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the manner and at the rates prescribed in this title, but there shall be refunded to such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia (under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) an amount which bears the same relation to the amount of the tax as the amount which (but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title) would have accrued directly to or for the use of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, bears to the amount of the net income from the operation of such public utility for such taxable year.

(2) If by the terms of such contract no part of the proceeds from the operaton of the public utility for the taxable year would, irrespective of the tax imposed by this title, accrue directly to or for the use of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, then the tax upon the net income of such person from the operation of such public utility shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the manner and at the rates prescribed in this title.

(c) Bridges to be acquired by State or political subdivision: Whenever any State or political subdivision thereof, in pursuance of a contract to which it is not a party entered into before the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1928, is to acquire a bridge—

(1) If by the terms of such contract the tax imposed by this title is to be paid out of the proceeds from the operation of such bridge prior to any division of such proceeds, and if, but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title, a part of such proceeds for the taxable year would accrue directly to or for the use of or would be applied for the benefit of such State or political subdivision, then a tax upon the net income from the operation of such bridge shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the manner and at the rates prescribed in this title, but there shall be refunded to such State or political subdivision (under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) an amount which bears the same relation to the amount of the tax as the amount which (but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title) would have accrued directly to or for the use of or would be applied for the benefit of such State or political subdivision, bears to the amount of the net income from the operation of such bridge for such taxable year. No such refund shall be made unless the entire amount of the refund is to be applied in part payment for the acquisition of such bridge.

(2) If by the terms of such contract no part of the proceeds from the operation of the bridge for the taxable year would, irrespective of the tax imposed by this title, accrue directly to or for the use of or be applied for the benefit of such State or political subdivision, then the tax upon the net income from the operation of such bridge shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the manner and at the rates prescribed in this title.

(d) Dividend from "China Trade Act" Corporation: In the case of a person, amounts distributed as dividends to or for his benefit by a corporation organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, if, at the time of such distribution, he is a resident of China, and the equitable right to the income of the shares of stock of the corporation is in good faith vested in him.

(e) Shipowners' protection and indemnity associations: The receipts of shipowners' mutual protection and indemnity associations not organized for profit, and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder; but such corporations shall be subject as other persons to the tax upon their net income from interest, dividends, and rents.

(f) Compensation of employees of foreign governments:

(1) Rule for exclusion: Wages, fees, or salary of an employee of a foreign government (including a consular or other officer, or a nondiplomatic representative) received as compensation for official services to such government—

If such employee is not a citizen of the United States; and

(B) If the services are of a character similar to those performed by employees of the Government of the United States in foreign countries; and

(C) If the foreign government whose employee is claiming exemption grants an equivalent exemption to employees of the Government of the United States performing similar services in such foreign country.

(2) Certificate by Secretary of State: The Secretary of State shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the names of the foreign countries which grant an equivalent exemption to the employees of the Government of the United States performing services in such foreign countries, and the character of the services performed by employees of the Government of the United States in foreign countries.

SEC. 117. Capital gains and losses.

(a) Definitions: As used in this title—

(1) Capital assets: The term "capital assets" means property held by the taxpayer (whether or not connected with his trade or business), but does not include stock in trade of the taxpayer or other property of a kind which would properly be included in the inventory of the taxpayer if on hand at the close of the taxable year, or property held by the taxpayer primarily for sale to customers in the ordinary course of his trade or business, or property, used in the trade or business, of a character which is subject to the allowance for depreciation provided in section 23 (l);

(2) Short-term capital gain: The term "short-term capital gain" means gain from the sale or exchange of a capital asset held for not more than 24 months, if and to the extent such gain is taken into account in computing net income;

(3) Short-term capital loss: The term "short-term capital loss" means loss from the sale or exchange of a capital asset held for not more than 24 months, if and to the extent such loss is taken into account in computing net income;

(4) Long-term capital gain: The term "long-term capital gain" means gain from the sale or exchange of a capital asset held for more than 24 months, if and to the extent such gain is taken into account in computing net income;

(5) Long-term capital loss: The term "long-term capital loss" means loss from the sale or exchange of a capital asset held for more than 24 months, if and to the extent such loss is taken into account in computing net income;

(6) Net short-term capital gain: The term "net short-term capital gain" means the excess of short-term capital gains for the taxable year over the sum of (A) short-term capital losses for the taxable year, plus (B) the net short-term capital loss of the preceding taxable year to the extent brought forward to the taxable year under subsection (c);

(7) Net short-term capital loss: The term "net short-term capital loss" means the excess of short-term capital losses for the taxable year over the short-term capital gains for such year;

(8) Net long-term capital gain: The term "net long-term capital gain" means the excess of long-term capital gains for the taxable year over the long-term capital losses for such year;

(9) Net long-term capital loss: The term "net long-term capital loss" means the excess of long-term capital losses for the taxable year over the long-term capital gains for such year;

(b) Percentage taken into account: In the case of a taxpayer, other than a corporation, only the following percentages of the gain or loss recognized upon the sale or exchange of a capital asset shall be taken into account in computing net income:

100 percent if the capital asset has been held for not more than 24 months;

70 percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 24 months.

(c) Alternative taxes:

(1) In case of net long-term capital gain: If for any taxable year a taxpayer (other than a corporation) derives a net long-term capital gain, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the tax imposed by sections 11 and 12, a tax determined as follows, if and only if such tax is less than the tax imposed by such sections:

A partial tax shall first be computed upon the net income reduced by the amount of the net long-term capital gain, at the rates and in the manner as if this subsection had not been enacted, and the total tax shall be the partial tax plus 50 percent of the net long-term capital gain.

(2) In case of net long-term capital loss: If for any taxable year a taxpayer (other than a corporation) sustains a net long-term capital loss, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the tax imposed by sections 11 and 12, a tax determined as follows, if and only if such tax is greater than the tax imposed by such sections:

A partial tax shall first be computed upon the net income increased by the amount of the net long-term capital loss, at the rates and in the manner as if this subsection had not been enacted, and the total tax shall be the partial tax minus 50 percent of the net long-term capital loss.

(d) Limitation on capital losses: Long-term capital losses shall be allowed, but short-term capital losses shall be allowed only to the extent of short-term capital gains.

(e) Net short-term capital loss carry-over: If any taxpayer sustains in any taxable year, beginning after December 31, 1937, in the case of a taxpayer other than a corporation, or beginning after December 31, 1939, in the case of a corporation, a net short-term capital loss, such loss (in an amount not in excess of the net income for such year) shall be treated in the succeeding taxable year as a short-term capital loss, except that it shall not be included in computing the net short-term capital loss for such year.

(f) Retirement of bonds, etc.: For the purposes of this title, amounts received by the holder upon the retirement of bonds, debentures, notes, or certificates or other evidences of indebtedness issued by any corporation (including those issued by a government or political subdivision thereof), with interest coupons or in registered form, shall be considered as amounts received in exchange therefor.

(g) Gains and losses from short sales, etc.: For the purpose of this title—

(1) Gains or losses from short sales of property shall be considered as gains or losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets; and

(2) gains or losses attributable to the failure to exercise privileges or options to buy or sell property shall be considered as short-term capital gains or losses.

(h) Determination of period for which held:

For the purpose of this section—

(1) In determining the period for which the taxpayer has held property received on an exchange there shall be included the period for which he held the property exchanged, if under the provisions of section 113, the property received has, for the purpose of determining gain or loss from a sale or exchange, the same basis in whole or in part in his hands as the property exchanged.

(2) In determining the period for which the taxpayer has held property however acquired there shall be included the period for which such property was held by any other person, if under the provisions of section 113, such property has, for the purpose of determining gain or loss from a sale or exchange, the same basis in whole or in part in his hands as it would have in the hands of such other person.

(3) In determining the period for which the taxpayer has held stock or securities received upon a distribution where no gain was recognized to the distributee under the provisions of section 112 (g) of the Revenue Act of 1928 (45 Stat. 818) or the Revenue Act of 1932 (48 Stat. 705) or under the provisions of section 371 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1938 or the Internal Revenue Code, there shall be included the period for which he held the stock or securities in the distributing corporation prior to the receipt of the stock or securities upon such distribution.

(4) In determining the period for which the taxpayer has held stock or securities the acquisition of which (or the contract or option to acquire which) resulted in the nondeductibility (under section 118 of this title or section 118 of the Revenue Act of 1928 (45 Stat. 826), or the Revenue Act of 1932 (47 Stat. 208), or the Revenue Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 715), or the Revenue Act of 1936 (49 Stat. 1692), or the Revenue Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 503), or the Internal Revenue Code, relating to wash sales) of the loss from the sale or other disposition of substantially identical stock or securities, there shall be included the period for which he held the stock or securities the loss from the sale or other disposition of which was not deductible.

(5) In determining the period for which the taxpayer has held stock or rights to acquire stock received upon a distribution, if the basis of such stock or rights is determined under section 113 (a) (19) (A), there shall (under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) be included the period for which he held the stock in the distributing corporation prior to the receipt of such stock or rights upon such distribution.

SEC. 118. Loss from wash sales of stock or securities.

(a) In the case of any loss claimed to have been sustained from any sale or other disposition of shares of stock or securities where it appears that, within a period beginning 30 days before the date of such sale or disposition and ending 30 days after such date, the taxpayer has acquired (by purchase or by an exchange upon which the entire amount of gain or loss was recognized by law), or has entered into a contract or option so to acquire, substantially identical stock or securities, then no deduction for the loss shall be allowed under section 23 (e) (2); nor shall such deduction be allowed under section 23 (f) unless the claim is made by a corporation, a dealer in stocks or securities, and with respect to a transaction made in the ordinary course of its business.

(b) If the amount of stock or securities acquired (or covered by the contract or option to acquire) is less than the amount of stock or securities sold or otherwise disposed of, then the particular shares of stock or securities the loss from the sale or other disposition of which is not deductible shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

(c) If the amount of stock or securities acquired (or covered by the contract or option to acquire) is not less than the amount of stock or securities sold or otherwise disposed of, then the particular shares of stock or securities the acquisition of which (or the contract or option to acquire which) resulted in the nondeductibility of the loss shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

SEC. 119. Income from sources within United States.

(a) Gross income from sources in United States: The following items of gross income shall be treated as income from sources within the United States.

(1) Interest: Interest from the United States, any Territory, any political subdivision of a Territory, or the District of Columbia, and interest on bonds, notes, or other interest-bearing obligations of residents, corporate or otherwise, not including—

(A) interest on deposits with persons carrying on the banking business paid to persons not engaged in business within the United States and not having an office or place of business therein, or

(B) interest received from a resident alien individual, a resident foreign corporation, or a domestic corporation, when it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that less than 20 percent of the gross income of such resident payor or domestic corporation has been derived from sources within the United States, as determined under the provisions of this section, for the 3-year period ending with the close of the taxable year of such payor preceding the payment of such interest, or for such part of such period as may be applicable, or

(C) income derived by a foreign central bank of issue from bankers' acceptances;

(2) Dividends. The amount received as dividends:

(A) from a domestic corporation other than a corporation entitled to the benefits of section 251, and other than a corporation less than 20 percent of whose gross income is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner to have been derived from sources within the United States, as determined under the provisions of this section, for the 3-year period ending with the close of the taxable year of such corporation preceding the declaration of such dividends (or for such part of such period as the corporation has been in existence), or

(B) from a foreign corporation unless less than 50 percent of the gross income of such foreign corporation for the 3-year period ending with the close of its taxable year preceding the declaration of such dividends (or for such part of such period as the corporation has been in existence) was derived from sources within the United States as determined under the provisions of this section; but only in an amount which bears the same ratio to such dividends as the gross income of the corporation for such period derived from sources within the United States bears to its gross income from all sources; but dividends from a foreign corporation shall, for the purposes of section 131 (relating to foreign tax credit), be treated as income from sources without the United States;

(3) Personal services: Compensation for labor or personal services performed in the United States, but in the case of a non-resident alien individual temporarily present in the United States for a period or periods not exceeding a total of 90 days during the taxable year, compensation received by such an individual (if such compensation does not exceed $3,000 in the aggregate) for labor or services performed as an employee of, or under a contract with a nonresident alien, foreign partnership, or foreign corporation, not engaged in trade or business within the United States, shall not be deemed to be income from sources within the United States;

(4) Rentals and royalties: Rentals or royalties from property located in the United States or from any interest in such property, including rentals or royalties for the use of or for the privilege of using in the United States, patents, copyrights, secret processes and formulas, goodwill, trade-marks, trade brands, franchises, and other like property; and

(5) Sale of real property: Gains, profits, and income from the sale of real property located in the United States.

(6) Sale of personal property: For gains, profits, and income from the sale of personal property, see subsection (e).

(b) Net income from sources in United States: From the items of gross income specified in subsection (a) of this section there shall be deducted the expenses, losses, and other deductions properly apportioned or allocated thereto and a ratable part of any expenses, losses, or other deductions which cannot definitely be allocated to some item or class of gross income. The remainder, if any, shall be included in full as net income from sources within the United States.

(c) Gross income from sources without United States: The following items of gross income shall be treated as income from sources without the United States:

(1) Interest other than that derived from sources within the United States as provided in subsection (a) (1) of this section;

(2) Dividends other than those derived from sources within the United States as provided in subsection (a) (2) of this section;

(3) Compensation for labor or personal services performed without the United States;

(4) Rentals or royalties from property located without the United States or from any interest in such property, including rentals or royalties for the use of or for the privilege of using without the United States, patents, copyrights, secret processes and formulas, goodwill, trade-marks, trade brands, franchises, and other like properties; and

(5) Gains, profits, and income from the sale of real property located without the United States.

(d) Net income from sources without United States: From the items of gross income specified in subsection (c) of this section there shall be deducted the expenses, losses, and other deductions properly apportioned or allocated thereto, and a ratable part of any expenses, losses, or other deductions which cannot definitely be allocated to some item or class of gross income. The remainder, if any, shall be treated in full as net income from sources without the United States.

(e) Income from sources partly within and partly without United States: Items of gross income, expenses, losses, and deductions, other than those specified in subsections (a) and (c) of this section, shall be allocated or apportioned to sources within or without the United States, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. Where items of gross income are separately allocated to sources within the United States, there shall be deducted (for the purpose of computing the net income therefrom) the expenses, losses, and other deductions properly apportioned or allocated thereto and a ratable part of other expenses, losses, or other deductions which cannot definitely be allocated to some item or class of gross income. The remainder if any, shall be included in full as net income from sources within the United States. In the case of gross income derived from sources partly within and partly without the United States, the net income may first be computed by deducting the expenses, losses, or other deductions apportioned or allocated thereto and a ratable part of any expenses, losses, or other deductions which cannot definitely be allocated to some items or class of gross income; and the portion of such net income attributable to sources within the United States may be determined by processes or formulas of general apportionment prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. Gains, profits, and income from—

(1) transportation or other services rendered partly within and partly without the United States or

(2) from the sale of personal property produced (in whole or in part) by the taxpayer within and sold without the United States, or produced (in whole or in part) by the taxpayer without and sold within the United States, shall be treated as derived partly from sources within and partly from sources without the United States. Gains, profits, and income derived from the purchase of personal property within and its sale without the United States or from the purchase of personal property without and its sale within the United States, shall be treated as derived entirely from sources within the country in which sold, except that gains, profits, and income derived from the purchase of personal property within a possession of the United States and its sale within the United States shall be treated as derived partly from sources within and partly from sources without the United States.

(f) Definitions: As used in this section the words "sale" or "sold" include "exchange" or "exchanged"; and the word "produced" includes "created," "fabricated," "manufactured," "extracted," "processed," "cured," or "aged."

SEC. 120. Unlimited deduction for charitable and other contributions.

In the case of an individual if in the taxable year and in each of the 10 preceding taxable years the amount of the contributions or gifts described in section 23 (o) (or corresponding provisions of prior revenue acts) plus the amount of income, war-profits, or excess-profits taxes paid during such year in respect of preceding taxable years, exceeds 90 percent of the taxpayer's net income for each such year, as computed without the benefit of the applicable subsection, then the 15-percent limit imposed by section 23 (o) shall not be applicable.

SEC. 121. Deduction of dividends paid on certain preferred stock of certain corporations.

In computing the net income of any national banking association, or of any bank or trust company organized under the laws of any State, Territory, possession of the United States, or the Canal Zone, or of any other banking corporation engaged in the business of industrial banking and under the supervision of a State banking department or of the Comptroller of the Currency, or of any incorporated domestic insurance company, there shall be allowed as a deduction from gross income, in addition to deductions otherwise provided for in this title, any dividend (not including any distribution in liquidation) paid, within the taxable year, to the United States or to any instrumentality thereof exempt from Federal income taxes, on the preferred stock of the corporation owned by the United States or such instrumentality. The amount allowable as a deduction under this section shall be deducted from the basic surtax credit otherwise computed under section 124.

SEC. 122. Net operating loss deduction.

(a) Definition of net operating loss: As used in this section, the term "net operating loss" means the excess of the deductions allowed by this title over the gross income, with the exceptions and limitations provided in subsection (d).

(b) Amount of carry-over: The term "net operating loss carry-over" means in the case of any taxable year the sum of—

(1) The amount, if any, of the net operating loss for the first preceding taxable year; and

(2) The amount of the net operating loss, if any, for the second preceding taxable year reduced by the excess, if any, of the net income (computed with the exceptions and limitations provided in subsection (d) (1), (2), (3), and (4)) for the first preceding taxable year over the net operating loss for the third preceding taxable year.

(c) Amount of net operating loss deduction: The amount of the net operating loss deduction shall be the amount of the net operating loss carry-over reduced by the amount, if any, by which the net income (computed with the exceptions and limitations provided in subsections (d) (1), (2), (3), and (4)) exceeds, in the case of a taxpayer other than a corporation, the net income (computed without such deduction), or, in the case of a corporation, the normal-tax net income (computed without such deduction);

(d) Exceptions and limitations: The exceptions and limitations referred to in subsections (a), (b), and (c) shall be as follows:

(1) The deduction for depletion shall not exceed the amount which would be allowable if computed without reference to discovery value or to percentage depletion under section 114 (b) (2), (3), or (4);

(2) There shall be included in computing gross income the amount of interest received which is wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this title, decreased by the amount of interest paid or accrued which is not allowed as a deduction by section 23 (b), relating to interest on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry certain tax-exempt obligations;

(3) No net operating loss deduction shall be allowed;

(4) Long-term capital gains and long-term capital losses shall be taken into account without regard to the provisions of section 117 (b). As so computed the amount deductible on account of long-term capital losses shall not exceed the amount includible on account of the long-term capital gains, and the amount deductible on account of short-term capital losses shall not exceed the amount includible on account of the short-term capital gains;

(5) Deductions otherwise allowed by law not attributable to the operation of a trade or business regularly carried on by the taxpayer shall (in the case of a taxpayer other than a corporation) be allowed only to the extent of the amount of the gross income not derived from such trade or business. For the purposes of this paragraph deductions and gross income shall be computed with the exceptions and limitations specified in paragraphs (1) to (4) of this subsection.

(e) No carry-over from year prior to 1939: As used in this section, the terms "third preceding taxable year," "second preceding taxable year," and "first preceding taxable year" do not include any taxable year beginning prior to January 1, 1939.

SEC. 123. Commodity credit loans.

(a) Amounts received as loans from the Commodity Credit Corporation shall, at the election of the taxpayer, be considered as income and shall be included in gross income for the taxable year in which received.

(b) If a taxpayer exercises the election provided for in subsection (a) for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1938, then the method of computing income so adopted shall be adhered to with respect to all subsequent taxable years unless with the approval of the Commissioner a change to a different method is authorized.

SEC. 124. Corporation dividends paid credit.

(a) Definition in general: As used in this title with respect to any taxable year the term "dividends paid credit" means the sum of—

(1) The basic surtax credit for such year, computed as provided in subsection (b);

(2) The dividend carry-over to such year, computed as provided in subsection (c);

(b) Basic surtax credit: As used in this title, the term "basic surtax credit" means the sum of—

(1) The dividends paid during the taxable year, increased by the consent dividends credit provided in section 125, and reduced by the amount of the credit provided in section 26 (a), relating to interest on certain obligations of the United States and Government corporations;

(2) The net operating loss credit provided in subsection (j).

The amount under this paragraph shall not exceed the adjusted net income for the taxable year.

(c) Dividend carry-over: There shall be computed with respect to each taxable year of a corporation a dividend carry-over to such year from the two preceding taxable years, which shall consist of the sum of—

(1) The amount of the basic surtax credit for the second preceding taxable year, reduced by the adjusted net income for such year, and further reduced by the amount, if any, by which the adjusted net income for the first preceding taxable year exceeds the sum of—

(A) The basic surtax credit for such year; and

(B) The excess, if any, of the basic surtax credit for the third preceding taxable year over the adjusted net income for such year; and

(2) The amount, if any, by which the basic surtax credit for the first preceding taxable year exceeds the adjusted net income for such year.

In the case of a preceding taxable year, referred to in this subsection, which begins in 1938, the adjusted net income shall be the adjusted net income as defined in section 13 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 455), and the basic surtax credit shall be the basic surtax credit as defined in section 27 of the Revenue Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 468).

(d) Dividends in kind: If a dividend is paid in property other than money (including stock of the corporation if held by the corporation as an investment) the amount with respect thereto which shall be used in computing the basic surtax credit shall be the adjusted basis of the property in the hands of the corporation at the time of the payment, or the fair market value of the property at the time of the payment, whichever is the lower.

(e) Dividends in obligations of the corporation: If a dividend is paid in obligations of the corporation, the amount with respect thereto which shall be used in computing the basic surtax credit shall be the face value of the obligations, or their fair market value at the time of the payment, whichever is the lower. If the fair market value of any such dividend paid in any taxable year of the corporation beginning after December 31, 1935, is lower than the face value, then when the obligation is redeemed by the corporation the excess of the amount for which redeemed over the fair market value at the time of the dividend payment (to the extent not allowable as a deduction in computing net income for any taxable year) shall be treated as a dividend paid in the taxable year in which the redemption occurs.

(f) Taxable stock dividends: In case of a stock dividend or stock right which is a taxable dividend in the hands of shareholders under section 115 (f), the amount with respect thereto which shall be used in computing the basic surtax credit shall be the fair market value of the stock or the stock right at the time of the payment.

(g) Distributions in liquidation: In the case of amounts distributed in liquidation the part of such distribution which is properly chargeable to the earnings or profits accumulated after February 28, 1913, shall, for the purposes of computing the basic surtax credit under this section, be treated as a taxable dividend paid.

(h) Preferential dividends: The amount of any distribution (although each portion thereof is received by a shareholder as a taxable dividend), not made in connection with a consent distribution (as defined in section 28 (a) (4)), shall not be considered as dividends paid for the purpose of computing the basic surtax credit, unless such distribution is pro rata, with no preference to any share of stock as compared with other shares of the same class, and with no preference to one class of stock as compared with another class except to the extent that the former is entitled (without reference to waivers of their rights by shareholders) to such preference.

For a distribution made in connection with a consent distribution (see section 125).

(i) Nontaxable distributions: If any part of a distribution (including stock dividends and stock rights) is not a taxable dividend in the hands of such of the shareholders as are subject to taxation under this title for the period in which the distribution is made, such part shall not be included in computing the basic surtax credit.

(j) Net operating loss of preceding year.—

(1) Amount of credit: The amount of the net operating loss (as defined in paragraph (2)) of the corporation for the preceding taxable year (if beginning after December 31, 1937), but not in excess of the adjusted net income for the taxable year.

(2) Definition: As used in this section the term "net operating loss" means the excess of the deductions allowed by this title over the gross income, with the following exceptions and limitations—

(A) The deduction for depletion shall not exceed the amount which would be allowable if computed without reference to discovery value or to percentage depletion under section 114 (b) (2), (3), or (4);

(B) There shall be included in computing gross income the amount of interest received which is wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this title, decreased by the amount of interest paid or accrued which is not allowed as a deduction by section 23 (b), relating to interest on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry certain tax-exempt obligations.

In the case of a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1937, and before January 1, 1939, the term "net operating loss" means net operating loss as defined in section 26 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1938, 52 Stat. 467.

SEC. 125. Consent dividends credit.

(a) Definitions: As used in this section—

(1) Consent stock: The term "consent stock" means the class or classes of stock entitled, after the payment of preferred dividends (as defined in paragraph (2)), to a share in the distribution (other than in complete or partial liquidation) within the taxable year of all the remaining earnings or profits, which share constitutes the same proportion of such distribution regardless of the amount of such distribution.

(2) Preferred dividends: The term "preferred dividends" means a distribution (other than in complete or partial liquidation), limited in amount, which must be made on any class of stock before a further dstribution (other than in complete or partial liquidation) of earnings or profits may be made within the taxable year.

(3) Consent dividends day: The term "consent dividends day" means the last day of the taxable year of the corporation, unless during the last month of such year there have occurred 1 or more days on which was payable a partial distribution (as defined in paragraph (5)), in which case it means the last of such days.

(4) Consent distribution: The term "consent distribution" means the distribution which would have been made if on the consent dividends day (as defined in paragraph (3)) there had actually been distributed in cash and received by each shareholder making a consent filed by the corporation under subsection (d), the specific amount stated in such consent.

(5) Partial distribution: The term "partial distribution" means such part of an actual distribution, payable during the last month of the taxable year of the corporation, as constitutes a distribution on the whole or any part of the consent stock (as defined in paragraph (1)), which part of the distribution, if considered by itself and not in connection with a consent distribution (as defined in paragraph (4)), would be a preferential distribution, as defined in paragraph (6).

(6) Preferential distribution: The term "preferential distribution" means a distribution which is not pro rata, or which is with preference to any share of stock as compared with other shares of the same class, or to any class of consent stock as compared with any other class of consent stock.

(b) Corporations not entitled to credit: A corporation shall not be entitled to a consent dividends credit with respect to any taxable year—

(1) Unless, at the close of such year, all preferred dividends (for the taxable year and, if cumulative, for prior taxable years) have been paid; or

(2) If, at any time during such year, the corporation has taken any steps in, or in pursuance of a plan of, complete or partial liquidation of all or any part of the consent stock.

(c) Allowance of credit: There shall be allowed to the corporation, as a part of its basic surtax credit for the taxable year, a consent dividends credit equal to such portion of the total sum agreed to be included in the gross income of shareholders by their consents filed under subsection (d) as it would have been entitled to include in computing its basic surtax credit if actual distribution of an amount equal to such total sum had been made in cash and each shareholder making such a consent had received, on the consent dividends day, the amount specified in the consent.

(d) Shareholders' consents: The corporation shall not be entitled to a consent dividends credit with respect to any taxable year—

(1) Unless it files with its return for such year (in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) signed consents made under oath by persons who were shareholders, on the last day of the taxabe year of the corporation, of any class of consent stock; and

(2) Unless in each such consent the shareholder agrees that he will include as a taxable dividend, in his return for the taxable year in which or with which the taxable year of the corporation ends, a specific amount; and

(3) Unless the consents filed are made by such of the shareholders and the amount specified in each consent is such, that the consent distribution would not have been a preferential distribution—

(A) If there was no partial distribution during the last month of the taxable year of the corporation, or

(B) If there was such a partial distribution, then when considered in connection with such partial distribution; and

(4) Unless in each consent made by a shareholder who is taxable with respect to a dividend only if received from sources within the United States, such shareholder agrees that the specific amount stated in the consent shall be considered as a dividend received by him from sources within the United States; and

(5) Unless each consent filed is accompanied by cash, or such other medium of payment as the Commissioner may by regulations authorize, in an amount equal to the amount that would be required by section 143 (b) or 144 to be deducted and withheld by the corporation if the amount specified in the consent had been, on the last day of the taxable year of the corporation, paid to the shareholder in cash as a dividend. The amount accompanying the consent shall be credited against the tax imposed by section 211 (a) or 231 (a) upon the shareholder.

(e) Consent distribution as part of entire distribution: If during the last month of the taxable year with respect to which shareholders' consents are filed by the corporation under subsection (d) there is made a partial distribution, then, for the purposes of this title, such partial distribution and the consent distribution shall be considered as having been made in connection with each other and each shall be considered together with the other as one entire distribution.

(f) Taxability of amounts specified in consents: The total amount specified in a consent filed under subsection (d) shall be included as a taxable dividend in the gross income of the shareholder making such consent, and, if the shareholder is taxable with respect to a dividend only if received from sources within the United States, shall be included in the computation of his tax as a dividend received from sources within the United States; regardless of—

(1) Whether he actually so includes it in his return; and

(2) Whether the distribution by the corporation of an amount equal to the total sum included in all the consents filed, had actual distribution been made, would have been in whole or in part a taxable dividend; and

(3) Whether the corporation is entitled to any consent dividends credit by reason of the filing of such consents, or to a credit less than the total sum included in all the consents filed.

(g) Corporate shareholders: If the shareholder who makes the consent is a corporation, the amount specified in the consent shall be considered as part of its earnings or profits for the taxable year, and shall be included in the computation of its accumulated earnings and profits.

(h) Basis of stock in hands of shareholders: The amount specified in a consent made under subsection (d) shall, for the purpose of adjusting the basis of the consent stock with respect to which the consent was given, be treated as having been reinvested by the shareholder as a contribution to the capital of the corporation; but only in an amount which bears the same ratio to the consent dividends credit of the corporation as the amount of such shareholder's consent stock bears to the total amount of consent stock with respect to which consents are made.

(i) Effect on capital account of corporation: The amount of the consent dividends credit allowed under subsection (c) shall be considered as paid in surplus or as a contribution to the capital of the corporation, and the accumulated earnings and profits as of the close of the taxable year shall be correspondingly reduced.

(j) Amounts not included in shareholder's return: The failure of a shareholder of consent stock to include in his gross income for the proper taxable year the amount specified in the consent made by him and filed by the corporation, shall have the same effect, with respect to the deficiency resulting therefrom, as is provided in section 272 (f) with respect to a deficiency resulting from a mathematical error appearing on the face of the return.

SUPPLEMENT C—CREDITS AGAINST TAX

[Supplementary to subtitle B, part III]

SEC. 131. Taxes of foreign countries and possessions of United States.

(a) Allowance of credit: If the taxpayer signifies in his return his desire to have the benefits of this section, the tax imposed by this title, except the tax imposed by section 102, shall be credited with:

(1) Citizen and domestic corporation: In the case of a citizen of the United States and of a domestic corporation, the amount of any income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes paid or accrued during the taxable year to any foreign country or to any possession of the United States; and

(2) Resident of United States: In the case of a resident of the United States, the amount of any such taxes paid or accrued during the taxable year to any possession of the United States; and

(3) Alien resident of United States: In the case of an alien resident of the United States, the amount of any such taxes paid or accrued during the taxable year to any foreign country, if the foreign country of which such alien resident is a citizen or subject, in imposing such taxes, allows a similar credit to citizens of the United States residing in such country; and

(4) Partnerships and estates: In the case of any such individual who is a member of a partnership or a beneficiary of an estate or trust, his proportionate share of such taxes of the partnership or the estate or trust paid or accrued during the taxable year to a foreign country or to any possession of the United States, as the case may be.

(b) Limit on credit: The amount of the credit taken under this section shall be subject to each of the following limitations:

(1) The amount of the credit in respect of the tax paid or accrued to any country shall not exceed the same proportion of the tax against which such credit is taken, which the taxpayer's net income from sources within such country bears to his entire net income, in the case of a taxpayer other than a corporation, or to the normal-tax net income, in the case of a corporation, for the same taxable year; and

(2) The total amount of the credit shall not exceed the same proportion of the tax against which such credit is taken, which the taxpayer's net income from sources without the United States bears to his entire net income, in the case of a taxpayer other than a corporation, or to the normal-tax net income, in the case of a corporation, for the same taxable year.

(c) Adjustments on payment of accrued taxes: If accrued taxes when paid differ from the amounts claimed as credits by the taxpayer, or if any tax paid is refunded in whole or in part, the taxpayer shall notify the Commissioner, who shall redetermine the amount of the tax for the year or years affected, and the amount of tax due upon such redetermination, if any, shall be paid by the taxpayer upon notice and demand by the collector, or the amount of tax overpaid, if any, shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 322. In the case of such a tax accrued but not paid, the Commissioner as a condition precedent to the allowance of this credit may require the taxpayer to give a bond with sureties satisfactory to and to be approved by the Commissioner in such sum as the Commissioner may require, conditioned upon the payment by the taxpayer of any amount of tax found due upon any such redetermination; and the bond herein prescribed shall contain such further conditions as the Commissioner may require.

(d) Year in which credit taken: The credits provided for in this section may, at the option of the taxpayer and irrespective of the method of accounting employed in keeping his books, be taken in the year in which the taxes of the foreign country or the possession of the United States accrued, subject, however, to the conditions prescribed in subsection (c) of this section. If the taxpayer elects to take such credits in the year in which the taxes of the foreign country or the possession of the United States accrued, the credits for all subsequent years shall be taken upon the same basis, and no portion of any such taxes shall be allowed as a deduction in the same or any succeeding year.

(e) Proof of credits: The credits provided in this section shall be allowed only if the taxpayer establishes to the satisfaction of the Commissioner (1) the total amount of income derived from sources without the United States, determined as provided in section 119, (2) the amount of income derived from each country, the tax paid or accrued to which is claimed as a credit under this section, such amount to be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, and (3) all other information necessary for the verification and computation of such credits.

(f) Taxes of foreign subsidiary: For the purposes of this section a domestic corporation which owns a majority of the voting stock of a foreign corporation from which it receives dividends in any taxable year shall be deemed to have paid the same proportion of any income, war-profits, or excess-profits taxes paid by such foreign corporation to any foreign country or to any possession of the United States, upon or with respect to the accumulated profits of such foreign corporation from which such dividends were paid, which the amount of such dividends bears to the amount of such accumulated profits: Provided, That the amount of tax deemed to have been paid under this subsection shall in no case exceed the same proportion of the tax against which credit is taken which the amount of such dividends bears to the amount of the normal-tax net income of the domestic corporation in which such dividends are included. The term "accumulated profits" when used in this subsection in reference to a foreign corporation, means the amount of its gains, profits, or income in excess of the income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes imposed upon or with respect to such profits or income; and the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary shall have full power to determine from the accumulated profits of what year or years such dividends were paid; treating dividends paid in the first 60 days of any year as having been paid from the accumulated profits of the preceding year or years (unless to his satisfaction shown otherwise), and in other respects treating dividends as having been paid from the most recently accumulated gains, profits, or earnings. In the case of a foreign corporation, the income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes of which are determined on the basis of an accounting period of less than 1 year, the word "year" as used in this subsection shall be construed to mean such accounting period.

(g) Corporations treated as foreign: For the purposes of this section the following corporations shall be treated as foreign corporations:

(1) A corporation entitled to the benefits of section 251, by reason of receiving a large percentage of its gross income from sources within a possession of the United States;

(2) A corporation organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, and entitled to the credit provided for in section 262.

SUPPLEMENT D—RETURNS AND PAYMENT OF TAX

[Supplementary to subtitle B, part V]

SEC. 141. Consolidated returns.

(a) Requirement to file consolidated returns: Corporations which are affiliated within the meaning of this section shall, under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, make a consolidated return of net income and invested capital for the purposes of this title and title IB, and the taxes thereunder shall be computed and determined upon the basis of such return. Except in the case of corporations which elected to file consolidated returns under section 141 of the internal revenue code, the net income and taxes hereunder shall be computed upon the basis of separate returns where the corporations elect to pay the alternative tax imposed by section 601 of title IB.

(b) Regulations: The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe such regulations as he may deem necessary in order that the tax liability of any affiliated group of corporations making a consolidated return and of each corporation in the group, both during and after the period of affiliation, may be determined, computed, assessed, collected, and adjusted in such manner as clearly to reflect the income and to prevent avoidance of tax liability.

(c) Computation and payment of tax: In any case in which a consolidated return is made the tax shall be determined, computed, assessed, collected, and adjusted in accordance with the regulations under subsection (b) (or, in case such regulations are not prescribed prior to the making of the return, then the regulations prescribed under section 141 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1932 insofar as not inconsistent with this act) prescribed prior to the date on which such return is made.

(d) Definition of "affiliated group": As used in this section an "affiliated group" means one or more chains of corporations connected through stock ownership with a common parent corporation if—

(1) At least 95 percent of the stock of each of the corporations (except the common parent corporation) is owned directly by one or more of the other corporations; and

(2) The common parent corporation owns directly at least 95 percent of the stock of at least one of the other corporations.

As used in this subsection the term "stock" does not include nonvoting stock which is limited and preferred as to dividends.

(e) A consolidated return shall be made only for the domestic corporations within the affiliated group. An insurance company subject to the tax imposed by section 201 or 204 or a personal holding company subject to the tax imposed by title IA shall not be included in the same consolidated return with a corporation subject to the tax imposed by section 13 or 14, and an insurance company subject to the tax imposed by section 201 shall not be included in the same consolidated return with an insurance company subject to the tax imposed by section 204.

(f) China Trade Act corporations: A corporation organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, shall not be deemed to be affiliated with any other corporation within the meaning of this section.

(g) Corporations deriving income from possessions of United States: For the purposes of this section a corporation entitled to the benefits of section 251, by reason of receiving a large percentage of its income from possessions of the United States, shall be treated as a foreign corporation.

(h) Subsidiary formed to comply with foreign law: In the case of a domestic corporation owning or controlling, directly or indirectly, 100 percent of the capital stock (exclusive of directors' qualifying shares) of a corporation organized under the laws of a contiguous foreign country and maintained solely for the purpose of complying with the laws of such country as to title and operation of property, such foreign corporation may, at the option of the domestic corporation, be treated for the purpose of this title as a domestic corporation.

(i) Suspension of running of statute of limitations: If a notice under section 272 (a) in respect of a deficiency for any taxable year is mailed to a corporation, the suspension of the running of the statute of limitations, provided in section 277, shall apply in the case of corporations with which such corporation made a consolidated return for such taxable year.

SEC. 142. Fiduciary returns.

(a) Requirement of return: Every fiduciary (except a receiver appointed by authority of law in possession of part only of the property of an individual) shall make under oath a return for any of the following individuals, estates, or trusts for which he acts, stating specifically the items of gross income thereof and the deductions and credits allowed under this title and such other information for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title as the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may by regulations prescribe—

(1) Every individual having a gross income for the taxable year of $300 or over, if single, or if married and not living with husband or wife;

(2) Every individual having a gross income for the taxable year of $1,600 or over, if married and living with husband or wife;

(3) Every estate the gross income of which for the taxable year is $800 or over;

(4) Every trust the gross income of which for the taxable year is $100 or over;

(5) Every estate or trust of which any beneficiary is a nonresident alien.

(b) Joint fiduciaries: Under such regulations as the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may prescribe, a return made by one of two or more joint fiduciaries and filed in the office of the collector of the district where such fiduciary resides shall be sufficient compliance with the above requirement. Such fiduciary shall make oath (1) that he has sufficient knowledge of the affairs of the individual, estate, or trust for which the return is made to enable him to make the return, and (2) that the return is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, true and correct.

(c) Law applicable to fiduciaries: Any fiduciary required to make a return under this title shall be subject to all the provisions of law which apply to individuals.

SEC. 143. Withholding of tax at source.

(a) Tax-free covenant bonds:

(1) Requirement of withholding: In any case where bonds, mortgages, or deeds of trust, or other similar obligations of a corporation, issued before January 1, 1934, contain a contract or provision by which the obligor agrees to pay any portion of the tax imposed by this title upon the obligee, or to reimburse the obligee for any portion of the tax, or to pay the interest without deduction for any tax which the obligor may be required or permitted to pay thereon, or to retain therefrom under any law of the United States, the obligor shall deduct and withhold a tax equal to 2 percent of the interest upon such bonds, mortgages, deeds of trust, or other obligations, whether such interest is payable annually or at shorter or longer periods, if payable to an individual, a partnership, or a foreign corporations not engaged in trade or business within the United States and not having any office or place of business therein: Provided, That if the liability assumed by the obligor does not exceed 2 percent of the interest, then the deduction and withholding shall be at the following rates: (A) 20 percent in the case of a nonresident alien individual (except that such rate shall be reduced, in the case of a resident of a contiguous country, to such rate, not less than 5 percent, as may be provided by treaty with such country), or of any partnership not engaged in trade or business within the United States and not having any office or place of business therein and composed in whole or in part of nonresident aliens; (B) in the case of such a foreign corporation, 25 percent; and (C) 2 percent in the case of other individuals and partnerships: Provided further, That if the owners of such obligations are not konwn to the withholding agent the Commissioner may authorize such deduction and withhoding to be at the rate of 2 percent, or, if the liability assumed by the obligor does not exceed 2 percent of the interest, then at the rate of 20 percent.

(2) Benefit of credits against net income: Such deduction and withholding shall not be required in the case of a citizen or resident entitled to receive such interest, if he files with the withholding agent on or before February 1 a signed notice in writing claiming the benefit of the credits provided in section 25 (b); nor in the case of a nonresident alien individual if so provided for in regulations prescribed by the Commissioner under section 215.

(3) Income of obligor and obligee: The obligor shall not be allowed a deduction for the payment of the tax imposed by this title, or any other tax paid pursuant to the tax-free covenant clause, nor shall such tax be included in the gross income of the obligee.

(b) Nonresident aliens: All persons, in whatever capacity acting, including lessees or mortgagors of real or personal property, fiduciaries, employers, and all officers and employees of the United States, having the control, receipt, custody, disposal, or payment of interest (except interest on deposits with persons carrying on the banking business paid to persons not engaged in business in the United States and not having an office or place of business therein), dividends, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensations, remunerations, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical gains, profits, and income (but only to the extent that any of the above items constitutes gross income from sources within the United States), of any nonresident alien individual, or of any partnership not engaged in trade or business within the United States and not having any office or place of business therein and composed in whole or in part of nonresident aliens, shall (except in the cases provided for in subsection (a) of this section and except as otherwise provided in regulations prescribed by the Commissioner under section 215) deduct and withhold from such annual or periodical gains, profits, and income a tax equal to 10 percent thereof, except that such rate shall be reduced, in the case of a nonresident alien individual a resident of a contiguous country, to such rate (not less than 5 percent) as may be provided by treaty with such country: Provided, That no such deduction or withholding shall be required in the case of dividends paid by a foreign corporation unless (1) such corporation is engaged in trade or business within the United States or has an office or place of business therein, and (2) more than 85 percent of the gross income of such corporation for the 3-year period ending with the close of its taxable year preceding the declaration of such dividends (or for such part of such period as the corporation has been in existence) was derived from sources within the United States as determined under the provisions of section 119: Provided further, That the Commissioner may authorize such tax to be deducted and withheld from the interest upon any securities the owners of which are not known to the withholding agent. Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, there may be exempted from such deduction and withholding the compensation for personal services of nonresident alien individuals who enter and leave the United States at frequent intervals.

(c) Return and payment: Every person required to deduct and withhold any tax under this section shall make return thereof on or before March 15 of each year and shall on or before June 15, in lieu of the time prescribed in section 56, pay the tax to the official of the United States Government authorized to receive it. Every such person is hereby made liable for such tax and is hereby indemnified against the claims and demands of any person for the amount of any payments made in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(d) Income of recipient: Income upon which any tax is required to be withheld at the source under this section shall be included in the return of the recipient of such income, but any amount of tax so withheld shall be credited against the amount of income tax as computed in such return.

(e) Tax paid by recipient: If any tax required under this section to be deducted and withheld is paid by the recipient of the income, it shall not be re-collected from the withholding agent; nor in cases in which the tax is so paid shall any penalty be imposed upon or collected from the recipient of the income or the withholding agent for failure to return or pay the same, unless such failure was fraudulent and for the purpose of evading payment.

(f) Refunds and credits: Where there has been an overpayment of tax under this section any refund or credit made under the provisions of section 322 shall be made to the withholding agent unless the amount of such tax was actually withheld by the withholding agent.

(g) Withholding before enactment of title: Notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), the deduction and withholding for any period prior to the effective date of this title shall be upon the items of income and at the rates prescribed in section 143 (a) and (b) of the Internal Revenue Code, or corresponding provisions of any subsequent revenue act in effect prior to the effective date of this title, in lieu of the items and rates prescribed in such subsections.

SEC. 144. Payment of corporation income tax at source.

(a) General rule: In the case of foreign corporations subject to taxation under this title not engaged in trade or business within the United States and not having any office or place of business therein, there shall be deducted and withheld at the source in the same manner and upon the same items of income as is provided in section 143 a tax equal to 25 percent thereof, except that in the case of dividends the rate shall be 20 percent, and except that in the case of corporations organized under the laws of a contiguous country such rate of 20 percent with respect to dividends shall be reduced to such rate (not less than 5 percent) as may be provided by treaty with such country; and such tax shall be returned and paid in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as provided in that section: Provided, That in the case of interest described in subsection (a) of that section (relating to tax-free covenant bonds) the deduction and withholding shall be at the rate specified in such subsection.

(b) Withholding before enactment of title: Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), the deduction and withholding for any period prior to the effective date of this title shall be upon the items of income and at the rates prescribed in section 144 of the Internal Revenue Code, or corresponding provision of any subsequent revenue act in effect prior to the effective date of this title, in lieu of the items and rates prescribed in such subsection.

SEC. 145. Penalties.

(a) Any person required under this title to pay any tax, or required by law or regulations made under authority thereof to make a return, keep any records, or supply any information, for the purposes of the computation, assessment, or collection of any tax imposed by this title, who willfully fails to pay such tax, make such return, keep such records, or supply such information, at the time or times required by law or regulations, shall, in addition to other penalties provided by law, be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

(b) Any person required under this title to collect, account for, and pay over any tax imposed by this title, who willfully fails to collect or truthfully account for and pay over such tax, and any person who willfully attempts in any manner to evade or defeat any tax imposed by this title or the payment thereof, shall, in addition to other penalties provided by law, be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

(c) The term "person" as used in this section includes an officer or employee of a corporation or a member or employee of a partnership, who as such officer, employee, or member is under a duty to perform the act in respect of which the violation occurs.

(d) For penalties for failure to file information returns with respect to foreign personal holding companies and foreign corporations, see section 340.

SEC. 146. Closing by Commissioner of taxable year.

(a) Tax in jeopardy:

(1) Departure of taxpayer or removal of property from United States: If the Commissioner finds that a taxpayer designs quickly to depart from the United States or to remove his property therefrom, or to conceal himself or his property therein, or to do any other act tending to prejudice or to render wholly or partly ineffectual proceedings to collect the tax for the taxable year then last past or the taxable year then current unless such proceedings be brought without delay, the Commissioner shall declare the taxable period for such taxpayer immediately terminated and shall cause notice of such finding and declaration to be given the taxpayer, together with a demand for immediate payment of the tax for the taxable period so declared terminated and of the tax for the preceding taxable year or so much of such tax as is unpaid, whether or not the time otherwise allowed by law for filing return and paying the tax has expired; and such taxes shall thereupon become immediately due and payable. In any proceeding in court brought to enforce payment of taxes made due and payable by virtue of the provisions of this section the finding of the Commissioner, made as herein provided, whether made after notice to the taxpayer or not, shall be for all purposes presumptive evidence of the taxpayer's design.

(2) Corporation in liquidation: If the Commissioner finds that the collection of the tax of a corporation for the current or last preceding taxable year will be jeopardized by the distribution of all or a portion of the assets of such corporation in the liquidation of the whole or any part of its capital stock, the Commissioner shall declare the taxable period for such taxpayer immediately terminated and shall cause notice of such finding and declaration to be given the taxpayer, together with a demand for immediate payment of the tax for the taxable period so declared terminated and of the tax for the last preceding taxable year or so much of such tax as is unpaid, whether or not the time otherwise allowed by law for filing return and paying the tax has expired; and such taxes shall thereupon become immediately due and payable.

(b) Security for payment: A taxpayer who is not in default in making any return or paying income, war-profits, or excess-profits tax under any act of Congress may furnish to the United States, under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, security approved by the Commissioner that he will duly make the return next thereafter required to be filed and pay the tax next thereafter required to be paid. The Commissioner may approve and accept in like manner security for return and payment of taxes made due and payable by virtue of the provisions of this section, provided the taxpayer has paid in full all other income, war-profits, or excess-profits taxes due from him under any act of Congress.

(c) Same—Exemption from section: If security is approved and accepted pursuant to the provisions of this section and such further or other security with respect to the tax or taxes covered thereby is given as the Commissioner shall from time to time find necessary and require, payment of such taxes shall not be enforced by any proceedings under the provisions of this section prior to the expiration of the time otherwise allowed for paying such respective taxes.

(d) Citizens: In the case of a citizen of the United States or of a possession of the United States about to depart from the United States the Commissioner may, at his discretion, waive any or all of the requirements placed on the taxpayer by this section.

(e) Departure of alien: No alien shall depart from the United States unless he first procures from the collector or agent in charge a certificate that he has compiled with all the obligations imposed upon him by the income, war-profits, and excess-profits tax laws.

(f) Addition to tax: If a taxpayer violates or attempts to violate this section there shall, in addition to all other penalties, be added as part of the tax 25 percent of the total amount of the tax or deficiency in the tax, together with interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the time the tax became due.

SEC. 147. Information at source.

(a) Payments of $500 or more: All persons, in whatever capacity acting, including lessees or mortgagors of real or personal property, fiduciaries, and employers, making payment to another person, of interest, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensations, remunerations, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable gains, profits, and income (other than payments described in section 148 (a) or 149), or of $500 or more in any taxable year, or, in the case of such payments made by the United States, the officers or employees of the United States having information as to such payments and required to make returns in regard thereto by the regulations hereinafter provided for, shall render a true and accurate return to the Commissioner, under such regulations and in such form and manner and to such extent as may be prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, setting forth the amount of such gains, profits, and income, and the name and address of the recipient of such payment.

(b) Returns regardless of amount of payment: Such returns may be required, regardless of amounts, (1) in the case of payments of interest upon bonds, mortgages, deeds of trust, or other similar obligations of corporations, and (2) in the case of collections of items (not payable in the United States) of interest upon the bonds of foreign countries and interest upon the bonds of and dividends from foreign corporations by persons undertaking as a matter of business or for profit the collection of foreign payments of such interest or dividends by means of coupons, checks, or bills of exchange.

(c) Recipient to furnish name and address: When necessary to make effective the provisions of this section the name and address of the recipient of income shall be furnished upon demand of the person paying the income.

(d) Obligations of United States: The provisions of this section shall not apply to the payment of interest on obligations of the United States.

SEC. 148. Information by corporations.

(a) Dividend payments: Every corporation shall, when required by the Commissioner, render a correct return, duly verified under oath, of its payments of dividends, stating the name and address of each shareholder, the number of shares owned by him, and the amount of dividends paid to him.

(b) Profits declared as dividends: Every corporation shall, when required by the Commissioner, furnish him a statement of such facts as will enable him to determine the portion of the earnings or profits of the corporation (including gains, profits, and income not taxed) accumulated during such periods as the Commissioner may specify, which have been distributed or ordered to be distributed, respectively, to its shareholders during such taxable years as the Commissioner may specify.

(c) Accumulated earnings and profits: When requested by the Commissioner, or any collector, every corporation shall forward to him a correct statement of accumulated earnings and profits and the names and addresses of the individuals or shareholders who would be entitled to the same if divided or distributed, and of the amounts that would be payable to each.

(d) Contemplated dissolution or liquidation: Every corporation shall, within 30 days after the adoption by the corporation of a resolution or plan for the dissolution of the corporation or for the liquidation of the whole or any part of its capital stock, render a correct return to the Commissioner, verified under oath, setting forth the terms of such resolution or plan and such other information as the Commissioner shall, with the approval of the Secretary, by regulations prescribe.

(e) Distributions in liquidation: Every corporation shall, when required by the Commissioner, render a correct return, duly verified under oath, of its distributions in liquidation, stating the name and address of each shareholder, the number and class of shares owned by him, and the amount paid to him or, if the distribution is in property other than money, the fair market value (as of the date the distribution is made) of the property distributed to him.

(f) Compensation of officers and employees: Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, every corporation subject to taxation under this title shall, in its return, submit a list of the names of all officers and employees of such corporation and the respective amounts paid to them during the taxable year of the corporation by the corporation as salary, commission, bonus, or other compensation for personal services rendered, if the aggregate amount so paid to the individual is in excess of $75,000.

The Secretary shall compile from the returns made a list containing the names of, and the amounts paid to, each such officer and employee and the name of the paying corporation, and shall make such list available to the public. It shall be unlawful for any person to sell, offer for sale, or circulate, for any consideration whatsoever, any copy or reproduction of any list, or part thereof, authorized to be made public by this act or by any prior act relating to the publication of information derived from income-tax returns; and any offense against the foregoing provision shall be a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 1 year, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That nothing in this sentence shall be construed to be applicable with respect to any newspaper, or other periodical publication, entitled to admission to the mails as second-class mail matter.

SEC. 149. Returns of brokers.

Every person doing business as a broker shall, when required by the Commissioner, render a correct return duly verified under oath, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, showing the names of customers for whom such person has transacted any business, with such details as to the profits, losses, or other information which the Commissioner may require, as to each of such customers, as will enable the Commissioner to determine whether all income tax due on profits or gains of such customers has been paid.

SEC. 150. Collection of foreign items.

All persons undertaking as a matter of business or for profit the collection of foreign payments of interest or dividends by means of coupons, checks, or bills of exchange shall obtain a license from the Commissioner and shall be subject to such regulations enabling the Government to obtain the information required under this title as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe; and whoever knowingly undertakes to collect such payments without having obtained a license therefor, or without complying with such regulations, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 151. Foreign personal holding companies.

For information returns by officers, directors, and large shareholders, with respect to foreign personal holding companies, see sections 338, 339, and 340.

SUPPLEMENT E—ESTATES AND TRUSTS

SEC. 161. Imposition of tax.

(a) Application of tax: The taxes imposed by this title upon individuals shall apply to the income of estates or of any kind of property held in trust, including—

(1) Income accumulated in trust for the benefit of unborn or unascertained person or persons with contingent interests, and income accumulated or held for future distribution under the terms of the will or trust;

(2) Income which is to be distributed currently by the fiduciary to the beneficiaries, and income collected by a guardian of an infant which is to be held or distributed as the court may direct;

(3) Income received by estates of deceased persons during the period of administration or settlement of the estate; and

(4) Income which, in the discretion of the fiduciary, may be either distributed to the beneficiaries or accumulated.

(b) Computation and payment: The tax shall be computed upon the net income of the estate or trust, and shall be paid by the fiduciary, except as provided in section 166 (relating to revocable trusts) and section 167 (relating to income for benefit of the grantor). For return made by fiduciary, see section 142.

SEC. 162. Net income.

The net income of the estate or trust shall be computed in the same manner and on the same basis as in the case of an individual, except that—

(a) There shall be allowed as a deduction (in lieu of the deduction for charitable, etc., contributions authorized by section 23 (o)) any part of the gross income, without limitation, which pursuant to the terms of the will or deed creating the trust, is during the taxable year paid or permanently set aside for the purposes and in the manner specified in section 23 (o), or is to be used exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, or for the establishment, acquisition, maintenance, or operation of a public cemetery not operated for profit;

(b) There shall be allowed as an additional deduction in computing the net income of the estate or trust the amount of the income of the estate or trust for its taxable year which is to be distributed currently by the fiduciary to the beneficiaries, and the amount of the income collected by a guardian of an infant which is to be held or distributed as the court may direct, but the amount so allowed as a deduction shall be included in computing the net income of the beneficiaries whether distributed to them or not. Any amount allowed as a deduction under this paragraph shall not be allowed as a deduction under subsection (c) of this section in the same or any succeeding taxable year;

(c) In the case of income received by estates of deceased persons during the period of administration or settlement of the estate, and in the case of income which, in the discretion of the fiduciary, may be either distributed to the beneficiary or accumulated, there shall be allowed as an additional deduction in computing the net income of the estate or trust the amount of the income of the estate or trust for its taxable year, which is properly paid or credited during such year to any legatee, heir, or beneficiary, but the amount so allowed as a deduction shall be included in computing the net income of the legatee, heir, or beneficiary.

SEC. 163. Credits against net income.

(a) Credits of estate or trust:

(1) For the purpose of the normal tax and the surtax an estate shall be allowed the same personal exemption as is allowed to a single person under section 25 (b) (1), and a trust shall be allowed (in lieu of the personal exemption under section 25 (b) (1)) a credit of $100 against net income.

(2) If no part of the income of the estate or trust is included in computing the net income of any legatee, heir, or beneficiary, then the estate or trust shall be allowed the same credits against net income for interest as are allowed by section 25 (a).

(b) Credits of beneficiary: If any part of the income of an estate or trust is included in computing the net income of any legatee, heir, or beneficiary, such legatee, heir, or beneficiary shall, for the purpose of the normal tax, be allowed as credits against net income, in addition to the credits allowed to him under section 25, his proportionate share of such amounts of interest specified in section 25 (a) as are, under this supplement, required to be included in computing his net income. Any remaining portion of such amounts specified in section 25 (a) shall, for the purpose of the normal tax, be allowed as credits to the estate or trust.

SEC. 164. Different taxable years.

If the taxable year of a beneficiary is different from that of the estate or trust, the amount which he is required, under section 162 (b), to include in computing his net income, shall be based upon the income of the estate or trust for any taxable year of the estate or trust (whether beginning on, before, or after the effective date of this title) ending within or with his taxable year.

SEC. 165. Employees' trusts.

A trust forming part of a stock bonus, pension, or profit-sharing plan of an employer for the exclusive benefit of some or all of his employees—

(1) if contributions are made to the trust by such employer, or employees, or both, for the purpose of distributing to such employees the earnings and principal of the fund accumulated by the trust in accordance with such plan, and

(2) if under the trust instrument it is impossible, at any time prior to the satisfaction of all liabilities with respect to employees under the trust, for any part of the corpus or income to be (within the taxable year or thereafter) used for, or diverted to, purposes other than for the exclusive benefit of his employees, shall not be taxable under section 161, but the amount actually distributed or made available to any distributee shall be taxable to him in the year in which so distributed or made available to the extent that it exceeds the amounts paid in by him. Such distributees shall for the purpose of the normal tax be allowed as credits against net income such part of the amount so distributed or made available as represents the items of interest specified in section 25 (a).

SEC. 166. Revocable trusts.

Where at any time the power to revest in the grantor title to any part of the corpus of the trust is vested—

(1) in the grantor, either alone or in conjunction with any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the corpus or the income therefrom, or

(2) in any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the corpus or the income therefrom, then the income of such part of the trust shall be included in computing the net income of the grantor.

SEC. 167. Income for benefit of grantor.

(a) Where any part of the income of a trust—

(1) is, or in the discretion of the grantor or of any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the income may be, held or accumulated for future distribution to the grantor; or

(2) may, in the discretion of the grantor or of any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the income, be distributed to the grantor; or

(3) is, or in the discretion of the grantor or of any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the income may be, applied to the payment of premiums upon policies of insurance on the life of the grantor (except policies of insurance irrevocably payable for the purposes and in the manner specified in section 23 (o), relating to the so-called "charitable contribution" deduction);

then such part of the income of the trust shall be included in computing the net income of the grantor.

(b) As used in this section, the term "in the discretion of the grantor" means "in the discretion of the grantor, either alone or in conjunction with any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of the part of the income in question".

SEC. 168. Taxes of foreign countries and possessions of United States.

The amount of income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes imposed by foreign countries or possessions of the United States shall be allowed as credit against the tax of the beneficiary of an estate or trust to the extent provided in section 131.

SEC. 169. Common trust funds.

(a) Definitions: The term "common trust fund" means a fund maintained by a bank (as defined in section 104)—

(1) exclusively for the collective investment and reinvestment of moneys contributed thereto by the bank in its capacity as a trustee, executor, administrator, or guardian; and

(2) in conformity with the rules and regulations, prevailing from time to time, of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System pertaining to the collective investment of trust funds by national banks.

(b) Taxation of common trust funds: A common trust fund shall not be subject to taxation under this title, and for the purposes of this title shall not be considered a corporation.

(c) Income of participants in fund:

(1) Inclusions in net income: Each participant in the common trust fund in computing its net income shall include, whether or not distributed and whether or not distributable—

(A) As a part of its short-term capital gains or losses, its proportionate share of the net short-term capital gain or loss of the common trust fund;

(B) As a part of its long-term capital gains or losses, its proportionate share of the net long-term capital gain or loss of the common trust fund;

(C) Its proportionate share of the ordinary net income or the ordinary net loss of the common trust fund, computed as provided in subsection (d).

(2) Credit for partially exempt interest: The proportionate share of each participant in the amount of interest specified in section 25 (a) received by the common trust fund shall for the purposes of this supplement be considered as having been received by such participant as such interest.

(d) Computation of common trust-fund income: The net income of the common trust fund shall be computed in the same manner and on the same basis as in the case of an individual, except that—

(1) There shall be segregated the short-term capital gains and losses and the long-term capital gains and losses, and the net short-term capital gain or loss and the net long-term capital gain or loss shall be computed;

(2) After excluding all items of either short-term or long-term capital gain or loss, there shall be computed—

(A) An ordinary net income which shall consist of the excess of the gross income over the deductions; or

(B) An ordinary net loss which shall consist of the excess of the deductions over the gross income;

(3) The so-called "charitable contribution" deduction allowed by section 23 (o) shall not be allowed.

(e) Admission and withdrawal: No gain or loss shall be realized by the common trust fund by the admission or withdrawal of a participant. The withdrawal of any participating interest by a participant shall be treated as a sale or exchange of such interest by the participant.

(f) Returns by bank: Every bank (as defined in sec. 104) maintaining a common trust fund shall make a return under oath for each taxable year, stating specifically, with respect to such fund, the items of gross income and the deductions allowed by this title, and shall include in the return the names and addresses of the participants who would be entitled to share in the net income if distributed and the amount of the proportionate share of each participant. The return shall be sworn to as in the case of a return filed by the bank under section 52.

(g) Different taxable years of common trust fund and participant: If the taxable year of the common trust fund is different from that of a participant, the inclusions with respect to the net income of the common trust fund, in computing the net income of the participant for its taxable year shall be based upon the net income of the common trust fund for any taxable year of the common trust fund (whether beginning on, before, or after January 1, 1939) ending within or with the taxable year of the participant.

SEC. 170. Net operating losses.

The benefit of the deduction for net operating losses allowed by section 23 (s) shall be allowed to estates and trusts under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. The benefit of such deduction shall not be allowed to a common trust fund, but shall be allowed to the participants in the common trust fund under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

SUPPLEMENT F—PARTNERSHIPS

SEC. 181. Partnership not taxable.

Individuals carrying on business in partnership shall be liable for income tax only in their individual capacity.

SEC. 182. Tax of partners.

In computing the net income of each partner, he shall include, whether or not distribution is made to him—

(a) As a part of his short-term capital gains or losses, his distributive share of the net short-term capital gain or loss of the partnership.

(b) As a part of his long-term capital gains or losses, his distributive share of the net long-term capital gain or loss of the partnership.

(c) His distributive share of the ordinary net income or the ordinary net loss of the partnership, computed as provided in section 183 (b).

SEC. 183. Computation of partnership income.

(a) General rule: The net income of the partnership shall be computed in the same manner and on the same basis as in the case of an individual, except as provided in subsections (b) and (c).

(b) Segregation of items:

(1) Capital gains and losses: There shall be segregated the short-term capital gains and losses and the long-term capital gains and losses, and the net short-term capital gain or loss and the net long-term capital gain or loss shall be computed.

(2) Ordinary net income or loss: After excluding all items of either short-term or long-term capital gain or loss, there shall be computed—

(A) An ordinary net income which shall consist of the excess of the gross income over the deductions; or

(B) An ordinary net loss which shall consist of the excess of the deductions over the gross income.

(c) Charitable contributions: In computing the net income of the partnership the so-called charitable contribution deduction allowed by section 23 (o) shall not be allowed; but each partner shall be considered as having made payment, within his taxable year, of his distributive portion of any contribution or gift, payment of which was made by the partnership within its taxable year, of the character which would be allowed to the partnership as a deduction under such section if this subsection had not been enacted.

SEC. 184. Credits against net income.

The partner shall, for the purpose of the normal tax, be allowed as a credit against his net income, in addition to the credits allowed to him under section 25, his proportionate share of such amounts (not in excess of the net income of the partnership) of interest specified in section 25 (a) as are received by the partnership.

SEC. 185. Taxes of foreign countries and possessions of United States.

The amount of income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes imposed by foreign countries or possessions of the United States shall be allowed as a credit against the tax of the member of a partnership to the extent provided in section 131.

SEC. 186. Partnership returns.

Every partnership shall make a return for each taxable year, stating specifically the items of its gross income and the deductions allowed by this title and such other information for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title as the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may by regulations prescribe, and shall include in the return the names and addresses of the individuals who would be entitled to share in the net income if distributed and the amount of the distributive share of each individual. The return shall be sworn to by any one of the partners.

SEC. 187. Different taxable years of partner and partnership.

If the taxable year of a partner is different from that of the partnership, the inclusions with respect to the net income of the partnership, in computing the net income of the partner for his taxable year, shall be based upon the net income of the partnership for any taxable year of the partnership (whether beginning on, before, or after January 1, 1939) ending within or with the taxable year of the partner.

SEC. 188. Net operating losses.

The benefit of the deduction for net operating losses allowed by section 23 (s) shall not be allowed to a partnership but shall be allowed to the members of the partnership under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

SUPPLEMENT G—INSURANCE COMPANIES

SEC. 201. Tax on life insurance companies.

(a) Definition: When used in this title the term "life insurance company" means an insurance company engaged in the business of issuing life insurance and annuity contracts (including contracts of combined life health, and accident insurance), the reserve funds of which held for the fulfillment of such contracts comprise more than 50 percent of its total reserve funds.

(b) Imposition of tax:

(1) In general: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the normal-tax net income of every life insurance company a tax at the rates provided in section 13 or section 14 (b).

(2) Normal-tax net income of foreign life insurance companies: In the case of a foreign life insurance company, the normal-tax net income shall be an amount which bears the same ratio to the normal-tax net income, computed without regard to this paragraph, as the reserve funds required by law and held by it at the end of the taxable year upon business transacted within the United States bear to the reserve funds held by it at the end of the taxable year upon all business transacted.

(3) No United States insurance business: Foreign life insurance companies not carrying on an insurance business within the United States and holding no reserve funds upon business transacted within the United States, shall not be taxable under this section but shall be taxable as other foreign corporations.

SEC. 202. Gross income of life insurance companies.

(a) Gross income defined:

(1) In general: In the case of a life insurance company the term "gross income" means the gross amount of income received during the taxable year from interest, dividends, and rents.

(2) Cross reference:

For inclusion in computation of tax of amount specified in shareholder's consent, see section 125.

(b) Reserve funds required by law, defined: The term "reserve funds required by law" includes, in the case of assessment insurance, sums actually deposited by any company or association with State or Territorial officers pursuant to law as guaranty or reserve funds, and any funds maintained under the charter or articles of incorporation of the company or association exclusively for the payment of claims arising under certificates of membership or policies issued upon the assessment plan and not subject to any other use.

SEC. 203. Net income of life insurance companies.

(a) General rule: In the case of a life insurance company the term "net income" means the gross income less—

(1) Tax-free interest: The amount of interest received during the taxable year which under section 22 (b) (4) is excluded from gross income;

(2) Reserve funds: An amount equal to 4 percent of the mean of the reserve funds required by law and held at the beginning and end of the taxable year, except that in the case of any such reserve fund which is computed at a lower interest assumption rate, the rate of 3¾ percent shall be substituted for 4 percent. Life-insurance companies issuing policies covering life, health, and accident insurance combined in one policy issued on the weekly premium payment plan, continuing for life and not subject to cancelation, shall be allowed, in addition to the above, a deduction of 3¾ percent of the mean of such reserve funds (not required by law) held at the beginning and end of the taxable year, as the Commissioner finds to be necessary for the protection of the holders of such policies only;

(3) Reserve for dividends: An amount equal to 2 percent of any sums held at the end of the taxable year as a reserve for dividends (other than dividends payable during the year following the taxable year) the payment of which is deferred for a period of not less than 5 years from the date of the policy contract;

(4) Investment expenses: Investment expenses paid during the taxable year: Provided, That if any general expenses are in part assigned to or included in the investment expenses, the total deduction under this paragraph shall not exceed one-fourth of 1 percent of the book value of the mean of the invested assets held at the beginning and end of the taxable year.

(5) Real-estate expenses: Taxes and other expenses paid during the taxable year exclusively upon or with respect to the real estate owned by the company, not including taxes assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed, and not including any amount paid out for new buildings, or for permanent improvements or betterments made to increase the value of any property. The deduction allowed by this paragraph shall be allowed in the case of taxes imposed upon a shareholder of a company upon his interest as shareholder, which are paid by the company without reimbursement from the shareholder, but in such cases no deduction shall be allowed the shareholder for the amount of such taxes;

(6) Depreciation: A reasonable allowance, as provided in section 23 (l), for the exhaustion, wear, and tear of property, including a reasonable allowance for obsolescence; and

(7) Interest: All interest paid within the taxable year on its indebtedness, except on indebtedness incurred on continued to purchase or carry obligations (other than obligations of the United States issued after September 24, 1917, and originally subscribed for by the taxpayer) the interest upon which is wholly exempt from taxation under this title.

(8) The amount of the net operating loss deduction provided in section 23 (s).

(b) Rental value of real estate: The deduction under subsection (a) (5) or (6) of this section on account of any real estate owned and occupied in whole or in part by a life-insurance company shall be limited to an amount which bears the same ratio to such deduction (computed without regard to this subsection) as the rental value of the space not so occupied bears to the rental value of the entire property.

SEC. 204. Insurance companies other than life or mutual.

(a) Imposition of tax—

(1) In general: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the normal-tax net income of every insurance company (other than a life or mutual insurance company) a tax at the rates provided in section 13 or section 14 (b).

(2) Normal-tax net income of foreign companies: In the case of a foreign insurance company (other than a life or mutual insurance company), the normal-tax net income shall be the net income from sources within the United States minus the sum of—

(A) Interest on obligations of the United States and its instrumentalities: The credit provided in section 26 (a).

(B) Dividends received: The credit provided in section 26 (b).

(3) No United States insurance business: Foreign insurance companies not carrying on an insurance business within the United States shall not be taxable under this section but shall be taxable as other foreign corporations.

(b) Definition of income, etc.: In the case of an insurance company subject to the tax imposed by this section—

(1) Gross income: "Gross income" means the sum of (A) the combined gross amount earned during the taxable year, from investment income and from underwriting income as provided in this subsection, computed on the basis of the underwriting and investment exhibit of the annual statement approved by the National Convention of Insurance Commissioners, and (B) gain during the taxable year from the sale or other disposition of property, and (C) all other items constituting gross income under section 22;

(2) Net income: "Net income" means the gross income as defined in paragraph (1) of this subsection less the deductions allowed by subsection (c) of this section;

(3) Investment income: "Investment income" means the gross amount of income earned during the taxable year from interest, dividends, and rents, computed as follows:

To all interest, dividends, and rents received during the taxable year add interest, dividends, and rents due and accrued at the end of the taxable year, and deduct all interest, dividends, and rents due and accrued at the end of the preceding taxable year;

(4) Underwriting income: "Underwriting income" means the premiums earned on insurance contracts during the taxable year less losses incurred and expenses incurred;

(5) Premiums earned: "Premiums earned on insurance contracts during the taxable year" means an amount computed as follows:

From the amount of gross premiums written on insurance contracts during the taxable year, deduct return premiums and premiums paid for reinsurance. To the result so obtained add unearned premiums on outstanding business at the end of the preceding taxable year and deduct unearned premiums on outstanding business at the end of the taxable year;

(6) Losses incurred: "Losses incurred" means losses incurred during the taxable year on insurance contracts, computed as follows:

To losses paid during the taxable year, add salvage and reinsurance recoverable outstanding at the end of the preceding taxable year, and deduct salvage and reinsurance recoverable outstanding at the end of the taxable year. To the result so obtained add all unpaid losses outstanding at the end of the taxable year and deduct unpaid losses outstanding at the end of the preceding taxable year;

(7) Expenses incurred: "Expenses incurred" means all expenses shown on the annual statement approved by the National Convention of Insurance Commissioners, and shall be computed as follows:

To all expenses paid during the taxable year add expenses unpaid at the end of the taxable year and deduct expenses unpaid at the end of the preceding taxable year. For the purpose of computing the net income subject to the tax imposed by this section there shall be deducted from expenses incurred as defined in this paragraph all expenses incurred which are not allowed as deductions by subsection (c) of this section.

(c) Deductions allowed: In computing the net income of an insurance company subject to the tax imposed by this section there shall be allowed as deductions:

(1) All ordinary and necessary expenses incurred, as provided in section 23 (a);

(2) All interest as provided in section 23 (b);

(3) Taxes as provided in section 23 (c);

(4) Losses incurred as defined in subsection (b) (6) of this section;

(5) Subject to the limitation contained in section 117 (d), losses sustained during the taxable year from the sale or other disposition of property;

(6) Bad debts in the nature of agency balances and bills receivable ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the taxable year;

(7) The amount of interest earned during the taxable year which under section 22 (b) (4) is excluded from gross income;

(8) A reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear, and tear of property, as provided in section 23 (l);

(9) Charitable, and so forth, contributions, as provided in section 23 (q).

(10) Deductions (other than those specified in this subsection) as provided in section 23.

(d) Deductions of foreign corporations: In the case of a foreign corporation the deductions allowed in this section shall be allowed to the extent provided in Supplement I in the case of a foreign corporation engaged in trade or business within the United States or having an office or place of business therein.

(e) Double deductions: Nothing in this section shall be construed to permit the same item to be twice deducted.

SEC. 205. Taxes of foreign countries and possessions of United States.

The amount of income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes imposed by foreign countries or possessions of the United States shall be allowed as a credit against the tax of a domestic insurance company subject to the tax imposed by section 201, 204, or 207, to the extent provided in the case of a domestic corporation in section 131, and in the case of the tax imposed by section 201 or 204 "net income" as used in section 131 means the net income as defined in this supplement.

SEC. 206. Computation of gross income.

The gross income of insurance companies subject to the tax imposed by section 201 or 204 shall not be determined in the manner provided in section 119.

SEC. 207. Mutual insurance companies other than life.

(a) Imposition of tax.—

(1) In general: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the normal-tax net income of every mutual insurance company (other than a life insurance company) a tax at the rates provided in section 13 or section 14 (b).

(2) Foreign corporations: The tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall apply to foreign corporations as well as domestic corporations; but foreign insurance companies not carrying on an insurance business within the United States shall be taxable as other foreign corporations.

(b) Gross income: Mutual marine-insurance companies shall include in gross income the gross premiums collected and received by them less amounts paid for reinsurance.

(c) Deductions: In addition to the deductions allowed to corporations by section 23 the following deductions to insurance companies shall also be allowed, unless otherwise allowed—

(1) Mutual insurance companies other than life insurance: In the case of mutual insurance companies other than life insurance companies—

(A) the net addition required by law to be made within the taxable year to reserve funds (including in the case of assessment insurance companies the actual deposit of sums with State or Territorial officers pursuant to law as additions to guarantee or reserve funds); and

(B) the sums other than dividends paid within the taxable year on policy and annuity contracts.

(2) Mutual marine insurance companies: In the case of mutual marine insurance companies, in addition to the deductions allowed in paragraph (1) of this subsection, unless otherwise allowed, amounts repaid to policyholders on account of premiums previously paid by them, and interest paid upon such amounts between the ascertainment and the payment thereof;

(3) Mutual insurance companies other than life and marine: In the case of mutual insurance companies (including interinsurers and reciprocal underwriters, but not including mutual life or mutual marine insurance companies) requiring their members to make premium deposits to provide for losses and expenses, the amount of premium deposits returned to their policyholders and the amount of premium deposits retained for the payment of losses, expenses, and reinsurance reserves.

SEC. 208. Net operating losses.

The benefit of the deduction for net operating losses allowed by section 23 (s) shall be allowed to insurance companies subject to the taxes imposed in this supplement under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

SUPPLEMENT H—NONRESIDENT ALIEN INDIVIDUALS

SEC. 211. Tax on nonresident alien individuals.

(a) No United States business or office.—

(1) General rule.—

(A) Imposition of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year, in lieu of the tax imposed by sections 11 and 12, upon the amount received, by every nonresident alien individual not engaged in trade or business within the United States and not having an office or place of business therein, from sources within the United States as interest (except interest on deposits with persons carrying on the banking business), dividends, rents, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensations, remunerations, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical gains, profits, and income, a tax of 20 percent of such amount, except that such rate shall be reduced, in the case of a resident of a contiguous country, to such rate (not less than 5 percent) as may be provided by treaty with such country.

(B) Cross reference.—

For inclusion in computation of tax of amount specified in shareholder's consent (see section 125).

(2) Aggregate more than $21,600: The tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall not apply to any individual if the aggregate amount received during the taxable year from the sources therein specified is more than $21,600.

(3) Residents of contiguous countries: Despite the provisions of paragraph (2), the provisions of paragraph (1) shall apply to a resident of a contiguous country so long as there is in effect a treaty with such country (ratified prior to August 26, 1937) under which the rate of tax under section 211 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1936 (49 Stat. 1714) prior to its amendment by section 501 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1937 (50 Stat. 830) was reduced.

(b) United States business or office: A nonresident alien individual engaged in trade or business in the United States or having an office or place of business therein shall be taxable without regard to the provisions of subsection (a). As used in this section, section 119, section 143, section 144, and section 231, the phrase "engaged in trade or business within the United States" includes the performance of personal services within the United States at any time within the taxable year, but does not include the performance of personal services for a nonresident alien individual, foreign partnership, or foreign corporation, not engaged in trade or business within the United States, by a nonresident alien individual temporarily present in the United States for a period or periods not exceeding a total of 90 days during the taxable year and whose compensation for such services does not exceed in the aggregate $3,000. Such phrase does not include the effecting of transactions in the United States in stocks, securities, or commodities through a resident broker, commission agent, or custodian.

(c) No United States business or office and gross income of more than $21,600: A nonresident alien individual not engaged in trade or business within the United States and not having an office or place of business therein who has a gross income for any taxable year of more than $21,600 from the sources specified in subsection (a) (1) shall be taxable without regard to the provisions of subsection (a) (1), except that—

(1) The gross income shall include only income from the sources specified in subsection (a) (1);

(2) The deduction (other than the so-called charitable deduction provided in section 213 (c) shall be allowed only if and to the extent that they are properly allocable to the gross income from the sources specified in subsection (a) (1);

(3) The aggregate of the normal and surtax under sections 11 and 12 shall in no case be less than 10 percent of the gross income from the sources specified in subsection (a) (1); and

(4) This subsection shall not apply to a resident of a contiguous country so long as there is in effect a treaty with such country (ratified prior to August 26, 1937) under which the rate of tax under section 211 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1936, prior to its amendment by section 501 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1937, was reduced.

SEC. 212. Gross income.

(a) General rule: In the case of a nonresident alien individual gross income includes only the gross income from sources within the United States.

(b) Ships under foreign flag: The income of a nonresident alien individual which consists exclusively of earnings derived from the operation of a ship or ships documented under the laws of a foreign country which grants an equivalent exemption to citizens of the United States and to corporations organized in the United States shall not be included in gross income and shall be exempt from taxation under this title.

SEC. 213. Deductions.

(a) General rule: In the case of a nonresident alien individual the deductions shall be allowed only if and to the extent that they are connected with income from sources within the United States; and the proper apportionment and allocation of the deductions with respect to sources of income within and without the United States shall be determined as provided in section 119 under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

(b) Losses:

(1) The deduction, for losses not connected with the trade or business if incurred in transactions entered into for profit, allowed by section 23 (e) (2) shall be allowed whether or not connected with income from sources within the United States, but only if the profit, if such transaction had resulted in a profit, would be taxable under this title.

(2) The deduction, for losses of property not connected with the trade or business if arising from certain casualties or theft, allowed by section 23 (e) (3), shall be allowed whether or not connected with income from sources within the United States, but only if the loss is of property within the United States.

(c) Charitable, etc., contributions: The so-called charitable contribution deduction allowed by section 23 (o) shall be allowed whether or not connected with income from sources within the United States, but only as to contributions or gifts made to domestic corporations, or to community chests, funds, or foundations, created in the United States, or to the vocational rehabilitation fund.

SEC. 214. Credits against net income.

In the case of a nonresident alien individual the personal exemption allowed by section 25 (b) (1) of this title shall be only $800. The credit for dependents allowed by section 25 (b) (2) shall not be allowed in the case of a nonresident alien individual unless he is a resident of a contiguous country.

SEC. 215. Allowance of deductions and credits.

(a) Return to contain information: A nonresident alien individual shall receive the benefit of the deductions and credits allowed to him in this title only by filing or causing to be filed with the collector a true and accurate return of his total income received from all sources in the United States, in the manner prescribed in this title; including therein all the information which the Commissioner may deem necessary for the calculation of such deductions and credits.

(b) Tax withheld at source: The benefit of the personal exemption may, in the discretion of the Commissioner and under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, be received by a nonresident alien individual entitled thereto, by filing a claim therefor with the withholding agent.

SEC. 216. Credits against tax.

A nonresident alien individual shall not be allowed the credits against the tax for taxes of foreign countries and possessions of the United States allowed by section 131.

SEC. 217. Returns.

(a) Requirement: In the case of a nonresident alien individual the return, in lieu of the time prescribed in section 53 (a) (1), shall be made on or before the fifteenth day of the sixth month following the close of the fiscal year, or, if the return is made on the basis of the calendar year, then on or before the 15th day of June.

(b) Exemption from requirement: Subject to such conditions, limitations, and exceptions and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, nonresident alien individuals subject to the tax imposed by section 211 (a) may be exempted from the requirement of filing returns of such tax.

SEC. 218. Payment of tax.

(a) Time of payment: In the case of a nonresident alien individual the total amount of tax imposed by this title shall be paid, in lieu of the time prescribed in section 56 (a), on the 15th day of June following the close of the calendar year, or, if the return should be made on the basis of a fiscal year, then on the fifteenth day of the sixth month following the close of the fiscal year.

(b) Withholding at source: For withholding at source of tax on income of nonresident aliens, see section 143.

SEC. 219. Partnerships.

For the purpose of this title, a nonresident alien individual shall be considered as being engaged in a trade or business within the United States if the partnership of which he is a member is so engaged and as having an office or place of business within the United States if the partnership of which he is a member has such an office or place of business.

SUPPLEMENT I—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS

SEC. 231. Tax on foreign corporations.

(a) Nonresident corporations:

(1) Imposition of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year, in lieu of the tax imposed by sections 13 and 14, upon the amount received by every foreign corporation not engaged in trade or business within the United States and not having an office or place of business therein, from sources within the United States as interest (except interest on deposits with persons carrying on the banking business), dividends, rents, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensations, remunerations, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical gains, profits, and income, a tax of 25 percent of such amount, except that in the case of dividends the rate shall be 20 percent, and except that in the case of corporations organized under the laws of a contiguous country such rate of 20 percent with respect to dividends shall be reduced to such rate (not less than 5 percent) as may be provided by treaty with such country.

(2) Cross reference:

For inclusion in computation of tax of amount specified in shareholder's consent, see section 125.

(b) Resident corporations: A foreign corporation engaged in trade or business within the United States or having an office or place of business therein shall be taxable as provided in section 14 (c) (1).

(c) Gross income: In the case of a foreign corporation gross income includes only the gross income from sources within the United States.

(d) Ships under foreign flag: The income of a foreign corporation, which consists exclusively of earnings derived from the operation of a ship or ships documented under the laws of a foreign country which grants an equivalent exemption to citizens of the United States and to corporations organized in the United States, shall not be included in gross income and shall be exempt from taxation under this title.

SEC. 232. Deductions.

(a) In general: In the case of a foreign corporation the deductions shall be allowed only if and to extent that they are connected with income from sources within the United States; and the proper apportionment and allocation of the deductions with respect to sources within and without the United States shall be determined as provided in section 119, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

(b) Charitable, and so forth, contributions: The so-called charitable contribution deduction allowed by section 23 (q) shall be allowed whether or not connected with income from sources within the United States.

SEC. 233. Allowance of deductions and credits.

A foreign corporation shall receive the benefit of the deductions and credits allowed to it in this title only by filing or causing to be filed with the collector a true and accurate return of its total income received from all sources in the United States, in the manner prescribed in this title; including therein all the information which the Commissioner may deem necessary for the calculation of such deductions and credits.

SEC. 234. Credits against tax.

Foreign corporations shall not be allowed the credits against the tax for taxes of foreign countries and possessions of the United States allowed by section 131.

SEC. 235. Returns.

(a) Time of filing: In the case of a foreign corporation not having any office or place of business in the United States the return, in lieu of the time prescribed in section 53 (a) (1), shall be made on or before the fifteenth day of the sixth month following the close of the fiscal year, or, if the return is made on the basis of the calendar year then on or before the fifteenth day of June. If any foreign corporation has no office or place of business in the United States but has an agent in the United States, the return shall be made by the agent.

Exemption from requirement: Subject to such conditions, limitations, and exceptions and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, corporations subject to the tax imposed by section 231 (a) may be exempted from the requirement of filing returns of such tax.

SEC. 236. Payment of tax.

(a) Time of payment: In the case of a foreign corporation not having any office or place of business in the United States the total amount of tax imposed by this title shall be paid, in lieu of the time prescribed in section 56 (a), on the fifteenth day of June following the close of the calendar year, or, if the return should be made on the basis of a fiscal year, then on the fifteenth day of the sixth month following the close of the fiscal year.

(b) Withholding at source: For withholding at source of tax on income of foreign corporations, see section 144.

SEC. 237. Foreign insurance companies.

For special provisions relating to foreign insurance companies, see Supplement G.

SEC. 238. Affiliation.

A foreign corporation shall not be deemed to be affiliated with any other corporation within the meaning of section 141.

SUPPLEMENT J—POSSESSIONS OF THE UNITED STATES

SEC. 251. Income from sources within possessions of United States.

(a) General rule: In the case of citizens of the United States or domestic corporations, satisfying the following conditions, gross income means only gross income from sources within the United States—

(1) If 80 percent or more of the gross income of such citizen or domestic corporation (computed without the benefit of this section), for the 3-year period immediately preceding the close of the taxable year (or for such part of such period immediately preceding the close of such taxable year as may be applicable) was derived from sources within a possession of the United States; and

(2) If, in the case of such corporation, 50 percent or more of its gross income (computed without the benefit of this section) for such period or such part thereof was derived from the active conduct of a trade or business within a possession of the United States; or

(3) If, in the case of such citizen, 50 percent or more of his gross income (computed without the benefit of this section) for such period or such part thereof was derived from the active conduct of a trade or business within a possession of the United States either on his own account or as an employee or agent of another.

(b) Amounts received in United States: Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) there shall be included in gross income all amounts received by such citizens or corporations within the United States, whether derived from sources within or without the United States.

(c) Tax in case of corporations:

(1) Corporation tax: A domestic corporation entitled to the benefits of this section shall be subject to tax under section 13 or section 14 (b).

(2) Cross reference:

For inclusion in computation of tax amount specified in shareholder's consent, see section 125.

(d) Definition: As used in this section the term "possession of the United States" does not include the Virgin Islands of the United States.

(e) Deductions:

(1) Citizens of the United States entitled to the benefits of this section shall have the same deductions as are allowed by Supplement H in the case of a nonresident alien individual engaged in trade or business within the United States or having an office or place of business therein.

(2) Domestic corporations entitled to the benefits of this section shall have the same deductions as are allowed by Supplement I in the case of a foreign corporation engaged in trade or business within the United States or having an office or place of business therein.

(f) Credits against net income: A citizen of the United States entitled to the benefits of this section shall be allowed a personal exemption of only $800 and shall not be allowed the credit for dependents provided in section 25 (b) (2).

(g) Allowance of deductions and credits: Citizens of the United States and domestic corporations entitled to the benefits of this section shall receive the benefit of the deductions and credits allowed to them in this title only by filing or causing to be filed with the collector a true and accurate return of their total income received from all sources in the United States, in the manner prescribed in this title; including therein all the information which the Commissioner may deem necessary for the calculation of such deductions and credits.

(h) Credits against tax: Persons entitled to the benefits of this section shall not be allowed the credits against the tax for taxes of foreign countries and possessions of the United States allowed by section 131.

(i) Affiliation: A corporation entitled to the benefits of this section shall not be deemed to be affiliated with any other corporation within the meaning of section 141.

SEC. 252. Citizens of possessions of United States.

(a) Any individual who is a citizen of any possession of the United States (but not otherwise a citizen of the United States) and who is not a resident of the United States shall be subject to taxation under this title only as to income derived from sources within the United States, and in such case the tax shall be computed and paid in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as in the case of other persons who are taxable only as to income derived from such sources.

(b) Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter or amend the provisions of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes," approved July 12, 1921, relating to the imposition of income taxes in the Virgin Islands of the United States.

SUPPLEMENT K—CHINA TRADE ACT CORPORATION

SEC. 261. Rate of tax.

(a) Corporation tax: A corporation organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, 42 Stat. 849 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 15, ch. 4), shall be subject to tax under section 13 or section 14 (b).

(b) Cross reference:

For inclusion in computation of tax of amount specified in shareholder's consent, see section 125.

SEC. 262. Credit against net income.

(a) Allowance of credit: For the purpose only of the taxes imposed by sections 13, 14, and 600 of this title and section 106 of the Revenue Act of 1935 there shall be allowed, in the case of a corporation organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, in addition to the credits against net income otherwise allowed such corporation, a credit against the net income of an amount equal to the proportion of the net income derived from sources within China (determined in a similar manner to that provided in sec. 119) which the par value of the shares of stock of the corporation owned on the last day of the taxable year by (1) persons resident in China, the United States, or possessions of the United States, and (2) individual citizens of the United States or China wherever resident, bears to the par value of the whole number of shares of stock of the corporation outstanding on such date: Provided, That in no case shall the diminution, by reason of such credit, of the tax imposed by such section 13 or 14 (computed without regard to this section) exceed the amount of the special dividend certified under subsection (b) of this section; and in no case shall the diminution, by reason of such credit, of the tax imposed by such section 106 or 600 (computed without regard to this section) exceed the amount by which such special dividend exceeds the diminution permitted by this section in the tax imposed by such section 13 or 14.

(b) Special dividend: Such credit shall not be allowed unless the Secretary of Commerce has certified to the Commissioner—

(1) The amount which, during the year ending on the date fixed by law for filing the return, the corporation has distributed as a special dividend to or for the benefit of such persons as on the last day of the taxable year were resident in China, the United States, or possessions of the United States, or were individual citizens of the United States or China, and owned shares of stock of the corporation;

(2) That such special dividend was in addition to all other amounts, payable or to be payable to such persons or for their benefit, by reason of their interest in the corporation; and

(3) That such distribution has been made to or for the benefit of such persons in proportion to the par value of the shares of stock of the corporation owned by each; except that if the corporation has more than one class of stock, the certificates shall contain a statement that the articles of incorporation provide a method for the apportionment of such special dividend among such persons, and that the amount certified has been distributed in accordance with the method so provided.

(c) Ownership of stock: For the purposes of this section shares of stock of a corporation shall be considered to be owned by the person in whom the equitable right to the income from such shares is in good faith vested.

(d) Definition of China: As used in this section the term "China" shall have the same meaning as when used in the China Trade Act, 1922.

SEC. 263. Credits against the tax.

A corporation organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, shall not be allowed the credits against the tax for taxes of foreign countries and possessions of the United States allowed by section 131.

SEC. 264. Affiliation.

A corporation organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, shall not be deemed to be affiliated with any other corporation within the meaning of section 141.

SEC. 265. Income of shareholders.

For exclusion of dividends from gross income, see section 116.

SUPPLEMENT I—ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION OF DEFICIENCIES

SEC. 271. Definition of deficiency.

As used in this title in respect of a tax imposed by this title "deficiency" means—

(a) The amount by which the tax imposed by this title exceeds the amount shown as the tax by the taxpayer upon his return; but the amount so shown on the return shall first be increased by the amounts previously assessed (or collected without assessment) as a deficiency, and decreased by the amounts previously abated, credited, refunded, or otherwise repaid in respect of such tax; or

(b) If no amount is shown as the tax by the taxpayer upon his return, or if no return is made by the taxpayer, then the amount by which the tax exceeds the amounts previously assessed (or collected without assessment) as a deficiency; but such amounts previously assessed, or collected without assessment, shall first be decreased by the amounts previously abated, credited, refunded, or otherwise repaid in respect of such tax.

SEC. 272. Procedure in general.

(a) (1) Petition to Board of Tax Appeals: If in the case of any taxpayer, the Commissioner determines that there is a deficiency in respect of the tax imposed by this title, the Commissioner is authorized to send notice of such deficiency to the taxpayer by registered mail. Within 90 days after such notice is mailed (not counting Sunday or a legal holiday in the District of Columbia as the ninetieth day), the taxpayer may file a petition with the Board of Tax Appeals for a redetermination of the deficiency. No assessment of a deficiency in respect of the tax imposed by this title and no distraint or proceeding in court for its collection shall be made, begun, or prosecuted until such notice has been mailed to the taxpayer, nor until the expiration of such 90-day period, nor, if a petition has been filed with the Board, until the decision of the Board has become final. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 3653 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code the making of such assessment or the beginning of such proceeding or distraint during the time such prohibition is in force may be enjoined by a proceeding in the proper court. In the case of a joint return filed by husband and wife such notice of deficiency may be a single joint notice, except that if the Commissioner has been notified by either spouse that separate residences have been established, then, in lieu of the single joint notice, duplicate originals of the joint notice must be sent by registered mail to each spouse at his last known address.

(2) Cross references.—

For exceptions to the restrictions imposed by this subsection, see—

Subsection (d) of this section, relating to waivers by the taxpayer;

Subsection (f) of this section, relating to notifications of mathematical errors appearing upon the face of the return;

Section 273, relating to jeopardy assessments;

Section 274, relating to bankruptcy and receiverships; and

Section 1145 of the Internal Revenue Code, relating to assessment or collection of the amount of the deficiency determined by the Board pending court review.

(b) Collection of deficiency found by Board: If the taxpayer files a petition with the Board, the entire amount redetermined as the deficiency by the decision of the Board which has become final shall be assessed and shall be paid upon notice and demand from the collector. No part of the amount determined as a deficiency by the Commissioner but disallowed as such by the decision of the Board which has become final shall be assessed or be collected by distraint or by proceeding in court with or without assessment.

(c) Failure to file petition: If the taxpayer does not file a petition with the Board within the time prescribed in subsection (a) of this section, the deficiency, notice of which has been mailed to the taxpayer, shall be assessed, and shall be paid upon notice and demand from the collector.

(d) Waiver of restrictions: The taxpayer shall at any time have the right, by a signed notice in writing filed with the Commissioner, to waive the restrictions provided in subsection (a) of this section on the assessment and collection of the whole or any part of the deficiency.

(e) Increase of deficiency after notice mailed: The Board shall have jurisdiction to redetermine the correct amount of the deficiency even if the amount so redetermined is greater than the amount of the deficiency, notice of which has been mailed to the taxpayer, and to determine whether any penalty, additional amount or addition to the tax should be assessed—if claim therefor is asserted by the Commissioner at or before the hearing or a rehearing.

(f) Further deficiency letters restricted: If the Commissioner has mailed to the taxpayer notice of a deficiency as provided in subsection (a) of this section, and the taxpayer files a petition with the Board within the time prescribed in such subsection, the Commissioner shall have no right to determine any additional deficiency in respect of the same taxable year, except in the case of fraud, and except as provided in subsection (e) of this section, relating to assertion of greater deficiencies before the Board, or in section 273 (c), relating to the making of jeopardy assessments. If the taxpayer is notified that, on account of a mathematical error appearing upon the face of the return, an amount of tax in excess of that shown upon the return is due, and that an assessment of the tax has been or will be made on the basis of what would have been the correct amount of tax but for the mathematical error, such notice shall not be considered (for the purposes of this subsection, or of subsection (a) of this section, prohibiting assessment and collection until notice of deficiency has been mailed, or of section 322 (c), prohibiting credits or refunds after petition to the Board of Tax Appeals) as a notice of a deficiency, and the taxpayer shall have no night to file a petition with the Board based on such notice, nor shall such assessment or collection be prohibited by the provisions of subsection (a) of this section.

(g) Jurisdiction over other taxable years: The Board in redetermining a deficiency in respect of any taxable year shall consider such facts with relation to the taxes for other taxable years as may be necessary correctly to redetermine the amount of such deficiency, but in so doing shall have no jurisdiction to determine whether or not the tax for any other taxable year has been overpaid or underpaid.

(h) Final decisions of Board: For the purposes of this title the date on which a decision of the Board becomes final shall be determined according to the provisions of section 1140 of the Internal Revenue Code.

(i) Prorating of deficiency to installments: If the taxpayer has elected to pay the tax in installments and a deficiency has been assessed, the deficiency shall be prorated to the four installments. Except as provided in section 273 (relating to jeopardy assessments), that part of the deficiency so prorated to any installment the date for payment of which has not arrived, shall be collected at the same time as and as part of such installment. That part of the deficiency so prorated to any installment the date for payment of which has arrived, shall be paid upon notice and demand from the collector.

(j) Extension of time for payment of deficiencies: Where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that the payment of a deficiency upon the date prescribed for the payment thereof will result in undue hardship to the taxpayer the Commissioner, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may grant an extension for the payment of such deficiency for a period not in excess of 18 months, and, in exceptional cases, for a further period not in excess of 12 months. If an extension is granted, the Commissioner may require the taxpayer to furnish a bond in such amount, not exceeding double the amount of the deficiency, and with such sureties, as the Commissioner deems necessary, conditioned upon the payment of the deficiency in accordance with the terms of the extension. No extension shall be granted if the deficiency is due to negligence, to intentional disregard of rules and regulations, or to fraud with intent to evade tax.

(k) Address for notice of deficiency: In the absence of notice to the Commissioner under section 312 (a) of the existence of a fiduciary relationship, notice of a deficiency in respect of a tax imposed by this title, if mailed to the taxpayer at his last known address, shall be sufficient for the purposes of this title even if such taxpayer is deceased, or is under a legal disability, or, in the case of a corporation, has terminated its existence.

(l) Provision for bond: If the taxpayer, upon receipt of a notice of deficiency as provided in subsection (a), desires to petition the Board of Tax Appeals for a redetermination of any portion or all of such deficiency, he shall, as a condition precedent to the filing of such petition, furnish to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue an acceptable bond in a sum fixed by the Commissioner, not exceeding double the amount of the deficiency as to which the appeal is taken, conditioned upon the payment of the deficiency as finally determined, together with any interest, additional amounts, or additions to the tax provided for by law.

SEC. 273. Jeopardy assessments.

(a) Authority for making: If the Commissioner believes that the assessment or collection of a deficiency will be jeopardized by delay, he shall immediately assess such deficiency (together with all interest, additional amounts, or additions to the tax provided for by law) and notice and demand shall be made by the collector for the payment thereof.

(b) Deficiency letters: If the jeopardy assessment is made before any notice in respect of the tax to which the jeopardy assessment relates has been mailed under section 272 (a), then the Commissioner shall mail a notice under such subsection within 60 days after the making of the assessment.

(c) Amount assessable before decision of board: The jeopardy assessment may be made in respect of a deficiency greater or less than that notice of which has been mailed to the taxpayer, despite the provisions of section 272 (f) prohibiting the determination of additional deficiencies, and whether or not the taxpayer has theretofore filed a petition with the Board of Tax Appeals. The Commissioner may, at any time before the decision of the Board is rendered, abate such assessment, or any unpaid portion thereof, to the extent that he believes the assessment to be excessive in amount. The Commissioner shall notify the Board of the amount of such assessment, or abatement, if the petition is filed with the Board before the making of the assessment or is subsequently filed, and the Board shall have jurisdiction to redetermine the entire amount of the deficiency and of all amounts assessed at the same time in connection therewith.

(d) Amount assessable after decision of Board: If the jeopardy assessment is made after the decision of the Board is rendered such assessment may be made only in respect of the deficiency determined by the Board in its decision.

(e) Expiration of right to assess: A jeopardy assessment may not be made after the decision of the Board has become final or after the taxpayer has filed a petition for review of the decision of the Board.

(f) Bond to stay collection: When a jeopardy assessment has been made the taxpayer, within 10 days after notice and demand from the collector for the payment of the amount of the assessment, may obtain a stay of collection of the whole or any part of the amount of the assessment by filing with the collector a bond in such amount, not exceeding double the amount as to which the stay is desired, and with such sureties, as the collector deems necessary, conditioned upon the payment of so much of the amount, the collection of which is stayed by the bond, as is not abated by a decision of the Board which has become final, together with interest thereon as provided in section 297. If any portion of the jeopardy assessment is abated by the Commissioner before the decision of the Board is rendered, the bond shall, at the request of the taxpayer, be proportionately reduced.

(g) Same—further conditions: If the bond is given before the taxpayer has filed his petition with the Board under section 272 (a), the bond shall contain a further condition that if a petition is not filed within the period provided in such subsection, then the amount the collection of which is stayed by the bond will be paid on notice and demand at any time after the expiration of such period, together with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date of the jeopardy notice and demand to the date of notice and demand under this subsection.

(h) Waiver of stay: Upon the filing of the bond the collection of so much of the amount assessed as is covered by the bond shall be stayed. The taxpayer shall have the right to waive such stay at any time in respect of the whole or any part of the amount covered by the bond, and if as a result of such waiver any part of the amount covered by the bond is paid, then the bond shall, at the request of the taxpayer, be proportionately reduced. If the Board determines that the amount assessed is greater than the amount which should have been assessed, then when the decision of the Board is rendered the bond shall, at the request of the taxpayer, be proportionately reduced.

(i) Collection of unpaid amounts: When the petition has been filed with the Board and when the amount which should have been assessed has been determined by a decision of the Board which has become final, then any unpaid portion, the collection of which has been stayed by the bond, shall be collected as part of the tax upon notice and demand from the collector, and any remaining portion of the assessment shall be abated. If the amount already collected exceeds the amount determined as the amount which should have been assessed, such excess shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer as provided in section 322, without the filing of claim therefor. If the amount determined as the amount which should have been assessed is greater than the amount actually assessed, then the difference shall be assessed and shall be collected as part of the tax upon notice and demand from the collector.

(j) Claims in abatement: No claim in abatement shall be filed in respect of any assessment in respect of any tax imposed by this title.

SEC. 274. Bankruptcy and receiverships.

(a) Immediate assessment: Upon the adjudication of bankruptcy of any taxpayer in any bankruptcy proceeding or the appointment of a receiver for any taxpayer in any receivership proceeding before any court of the United States or of any State or Territory or of the District of Columbia, any deficiency (together with all interest, additional amounts, or additions to the tax provided for by law) determined by the Commissioner in respect of a tax imposed by this title upon such taxpayer shall, despite the restrictions imposed by section 272 (a) upon assessments be immediately assessed if such deficiency has not theretofore been assessed in accordance with law. In such cases the trustee in bankruptcy or receiver shall give notice in writing to the Commissioner of the adjudication of bankruptcy or the appointment of the receiver, and the running of the statute of limitations on the making of assessments shall be suspended for the period from the date of adjudication in bankruptcy or the appointment of the receiver to a date 30 days after the date upon which the notice from the trustee or receiver is received by the Commissioner; but the suspension under this sentence shall in no case be for a period in excess of 2 years. Claims for the deficiency and such interest, additional amounts and additions to the tax may be presented, for adjudication in accordance with law, to the court before which the bankruptcy or receivership proceeding is pending, despite the pendency of proceedings for the redetermination of the deficiency in pursuance of a petition to the Board; but no petition for any such redetermination shall be filed with the Board after the adjudication of bankruptcy or the appointment of the receiver.

(b) Unpaid claims: Any portion of the claim allowed in such bankruptcy or receivership proceeding which is unpaid shall be paid by the taxpayer upon notice and demand from the collector after the termination of such proceeding, and may be collected by distraint or proceeding in court within 6 years after termination of such proceeding. Extensions of time for such payment may be had in the same manner and subject to the same provisions and limitations as are provided in section 272 (j) and section 296 in the case of a deficiency in a tax imposed by this title.

SEC. 275. Period of limitation upon assessment and collection.

Except as provided in section 276—

(a) General rule: The amount of income taxes imposed by this title shall be assessed within 3 years after the return was filed, and no proceeding in court without assessment for the collection of such taxes shall be begun after the expiration of such period.

(b) Request for prompt assessment: In the case of income received during the lifetime of a decedent, or by his estate during the period of administration, or by a corporation, the tax shall be assessed, and any proceeding in court without assessment for the collection of such tax shall be begun, within 18 months after written request therefor (filed after the return is made) by the executor, administrator, or other fiduciary representing the estate of such decedent, or by the corporation, but not after the expiration of 3 years after the return was filed. This subsection shall not apply in the case of a corporation unless—

(1) Such written request notifies the Commissioner that the corporation contemplates dissolution at or before the expiration of such 18 months' period; and

(2) The dissolution is in good faith begun before the expiration of such 18 months' period; and

(3) The dissolution is completed.

(c) Omission from gross income: If the taxpayer omits from gross income an amount properly includible therein which is in excess of 25 percent of the amount of gross income stated in the return, the tax may be assessed, or a proceeding in court for the collection of such tax may be begun without assessment, at any time within 5 years after the return was filed.

(d) Shareholders of foreign personal holding companies: If the taxpayer omits from gross income an amount properly includible therein under section 337 (b) (relating to the inclusion in the gross income of United States shareholders of their distributive shares of the undistributed Supplement P net income of a foreign personal holding company) the tax may be assessed, or a proceeding in court for the collection of such tax may be begun without assessment, at any time within 7 years after the return was filed.

(e) Distributions in liquidation to shareholders: If the taxpayer omits from gross income an amount properly includible therein under section 115 (c) as an amount distributed in liquidation of a corporation, other than a foreign personal holding company, the tax may be assessed, or a proceeding in court for the collection of such tax may be begun without assessment, at any time within 4 years after the return was filed.

(f) For the purposes of subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e), a return filed before the last day prescribed by law for the filing thereof shall be considered as filed on such last day.

(g) Corporation and shareholder: If a corporation makes no return of the tax imposed by this title, but each of the shareholders includes in his return his distributive share of the net income of the corporation, then the tax of the corporation shall be assessed within 4 years after the last date on which any such shareholder's return was filed.

SEC. 276. Same—exceptions.

(a) False return or no return: In the case of a false or fraudulent return with intent to evade tax or of a failure to file a return the tax may be assessed, or a proceeding in court for the collection of such tax may be begun without assessment, at any time.

(b) Waiver: Where before the expiration of the time prescribed in section 275 for the assessment of the tax, both the Commissioner and the taxpayer have consented in writing to its assessment after such time, the tax may be assessed at any time prior to the expiration of the period agreed upon. The period so agreed upon may be extended by subsequent agreements in writing made before the expiration of the period previously agreed upon.

(c) Collection after assessment: Where the assessment of any income tax imposed by this title has been made within the period of limitation properly applicable thereto, such tax may be collected by distraint or by a proceeding in court, but only if begun (1) within 6 years after the assessment of the tax, or (2) prior to the expiration of any period for collection agreed upon in writing by the Commissioner and the taxpayer before the expiration of such 6-year period. The period so agreed upon may be extended by subsequent agreements in writing made before the expiration of the period previously agreed upon.

SEC. 277. Suspension of running of statute.

The running of the statute of limitations provided in section 275 or 276 on the making of assessments and the beginning of distraint or a proceeding in court for collection, in respect of any deficiency, shall (after the mailing of a notice under section 272 (a)) be suspended for the period during which the Commissioner is prohibited from making the assessment or beginning distraint or a proceeding in court (and in any event, if a proceeding in respect of the deficiency is placed on the docket of the Board, until the decision of the Board becomes final), and for 60 days thereafter.

SUPPLEMENT M—INTEREST AND ADDITIONS TO THE TAX

SEC. 291. Failure to file return.

In case of any failure to make and file a return required by this title, within the time prescribed by law or prescribed by the Commissioner in pursuance of law, unless it is shown that such failure is due to reasonable cause and not due to willful neglect, there shall be added to the tax: 5 percent if the failure is for not more than 30 days with an additional 5 percent for each additional 30 days or fraction thereof during which such failure continues, not exceeding 25 percent in the aggregate. The amount so added to any tax shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner and as a part of the tax unless the tax has been paid before the discovery of the neglect, in which case the amount so added shall be collected in the same manner as the tax. The amount added to the tax under this section shall be in lieu of the 25 percent addition to the tax provided in section 3612 (d) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code.

SEC. 292. Interest on deficiencies.

Interest upon the amount determined as a deficiency shall be assessed at the same time as the deficiency, shall be paid upon notice and demand from the collector, and shall be collected as a part of the tax, at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the date prescribed for the payment of the tax (or, if the tax is paid in installments, from the date prescribed for the payment of the first installment) to the date the deficiency is assessed, or, in the case of a waiver under section 272 (d), to the thirtieth day after the filing of such waiver or to the date the deficiency is assessed whichever is the earlier.

SEC. 293. Additions to the tax in case of deficiency.

(a) Negligence: If any part of any deficiency is due to negligence, or intentional disregard of rules and regulations but without intent to defraud, 5 percent of the total amount of the deficiency (in addition to such deficiency) shall be assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner as if it were a deficiency, except that the provisions of section 272 (i), relating to the prorating of a deficiency, and of section 292, relating to interest on deficiencies, shall not be applicable.

(b) Fraud: If any part of any deficiency is due to fraud with intent to evade tax, then 50 percent of the total amount of the deficiency (in addition to such deficiency) shall be so assessed, collected, and paid, in lieu of the 50 percent addition to the tax provided in section 3612 (d) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code.

SEC. 294. Additions to the tax in case of nonpayment.

(a) Tax shown on return.—

(1) General rule: Where the amount determined by the taxpayer as the tax imposed by this title, or any installment thereof, or any part of such amount or installment, is not paid on or before the date prescribed for its payment, there shall be collected as a part of the tax, interest upon such unpaid amount at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the date prescribed for its payment until it is paid.

(2) If extension granted: Where an extension of time for payment of the amount so determined as the tax by the taxpayer, or any installment thereof, has been granted, and the amount the time for payment of which has been extended, and the interest thereon determined under section 295, is not paid in full prior to the expiration of the period of the extension, then, in lieu of the interest provided for in paragraph (1) of this subsection, interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum shall be collected on such unpaid amount from the date of the expiration of the period of the extension until it is paid.

(b) Deficiency: Where a deficiency, or any interest or additional amounts assessed in connection therewith under section 292, or under section 293, or any addition to the tax in case of delinquency provided for in section 291, is not paid in full within 10 days from the date of notice and demand from the collector, there shall be collected as part of the tax, interest upon the unpaid amount at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the date of such notice and demand until it is paid. If any part of a deficiency prorated to any unpaid installment under section 272 (i) is not paid in full on or before the date prescribed for the payment of such installment, there shall be collected as part of the tax interest upon the unpaid amount at the rate of 6 percent per annum from such date until it is paid.

(c) Filing of jeopardy bond: If a bond is filed, as provided in section 273, the provisions of subsection (b) of this section shall not apply to the amount covered by the bond.

SEC. 295. Time extended for payment of tax shown on return.

If the time for payment of the amount determined as the tax by the taxpayer, or any installment thereof, is extended under the authority of section 56 (c), there shall be collected as a part of such amount, interest thereon at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the date when such payment should have been made if no extension had been granted, until the expiration of the period of the extension.

SEC. 296. Time extended for payment of deficiency.

If the time for the payment of any part of a deficiency is extended, there shall be collected, as a part of the tax, interest on the part of the deficiency the time for payment of which is so extended, at the rate of 6 percent per annum for the period of the extension, and no other interest shall be collected on such part of the deficiency for such period. If the part of the deficiency the time for payment of which is so extended is not paid in accordance with the terms of the extension, there shall be collected, as a part of the tax, interest on such unpaid amount at the rate of 6 percent per annum for the period from the time fixed by the terms of the extension for its payment until it is paid, and no other interest shall be collected on such unpaid amount for such period.

SEC. 297. Interest in case of jeopardy assessments.

In the case of the amount collected under section 273 (i) there shall be collected at the same time as such amount, and as a part of the tax, interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum upon such amount from the date of the jeopardy notice and demand to the date of notice and demand under section 273 (i), or, in the case of the amount collected in excess of the amount of the jeopardy assessment, interest as provided in section 292. If the amount included in the notice and demand from the collector under section 273 (i) is not paid in full within 10 days after such notice and demand, then there shall be collected, as part of the tax, interest upon the unpaid amount at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the date of such notice and demand until it is paid.

SEC. 298. Bankruptcy and receiverships.

If the unpaid portion of the claim allowed in a bankruptcy or receivership proceeding, as provided in section 274, is not paid in full within 10 days from the date of notice and demand from the collector, then there shall be collected as a part of such amount interest upon the unpaid portion thereof at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the date of such notice and demand until payment.

SEC. 299. Removal of property or departure from United States.

For additions to tax in case of leaving the United States or concealing property in such manner as to hinder collection of the tax, see section 146.

SUPPLEMENT N—CLAIMS AGAINST TRANSFEREES AND FIDUCIARIES

SEC. 311. Transferred assets.

(a) Method of collection: The amounts of the following liabilities shall, except as hereinafter in this section provided, be assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner and subject to the same provisions and limitations as in the case of a deficiency in a tax imposed by this title (including the provisions in case of delinquency in payment after notice and demand, the provisions authorizing distraint and proceedings in court for collection, and the provisions prohibiting claims and suits for refunds):

(1) Transferees: The liability, at law or in equity, of a transferee of property of a taxpayer, in respect of the tax (including interest, additional amounts, and additions to the tax provided by law) imposed upon the taxpayer by this title.

(2) Fiduciaries: The liability of a fiduciary under section 3467 of the Revised Statutes in respect of the payment of any such tax from the state of the taxpayer.

Any such liability may be either as to the amount of tax shown on the return or as to any deficiency in tax.

(b) Period of limitation: The period of limitation for assessment of any such liability of a transferee or fiduciary shall be as follows:

(1) In the case of the liability of an initial transferee of the property of the taxpayer, within 1 year after the expiration of the period of limitation for assessment against the taxpayer;

(2) In the case of the liability of a transferee of a transferee of the property of the taxpayer, within 1 year after the expiration of the period of limitation for assessment against the preceding transferee, but only if within 3 years after the expiration of the period of limitation for assessment against the taxpayer—except that if before the expiration of the period of limitation for the assessment of the liability of the transferee, the court proceeding for the collection of the tax or liability in respect thereof has been begun against the taxpayer or last preceding transferee, respectively, then the period of limitation for assessment of the liability oft he transferee shall expire 1 year after the return of execution in the court proceeding.

(3) In the case of the liability of a fiduciary, not later than 1 year after the liability arises or not later than the expiration of the period for collection of the tax in respect of which such liability arises, whichever is the later;

(4) Where before the expiration of the time prescribed in paragraph (1), (2), or (3) for the assessment of the liability, both the Commissioner and the transferee or fiduciary have consented in writing to its assessment after such time, the liability may be assessed at any time prior to the expiration of the period agreed upon. The period so agreed upon may be extended by subsequent agreements in writing made before the expiration of the period previously agreed upon.

(c) Period for assessment against taxpayer: For the purposes of this section, if the taxpayer is deceased, or in the case of a corporation, has terminated its existence, the period of limitation for assessment against the taxpayer shall be the period that would be in effect had death or termination of existence not occurred.

(d) Suspension of running of statute of limitations: The running of the statute of limitations upon the assessment of the liability of a transferee or fiduciary shall, after the mailing to the transferee or fiduciary of the notice provided for in section 272 (a), be suspended for the period during which the Commissioner is prohibited from making the assessment in respect of the liability of the transferee or fiduciary (and in any event, if a proceeding in respect of the liability is placed on the docket of the Board, until the decision of the Board becomes final), and for 60 days thereafter.

(e) Address for notice of liability: In the absence of notice to the Commissioner under section 312 (b) of the existence of a fiduciary relationship, notice of liability enforceable under this section in respect of a tax imposed by this title, if mailed to the person subject to the liability at his last known address, shall be sufficient for the purposes of this title even if such person is deceased, or is under a legal disability, or, in the case of a corporation, has terminated its existence.

(f) Definition of "transferee": As used in this section, the term "transferee" includes heir, legatee, devisee, and distributee.

SEC. 312. Notice of fiduciary relationship.

(a) Fiduciary of taxpayer: Upon notice to the Commissioner that any person is acting in a fiduciary capacity such fiduciary shall assume the powers, rights, duties, and privileges of the taxpayer in respect of a tax imposed by this title (except as otherwise specifically provided and except that the tax shall be collected from the estate of the taxpayer), until notice is given that the fiduciary capacity has terminated.

(b) Fiduciary of transferee: Upon notice to the Commissioner that any person is acting in a fiduciary capacity for a person subject to the liability specified in section 311, the fiduciary shall assume, on behalf of such person, the powers, rights, duties, and privileges of such person under such section (except that the liability shall be collected from the estate of such person), until notice is given that the fiduciary capacity has terminated.

(c) Manner of notice: Notice under subsection (a) or (b) shall be given in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

SUPPLEMENT O—OVERPAYMENTS

SEC. 321. Overpayment of installment.

If the taxpayer has paid as an installment of the tax more than the amount determined to be the correct amount of such installment, the overpayment shall be credited against the unpaid installments, if any. If the amount already paid, whether or not on the basis of installments, exceeds the amount determined to be the correct amount of the tax, the overpayment shall be credited or refunded as provided in section 322.

SEC. 322. Refunds and credits.

(a) Authorization: Where there has been an overpayment of any tax imposed by this title, the amount of such overpayment, with interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum, shall be credited against any income, war-profits, or excess-profits tax or installment thereof then due from the taxpayer, and any balance shall be refunded immediately to the taxpayer.

(b) Limitation on allowance:

(1) Period of limitation: Unless a claim for credit or refund is filed by the taxpayer within 3 years from the time the return was filed by the taxpayer or within 2 years from the time the tax was paid, no credit or refund shall be allowed or made after the expiration of whichever of such periods expires the later. If no return is filed by the taxpayer, then no credit or refund shall be allowed or made after 2 years from the time the tax was paid, unless before the expiration of such period a claim therefor is filed by the taxpayer.

(2) Limit on amount of credit or refund: The amount of the credit or refund of the tax shall not exceed the portion of the tax paid during the 3 years immediately preceding the filing of the claim, or, if no claim was filed, then during the 3 years immediately preceding the allowance of the credit or refund.

(c) Effect of petition to Board: If the Commissioner has mailed to the taxpayer a notice of deficiency under section 272 (a) and if the taxpayer files a petition with the Board of Tax Appeals within the time prescribed in such subsection, no credit or refund in respect of the tax for the taxable year in respect of which the Commissioner has determined the deficiency shall be allowed or made and no suit by the taxpayer for the recovery of any part of such tax shall be instituted in any court except—

(1) As to overpayments determined by a decision of the Board which has become final; and

(2) As to any amount collected in excess of an amount computed in accordance with the decision of the Board which has become final; and

(3) As to any amount collected after the period of limitation upon the beginning of distraint or a proceeding in court for collection has expired; but in any such claim for credit or refund or in any such suit for refund the decision of the Board which has become final, as to whether such period has expired before the notice of deficiency was mailed, shall be conclusive.

(d) Overpayment found by Board: If the Board finds that there is no deficiency and further finds that the taxpayer has made an overpayment of tax in respect of the taxable year in respect of which the Commissioner determined the deficiency, the Board shall have jurisdiction to determine the amount of such overpayment, and such amount shall, when the decision of the Board has become final, be credited or refunded to the taxpayer. No such credit or refund shall be made of any portion of the tax unless the Board determines as part of its decision that such portion was paid (1) within 3 years before the filing of the claim or the filing of the petition, whichever is earlier, or (2) after the mailing of the notice of deficiency.

(e) Tax withheld at source: For refund or credit in case of excessive withholding at the source, see section 143 (f).

SUPPLEMENT P—FOREIGN PERSONAL HOLDING COMPANIES

SEC. 331. Definition of foreign personal holding company:

(a) General rule: For the purposes of this title the term "foreign personal holding company" means any foreign corporation if—

(1) Gross-income requirement: At least 60 percent of its gross income (as defined in section 334 (a)) for the taxable year is foreign personal holding company income as defined in section 332; but if the corporation is a foreign personal holding company with respect to any taxable year ending after August 26, 1937, then, for each subsequent taxable year, the minimum percentage shall be 50 percent in lieu of 60 percent, until a taxable year during the whole of which the stock ownership required by paragraph (2) does not exist, or until the expiration of 3 consecutive taxable years in each of which less than 50 percent of the gross income is foreign personal holding company income. For the purposes of this paragraph there shall be included in the gross income the amount includible therein as a dividend by reason of the application of section 334 (c) (2); and

(2) Stock ownership requirement: At any time during the taxable year more than 50 percent in value of its outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for not more than five individuals who are citizens or residents of the United States, hereinafter called "United States group."

(b) Exceptions: The term "foreign personal holding company" does not include a corporation exempt from taxation under section 101.

SEC. 332. Foreign personal holding company income.

For the purposes of this title the term "foreign personal holding company income" means the portion of the gross income determined for the purposes of section 331 (a) (1), which consists of:

(a) Dividends, interest, royalties, annuities.

(b) Stock and securities transactions: Except in the case of regular dealers in stock or securities, gains from the sale or exchange of stock or securities.

(c) Commodities transactions: Gains from futures transactions in any commodity on or subject to the rules of a board of trade or commodity exchange. This subsection shall not apply to gains by a producer, processor, merchant, or handler of the commodity which arises out of bona fide hedging transactions reasonably necessary to the conduct of its business in the manner in which such business is customarily and usually conducted by others.

(d) Estates and trusts: Amounts includible in computing the net income of the corporation under Supplement E; and gains from the sale or other disposition of any interest in an estate or trust.

(e) Personal service contracts: (1) Amounts received under a contract under which the corporation is to furnish personal services; if some person other than the corporation has the right to designate (by name or by description) the individual who is to perform the services, or if the individual who is to perform the services is designated (by name or by description) in the contract; and (2) amounts received from the sale or other disposition of such a contract. This subsection shall apply with respect to amounts received for services under a particular contract only if at some time during the taxable year 25 percent or more in value of the outstanding stock of the corporation is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for the individual who has performed, is to perform, or may be designated (by name or by description) as the one to perform, such services.

(f) Use of corporation property by shareholder: Amounts received as compensation (however designated and from whomsoever received) for the use of, or right to use, property of the corporation in any case where, at any time during the taxable year, 25 percent or more in value of the outstanding stock of the corporation is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for an individual entitled to the use of the property; whether such right is obtained directly from the corporation or by means of a sublease or other arrangement.

(g) Rents: Rents, unless constituting 50 percent or more of the gross income. For the purposes of this subsection the term "rents" means compensation, however designated, for the use of, or right to use, property; but does not include amounts constituting foreign personal holding company income under subsection (f).

SEC. 333. Stock ownership.

(a) Constructive ownership: For the purpose of determining whether a foreign corporation is a foreign personal holding company, insofar as such determination is based on stock ownership under section 331 (a) (2), section 332 (e), or section 332 (f)—

(1) Stock not owned by individual: Stock owned, directly or indirectly, by or for a corporation, partnership, estate, or trust, shall be considered as being owned proportionately by its shareholders, partners, or beneficiaries.

(2) Family and partnership ownership: An individual shall be considered as owning the stock owned, directly or indirectly, by or for his family, or by or for his partner. For the purposes of this paragraph the family of an individual includes only his brothers and sisters (whether by the whole or half blood), spouse, ancestors, and lineal descendants.

(3) Options: If any person has an option to acquire stock, such stock shall be considered as owned by such person. For the purposes of this paragraph an option to acquire such an option, and each one of a series of such options, shall be considered as an option to acquire such stock.

(4) Application of family-partnership and option rules: Paragraphs (2) and (3) shall be applied:

(A) For the purposes of the stock-ownership requirement provided in section 331 (a) (2), if, but only if, the effect is to make the corporation a foreign personal holding company;

(B) For the purposes of section 332 (e) (relating to personal-service contracts), or of section 332 (f) (relating to the use of property by shareholders), if, but only if, the effect is to make the amounts therein referred to includible under such subsection as foreign personal holding company income.

(5) Constructive ownership as actual ownership: Stock constructively owned by a person by reason of the application of paragraph (1) or (3) shall, for the purpose of applying paragraph (1) or (2), be treated as actually owned by such person; but stock constructively owned by an individual by reason of the application of paragraph (2) shall not be treated as owned by him for the purpose of again applying such paragraph in order to make another the constructive owner of such stock.

(6) Option rule in lieu of family and partnership rule: If stock may be considered as owned by an individual under either paragraph (2) or (3) it shall be considered as owned by him under paragraph (3).

(b) Convertible securities: Outstanding securities convertible into stock (whether or not convertible during the taxable year) shall be considered as outstanding stock—

(1) For the purpose of the stock-ownership requirement provided in section 331 (a) (2), but only if the effect of the inclusion of all such securities is to make the corporation a foreign personal holding company;

(2) For the purpose of section 332 (e) (relating to personal-service contracts), but only if the effect of the inclusion of all such securities is to make the amounts therein referred to includible under such subsection as foreign personal holding company income; and

(3) For the purpose of section 332 (f) (relating to the use of property by shareholders), but only if the effect of the inclusion of all such securities is to make the amounts therein referred to includible under such subsection as foreign personal holding company income.

The requirement in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) that all convertible securities must be included if any are to be included shall be subject to the exception that, where some of the outstanding securities are convertible only after a later date than in the case of others, the class having the earlier conversion date may be included although the others are not included, but no convertible securities shall be included unless all outstanding securities having a prior conversion date are also included.

SEC. 334. Gross income of foreign personal holding companies.

(a) General rule: As used in this Supplement with respect to a foreign corporation the term "gross income" means gross income computed (without regard to the provisions of Supplement I) as if the foreign corporation were a domestic corporation.

(b) Additions to gross income: In the case of a foreign personal holding company (whether or not a United States group, as defined in section 331 (a) (2), existed with respect to such company on the last day of its taxable year) which was a shareholder in another foreign personal holding company on the day in the taxable year (whether beginning before, on, or after January 1, 1939) of the second company which was the last day on which a United States group existed with respect to the second company, there shall be included, as a dividend, in the gross income of the first company, for the taxable year in which or with which the taxable year of the second company ends, the amount the first company would have received as a dividend if on such last day there had been distributed by the second company, and received by the shareholders, an amount which bears the same ratio to the undistributed Supplement P net income of the second company for its taxable year as the portion of such taxable year up to and including such last day bears to the entire taxable year.

(c) Application of subsection (b): The rule provided in subsection (b)—

(1) shall be applied in the case of a foreign personal holding company for the purpose of determining its undistributed Supplement P net income which, or a part of which, is to be included in the gross income of its shareholders, whether United States shareholders, or other foreign personal holding companies;

(2) shall be applied in the case of every foreign corporation with respect to which a United States group exists on some day of its taxable year, for the purpose of determining whether such corporation meets the gross-income requirements of section 331 (a) (1).

SEC. 335. Undistributed Supplement P net income.

For the purposes of this title the term "undistributed Supplement P net income" means the Supplement P net income (as defined in section 336) minus the amount of the basic surtax credit provided in section 27 (b) (computed without its reduction, under section 27 (b) (1), by the amount of the credit provided in section 26 (a), relating to interest on certain obligations of the United States and Government corporations).

SEC. 336. Supplement P net income.

For the purposes of this title the term "Supplement P net income" means the net income with the following adjustments:

(a) Additional deductions: There shall be allowed as deductions—

(1) Federal income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes paid or accrued during the taxable year to the extent not allowed as a deduction under section 23; but not including the tax imposed by section 102, section 500, or a section of a prior income-tax law corresponding to either of such sections.

(2) In lieu of the deduction allowed by section 23 (q), contributions or gifts payment of which is made within the taxable year to or for the use of donees described in section 23 (q) for the purposes therein specified, to an amount which does not exceed 15 percent of the company's net income, computed without the benefit of this paragraph and section 23 (q), and without the deduction of the amount disallowed under subsection (b) of this section, and without the inclusion in gross income of the amounts includible therein as dividends by reason of the application of the provisions of section 334 (b) (relating to the inclusion in the gross income of a foreign personal holding company of its distributive share of the undistributed Supplement P net income of another foreign personal holding company in which it is a shareholder).

(b) Deductions not allowed.—

(1) Taxes and pension trusts: The deductions provided in section 23 (d), relating to taxes of a shareholder paid by the corporation, and in section 23 (p), relating to pension trusts, shall not be allowed.

(2) Expenses and depreciation: The aggregate of the deductions allowed under section 23 (a), relating to expenses, and section 23 (l), relating to depreciation, which are allocable to the operation and maintenance of property owned or operated by the company, shall be allowed only in an amount equal to the rent or other compensation received for the use or right to use the property, unless it is established (under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) to the satisfaction of the Commissioner:

(A) That the rent or other compensation received was the highest obtainable, or, if none was received, that none was obtainable;

(B) That the property was held in the course of a business carried on bona fide for profit; and

(C) Either that there was reasonable expectation that the operation of the property would result in a profit, or that the property was necessary to the conduct of the business.

(3) Net loss carry-over disallowed: The deduction for net operating losses provided in section 23 (s) shall not be allowed.

(c) Capital losses: The net income shall be computed without regard to section 117 (d) and (e), and losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets shall be allowed only to the extent of $2,000 plus the gains from such sales or exchanges.

SEC. 337. Corporation income taxed to United States shareholders.

(a) General rule: The undistributed Supplement P net income of a foreign personal holding company shall be included in the gross income of the citizens or residents of the United States, domestic corporations, domestic partnerships, and estates or trusts (other than estates or trusts the gross income of which under this chapter includes only income from sources within the United States), who are shareholders in such foreign personal holding company (hereinafter called "United States shareholders") in the manner and to the extent set forth in this supplement.

(b) Amount included in gross income: Each United States shareholder, who was a shareholder on the day in the taxable year of the company which was the last day on which a United States group (as defined in section 331 (a) (2)) existed with respect to the company, shall include in his gross income, as a dividend, for the taxable year in which or with which the taxable year of the company ends, the amount he would have received as a dividend if on such last day there had been distributed by the company, and received by the shareholders, an amount which bears the same ratio to the undistributed Supplement P net income of the company for the taxable year as the portion of such taxable year up to and including such last day bears to the entire taxable year.

(c) Credit for obligations of United States and its instrumentalities: Each United States shareholder shall be allowed a credit against net income, for the purpose of the tax imposed by section 11, 13, 14, 201, 204, 207, or 362, of his proportionate share of the interest specified in section 25 (a) (1) or (2) which is included in the gross income of the company otherwise than by the application of the provisions of section 334 (b) (relating to the inclusion in the gross income of a foreign personal holding company of its distributive share of the undistributed Supplement P net income of another foreign personal holding company in which it is a shareholder).

(d) Information in return: Every United States shareholder who is required under subsection (b) to include in his gross income any amount with respect to the undistributed Supplement P net income of a foreign personal holding company and who, on the last day on which a United States group existed with respect to the company, owned 5 percent or more in value of the outstanding stock of such company, shall set forth in his return in complete detail the gross income, deductions and credits, net income, Supplement P net income, and undistributed Supplement P net income of such company.

(e) Effect on capital account of foreign personal holding company: An amount which bears the same ratio to the undistributed Supplement P net income of the foreign personal holding company for its taxable year as the portion of such taxable year up to and including the last day on which a United States group existed with respect to the company bears to the entire taxable year, shall, for the purpose of determining the effect of distributions in subsequent taxable years by the corporation, be considered as paid-in surplus or as a contribution to capital and the accumulated earnings and profits as of the close of the taxable year shall be correspondingly reduced, if such amount or any portion thereof is required to be included as a dividend, directly or indirectly, in the gross income of United States shareholders.

(f) Basis of stock in hands of shareholders: The amount required to be included in the gross income of a United States shareholder under subsection (b) shall, for the purpose of adjusting the basis of his stock with respect to which the distribution would have been made (if it had been made), be treated as having been reinvested by the shareholder as a contribution to the capital of the corporation; but only to the extent to which such amount is included in his gross income in his return, increased or decreased by any adjustment of such amount in the last determination of the shareholder's tax liability, made before the expiration of 7 years after the date prescribed by law for filing the return.

(g) Basis of stock in case of death:

For basis of stock or securities in a foreign personal holding company acquired from a decedent, see section 113 (a) (5).

(h) Liquidation:

For amount of gain taken into account on liquidation of foreign personal holding company, see section 115 (c).

(i) Period of limitation on assessment and collection:

For period of limitation on assessment and collection without assessment, in case of failure to include in gross income the amount properly includible therein under subsection (b), see section 275 (d).

SEC. 338. Information returns by officers and directors.

(a) Monthly returns: On the 15th day of each month each individual who on such day is an officer or a director of a foreign corporation which, with respect to its taxable year preceding the taxable year (whether beginning on, before, or after January 1, 1939) in which such month occurs, was a foreign personal holding company, shall file with the Commissioner a return setting forth with respect to the preceding calendar month the name and address of each shareholder, the class and number of shares held by each, together with any changes in stockholdings during such period, the name and address of any holder of securities convertible into stock of such corporation, and such other information with respect to the stock and securities of the corporation as the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary shall by regulations prescribe as necessary for carrying out the provisions of this title. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe, as the period with respect to which returns shall be filed, a longer period than a month. In such case the return shall be due on the 15th day of the succeeding period, and shall be filed by the individuals who on such day are officers and directors of the corporation.

(b) Annual returns: On the sixtieth day after the close of the taxable year of a foreign personal holding company each individual who on such sixtieth day is an officer or director of the corporation shall file with the Commissioner a return setting forth—

(1) In complete detail the gross income, deductions and credits, net income, Supplement P net income, and undistributed Supplement P net income of such foreign personal holding company for such taxable year; and

(2) The same information with respect to such taxable year as is required in subsection (a); except that if all the required returns with respect to such year have been filed under subsection (a) no information under this paragraph need be set forth in the return filed under this subsection.

SEC. 339. Information returns by shareholders.

(a) Monthly returns: On the fifteenth day of each month each United States shareholder, by or for whom 50 percent or more in value of the outstanding stock of a foreign corporation is owned directly or indirectly (including in the case of an individual, stock owned by the members of his family as defined in section 333 (a) (2), if such foreign corporation with respect to its taxable year preceding the taxable year (whether beginning on, before, or after January 1, 1939) in which such month occurs was a foreign personal holding company, shall file with the Commissioner a return setting forth with respect to the preceding calendar month the name and address of each shareholder, the class and number of shares held by each, together with any changes in stockholdings during such period, the name and address of any holder of securities convertible into stock of such corporation, and such other information with respect to the stock and securities of the corporation as the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary shall by regulations prescribe as necessary for carrying out the provisions of this title. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe, as the period with respect to which returns shall be filed, a longer period than a month. In such case the return shall be due on the fifteenth day of the succeeding period, and shall be filed by the persons who on such day are United States shareholders.

(b) Annual returns: On the sixtieth day after the close of the taxable year of a foreign personal holding company each United States shareholder by or for whom on such sixtieth day 50 percent or more in value of the outstanding stock of such company is owned directly or indirectly (including in the case of an individual, stock owned by members of his family as defined in section 333 (a) (2)), shall file with the Commissioner a return setting forth the same information with respect to such taxable year as is required in subsection (a); except that if all the required returns with respect to such year have been filed under subsection (a) no return shall be required under this subsection.

SEC. 340. Penalties.

Any person required under section 338 or 339 to file a return, or to supply any information, who willfully fails to file such return, or supply such information, at the time or times required by law or regulations, shall, in lieu of the penalties provided in section 145 (a) for such offense, be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $2,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

SUPPLEMENT Q—MUTUAL INVESTMENT COMPANIES

SEC. 361. Definition.

(a) In general: For the purposes of this title the term "mutual investment company" means any domestic corporation (whether chartered or created as an investment trust, or otherwise), other than a personal holding company as defined in section 501, if—

(1) It is organized for the purpose of, and substantially all its business consists of, holding, investing, or reinvesting in stock or securities; and

(2) At least 95 percent of its gross income is derived from dividends, interest, and gains from sales or other disposition of stock or securities; and

(3) Less than 30 percent of its gross income is derived from the sale or other disposition of stock or securities held for less than 6 months; and

(4) An amount not less than 90 percent of its net income is distributed to its shareholders as taxable dividends during the taxable year; and

(5) Its shareholders are, upon reasonable notice, entitled to redemption of their stock for their proportionate interests in the corporation's properties, or the cash equivalent thereof less a discount not in excess of 3 percent thereof.

(b) Limitations: Despite the provisions of paragraph (1) a corporation shall not be considered as a mutual investment company if at any time during the taxable year—

(1) More than 5 percent of the gross assets of the corporation, taken at cost, was invested in stock or securities, or both, of any one corporation, government, or political subdivision thereof, but this limitation shall not apply to investments in obligations of the United States or in obligations of any corporation organized under general act of Congress if such corporation is an instrumentality of the United States; or

(2) It owned more than 10 percent of the outstanding stock or securities, or both, of any one corporation; or

(3) It had any outstanding bonds or indebtedness in excess of 10 percent of its gross assets taken at cost; or

(4) It fails to comply with any rule or regulation prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, for the purpose of ascertaining the actual ownership of its outstanding stock.

SEC. 362. Tax on mutual investment companies.

(a) Supplement Q net income: For the purposes of this title the term "Supplement Q net income" means the adjusted net income, computed without the net operating loss deduction provided in section 23 (s), minus the basic surtax credit computed under section 124 (b) without the application of paragraphs (2) and (3).

(b) Imposition of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the Supplement Q net income of every mutual investment company a tax equal to 18 percent of the amount thereof.

SUPPLEMENT R—EXCHANGES AND DISTRIBUTIONS IN OBEDIENCE TO ORDERS OF SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

SEC. 371. Nonrecognition of gain or loss.

(a) Exchanges of stock or securities only: No gain or loss shall be recognized to the transferor if stock or securities in a corporation which is a registered holding company or a majority-owned subsidiary company are transferred to such corporation or to an associate company thereof which is a registered holding company or a majority-owned subsidiary company solely in exchange for stock or securities (other than stock or securities which are nonexempt property), and the exchange is made by the transferee corporation in obedience to an order of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

(b) Exchanges of property for property by corporations: No gain or loss shall be recognized to a transferor corporation which is a registered holding company or an associate company of a registered holding company, if such corporation, in obedience to an order of the Securities and Exchange Commission transfers property solely in exchange for property (other than nonexempt property), and such order recites that such exchange by the transferor corporation is necessary or appropriate to the integration or simplification of the holding company system of which the transferor corporation is a member.

(c) Distribution of stock or securities only: If there is distributed, in obedience to an order of the Securities and Exchange Commission, to a shareholder in a corporation which is a registered holding company or a majority-owned subsidiary company, stock or securities (other than stock or securities which are nonexempt property), without the surrender by such shareholder of stock or securities in such corporation, no gain to the distributee from the receipt of the stock or securities so distributed shall be recognized.

(d) Transfers within system group: (1) No gain or loss shall be recognized to a corporation which is a member of a system group (A) if such corporation transfers property to another corporation which is a member of the same system group in exchange for other property, and the exchange by each corporation is made in obedience to an order of the Securities and Exchange Commission, or (B) if there is distributed to such corporation as a shareholder in a corporation which is a member of the same system group, property, without the surrender by such shareholder of stock or securities in the corporation making the distribution, and the distribution is made and received in obedience to an order of the Securities and Exchange Commission. If an exchange by or a distribution to a corporation with respect to which no gain or loss is recognized under any of the provisions of this paragraph may also be considered to be within the provisions of subsection (a), (b), or (c), then the provisions of this paragraph only shall apply.

(2) If the property received upon an exchange which is within any of the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection consists in whole or in part of stock or securities issued by the corporation from which such property was received, and if in obedience to an order of the Securities and Exchange Commission such stock or securities (other than stock which is not preferred as to both dividends and assets) are sold and the proceeds derived therefrom are applied in whole or in part in the retirement or cancelation of stock or of securities of the recipient corporation outstanding at the time of such exchange, no gain or loss shall be recognized to the recipient corporation upon the sale of the stock or securities with respect to which such order was made; except that if any part of the proceeds derived from the sale of such stock or securities is not so applied, or if the amount of such proceeds is in excess of the fair market value of such stock or securities at the time of such exchange, the gain, if any, shall be recognized, but in an amount not in excess of the proceeds which are not so applied, or in an amount not more than the amount by which the proceeds derived from such sale exceed such fair market value, whichever is the greater.

(e) Exchanges not solely in kind: (1) If an exchange (not within any of the provisions of subsection (d) would be within the provisions of subsection (a) or (b) if it were not for the fact that property received in exchange consists not only of property permitted by such subsection to be received without the recognition of gain or loss, but also of other property or money, then the gain, if any, to the recipient shall be recognized, but in an amount not in excess of the sum of such money and the fair market value of such other property, and the loss, if any, to the recipient shall not be recognized.

(2) If an exchange is within the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection and if it includes a distribution which has the effect of the distribution of a taxable dividend, then there shall be taxed as a dividend to each distributee such an amount of the gain recognized under such paragraph (1) as is not in excess of his ratable share of the undistributed earnings and profits of the corporation accumulated after February 28, 1913. The remainder, if any, of the gain recognized under such paragraph (1) shall be taxed as a gain from the exchange of property.

(f) Application of section: The provisions of this section shall not apply to an exchange or distribution unless (1) the order of the Securities and Exchange Commission in obedience to which such exchange or distribution was made recites that such exchange or distribution is necessary or appropriate to effectuate the provisions of section 11 (b) of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 820, U. S. C., Supp. III, title 15, sec. 79 (b)), (2) such order specifies and itemizes the stock and securities and other property which are ordered to be transferred and received upon such exchange or distribution, and (3) such exchange or distribution was made in obedience to such order and was completed within the time prescribed therefor in such order.

(g) Nonapplication of other provisions: If an exchange or distribution made in obedience to an order of the Securities and Exchange Commission is within any of the provisions of this section and may also be considered to be within any of the provisions of section 112 (other than the provisions of paragraph (8) of subsection (b)), then the provisions of this section only shall apply.

SEC. 372. Basis for determining gain or loss.

(a) Exchanges generally: If the property was acquired upon an exchange subject to the provisions of section 371 (a), (b), or (e), the basis shall be the same as in the case of the property exchanged, decreased in the amount of any money received by the taxpayer and increased in the amount of gain or decreased in the amount of loss to the taxpayer that was recognized upon such exchange under the law applicable to the year in which the exchange was made. If the property so acquired consisted in part of the type of property permitted by section 371 (a) or (b) to be received without the recognition of gain or loss, and in part of nonexempt property, the basis provided in this subsection shall be allocated between the properties (other than money) received, and for the purpose of the allocation there shall be assigned to such nonexempt property (other than money) an amount equivalent to its fair market value at the date of the exchange. This subsection shall not apply to property acquired by a corporation by the issuance of its stock or securities as the consideration in whole or in part for the transfer of the property to it.

(b) Transfers to corporations: If, in connection with a transfer subject to the provisions of section 371 (a), (b), or (e), the property was acquired by a corporation, either as paid-in surplus or as a contribution to capital, or in consideration for stock or securities issued by the corporation receiving the property (including cases where part of the consideration for the transfer of such property to the corporation consisted of property or money in addition to such stock or securities), then the basis shall be the same as it would be in the hands of the transferor, increased in the amount of gain or decreased in the amount of loss recognized to the transferor upon such transfer under the law applicable to the year in which the transfer was made.

(c) Distributions of stock or securities: If the stock or securities were received in a distribution subject to the provisions of section 371 (c), then the basis in the case of the stock in respect of which the distribution was made shall be apportioned, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, between such stock and the stock or securities distributed.

(d) Transfers within system group: If the property was acquired by a corporation which is a member of a system group upon a transfer or distribution described in section 371 (d) (1), then the basis shall be the same as it would be in the hands of the transferor; except that if such property is stock or securities issued by the corporation from which such stock or securities were received and they were issued (1) as the sole consideration for the property transferred to such corporation, then the basis of such stock or securities shall be either (A) the same as in the case of the property transferred therefor, or (B) the fair market value of such stock or securities at the time of their receipt, whichever is the lower; or (2) as part consideration for the property transferred to such corporation, then the basis of such stock or securities shall be either (A) an amount which bears the same ratio to the basis of the property transferred as the fair market value of such stock or securities at the time of their receipt bears to the total fair market value of the entire consideration received, or (B) the fair market value of such stock or securities at the time of their receipt, whichever is the lower.

SEC. 373. Definitions.

As used in this supplement—

(a) The term "order of the Securities and Exchange Commission" means an order (1) issued after May 28, 1938, and prior to January 1, 1941, by the Securities and Exchange Commission to effectuate the provisions of section 11 (b) of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 820; U. S. C., Supp. III, title 15, § 79 (b)), or (2) issued by the Commission subsequent to December 31, 1940, in which it is expressly stated that an order of the character specified in clause (1) is amended or supplemented, and (3) which has become final in accordance with law.

(b) The terms "registered holding company", "holding-company system", and "associate company" shall have the meanings assigned to them by section 2 of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, 49 Stat. 804 (U. S. C., Supp. III, title 15, § 79 (b), (c)).

(c) The term "majority-owned subsidiary company" of a registered holding company means a corporation, stock of which, representing in the aggregate more than 50 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock of such corporation entitled to vote (not including stock which is entitled to vote only upon default or nonpayment of dividends or other special circumstances) is owned wholly by such registered holding company, or partly by such registered holding company and partly by one or more majority-owned subsidiary companies thereof, or by one or more majority-owned subsidiary companies of such registered holding company.

(d) The term "system group" means one or more chains of corporations connected through stock ownership with a common parent corporation if—

(1) At least 90 percent of each class of the stock (other than stock which is preferred as to both dividends and assets) of each of the corporations (except the common parent corporation) is owned directly by one or more of the other corporations; and

(2) The common parent corporation owns directly at least 90 percent of each class of the stock (other than stock which is preferred as to both dividends and assets) of at least one of the other corporations; and

(3) Each of the corporations is either a registered holding company or a majority-owned subsidiary company.

(e) The term "nonexempt property" means—

(1) Any consideration in the form of a cancelation or assumption of debts or other liabilities (including a continuance of encumbrances subject to which the property was transferred);

(2) Short-term obligations (including notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and bankers' acceptances) having a maturity at the time of issuance of not exceeding 24 months, exclusive of days of grace;

(3) Securities issued or guaranteed as to principal or interest by a government or subdivision thereof (including those issued by a corporation which is an instrumentality of a government or subdivision thereof);

(4) Stock or securities which were acquired after February 28, 1938, unless such stock or securities (other than obligations described as nonexempt property in paragraph (2) or (3)) were acquired in obedience to an order of the Securities and Exchange Commission;

(5) Money, and the right to receive money not evidenced by a security other than an obligation described as nonexempt property in paragraph (2) or (3).

(f) The term "stock or securities" means shares of stock in any corporation, certificates of stock or interest in any corporation, notes, bonds, debentures, and evidences of indebtedness (including any evidence of an interest in or right to subscribe to or purchase any of the foregoing).

TITLE IA—ADDITIONAL INCOME TAXES

SUBTITLE A—PERSONAL HOLDING COMPANIES

SEC. 500. Surtax on personal holding companies.

There shall be levied, collected, and paid, for each taxable year beginning after December 31, 1938, upon the undistributed subtitle A net income of every personal holding company (in addition to the taxes imposed by chapter 1) a surtax equal to the sum of the following:

(1) 65 percent of the amount thereof not in excess of $2,000; plus

(2) 75 percent of the amount thereof in excess of $2,000.

SEC. 501. Definition of personal holding company.

(a) General rule: For the purposes of this subtitle and title 1 and title 1B the term "personal holding company" means any corporation if—

(1) Gross income requirement: At least 80 percent of its gross income for the taxable year is personal holding company income as defined in section 502; but if the corporation is a personal holding company with respect to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1936, then, for each subsequent taxable year, the minimum percentage shall be 70 percent in lieu of 80 percent, until a taxable year during the whole of the last half of which the stock ownership required by paragraph (2) does not exist, or until the expiration of three consecutive taxable years in each of which less than 70 percent of the gross income is personal holding company income; and

(2) Stock ownership requirement: At any time during the last half of the taxable year more than 50 percent in value of its outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for not more than five individuals.

(b) Exceptions: The term "personal holding company" does not include a corporation exempt from taxation under section 101, a bank as defined in section 104, a life insurance company, a surety company, or a foreign personal holding company as defined in section 331, or a licensed personal finance company, under State supervision, at least 80 percent of the gross income of which is lawful interest received from individuals each of whose indebtedness to such company did not at any time during the taxable year exceed $300 in principal amount, if such interest is not payable in advance or compounded and is computed only on unpaid balances.

(c) Corporations making consolidated returns: If the common parent corporation of an affiliated group of corporations making a consolidated return under the provisions of section 141 satisfies the stock ownership requirement provided in section 501 (a) (2), and the income of such affiliated group, determined as provided in section 141, satisfies the gross income requirement provided in section 501 (a) (1), such affiliated group shall be subject to the surtax imposed by this subchapter.

SEC. 502. Personal holding company income.

For the purposes of this subtitle the term "personal holding company income" means the portion of the gross income which consists of:

(a) Dividends, interest (other than interest constituting rent as defined in subsection (g)), royalties (other than mineral, oil, or gas royalties), annuities.

(b) Stock and securities transactions: Except in the case of regular dealers in stock or securities, gains from the sale or exchange of stock or securities.

(c) Commodities transactions: Gains from futures transactions in any commodity on or subject to the rules of a board of trade or commodity exchange. This subsection shall not apply to gains by a producer, processor, merchant, or handler of the commodity which arise out of bona fide hedging transactions reasonably necessary to the conduct of its business in the manner in which such business is customarily and usually conducted by others.

(d) Estates and trusts: Amounts includible in computing the net income of the corporation under Supplement E of title I, and gains from the sale or other disposition of any interest in an estate or trust.

(e) Personal service contracts: (1) Amounts received under a contract under which the corporation is to furnish personal services; if some person other than the corporation has the right to designate (by name or by description) the individual who is to perform the services, or if the individual who is to perform the services is designated (by name or by description) in the contract; and (2) amounts received from the sale or other disposition of such a contract. This subsection shall apply with respect to amounts received for services under a particular contract only if at some time during the taxable year 25 percent or more in value of the outstanding stock of the corporation is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for the individual who has performed, is to perform, or may be designated (by name or by description) as the one to perform such services.

(f) Use of corporation property by shareholder: Amounts received as compensation (however designated and from whomsoever received) for the use of, or right to use, property of the corporation in any case where, at any time during the taxable year, 25 percent or more in value of the outstanding stock of the corporation is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for an individual entitled to the use of the property; whether such right is obtained directly from the corporation or by means of a sublease or other arrangement.

(g) Rents: Rents, unless constituting 50 percent or more of the gross income. For the purposes of this subsection the term "rents" means compensation, however designated, for the use of, or right to use, property, and the interest on debts owed to the corporation, to the extent such debts represent the price for which real propery held primarily for sale to customers in the ordinary course of its trade or business was sold or exchanged by the corporation; but does not include amounts constituting personal holding company income under subsection (f).

(h) Mineral, oil, or gas royalties: Mineral, oil, or gas royalties, unless (1) constituting 50 percent or more of the gross income, and (2) the deductions allowable under section 23 (a) (relating to expenses) other than compensation for personal services rendered by shareholders, constitute 15 percent or more of the gross income.

SEC. 503. Stock ownership.

(a) Constructive ownership: For the purpose of determining whether a corporation is a personal holding company, insofar as such determination is based on stock ownership under section 501 (a) (2), section 502 (e), or section 502 (f)—

(1) Stock not owned by individual: Stock owned, directly or indirectly, by or for a corporation, partnership, estate, or trust shall be considered as being owned proportionately by its shareholders, partners, or beneficiaries.

(2) Family and partnership ownership: An individual shall be considered as owning the stock owned, directly or indirectly, by or for his family or by or for his partner. For the purposes of this paragraph the family of an individual includes only his brothers and sisters (whether by the whole or half blood), spouse, ancestors, and lineal descendants.

(3) Options: If any person has an option to acquire stock such stock shall be considered as owned by such person. For the purposes of this paragraph an option to acquire such an option, and each one of a series of such options, shall be considered as an option to acquire such stock.

(4) Application of family-partnership and option rules: Paragraphs (2) and (3) shall be applied—

(A) For the purposes of the stock ownership requirement provided in section 501 (a) (2), if, but only if, the effect is to make the corporation a personal holding company;

(B) For the purposes of section 502 (e) (relating to personal-service contracts), or of section 502 (f) (relating to the use of property by shareholders), if, but only if, the effect is to make the amounts therein referred to includible under such subsection as personal holding-company income.

(5) Constructive ownership as actual ownership: Stock constructively owned by a person by reason of the application of paragraph (1) or (3) shall, for the purpose of applying paragraph (1) or (2), be treated as actually owned by such person; but stock constructively owned by an individual by reason of the application of paragraph (2) shall not be treated as owned by him for the purpose of again applying such paragraph in order to make another the constructive owner of such stock.

(6) Option rule in lieu of family and partnership rule: If stock may be considered as owned by an individual under either paragraph (2) or (3) it shall be considered as owned by him under paragraph (3).

(b) Convertible securities: Outstanding securities convertible into stock (whether or not convertible during the taxable year) shall be considered as outstanding stock—

(1) For the purpose of the stock-ownership requirement provided in section 501 (a) (2), but only if the effect of the inclusion of all such securities is to make the corporation a personal holding company;

(2) For the purpose of section 502 (e) (relating to personal service contracts), but only if the effect of the inclusion of all such securities is to make the amounts therein referred to includible under such subsection as personal holding company income; and

(3) For the purpose of section 502 (f) (relating to the use of property by shareholders), but only if the effect of the inclusion of all such securities is to make the amounts therein referred to includible under such subsection as personal holding company income.

The requirement in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) that all convertible securities must be included if any are to be included shall be subject to the exception that, where some of the outstanding securities are convertible only after a later date than in the case of others, the class having the earlier conversion date may be included although the others are not included, but no convertible securities shall be included unless all outstanding securities having a prior conversion date are also included.

SEC. 504. Undistributed subtitle A net income.

For the purposes of this subtitle the term "undistributed subchapter A net income" means the subtitle A net income (as defined in section 505) minus—

(a) The amount of the dividends paid credit provided in section 27 (a) without the benefit of paragraphs (3) and (4) thereof (computed without its reduction, under section 27 (b) (1), by the amount of the credit provided in section 26 (a), relating to interest on certain obligations of the United States and Government corporations); but, in the computation of the dividends paid credit for the purposes of this subtitle, the amount allowed under subsection (c) of this section in the computation of the tax under this subtitle for any preceding taxable year shall be considered as a dividend paid in such preceding taxable year and not in the year of distribution;

(b) Amounts used or irrevocably set aside to pay or to retire indebtedness of any kind incurred prior to January 1, 1934, if such amounts are reasonable with reference to the size and terms of such indebtedness.

(c) Dividends paid after the close of the taxable year and before the 15th day of the third month following the close of the taxable year, if claimed under this subsection in the return, but only to the extent to which such dividends are includible, for the purposes of chapter 1, in the computation of the basic surtax credit for the year of distribution; but the amount allowed under this subsection shall not exceed either:

(1) The accumulated earnings and profits as of the close of the taxable year; or

(2) The undistributed subtitle A net income for the taxable year computed without regard to this subsection; or

(3) Ten percent of the sum of—

(A) The dividends paid during the taxable year (reduced by the amount allowed under this subsection in the computation of the tax under this subtitle for the taxable year preceding the taxable year); and

(B) The consent dividends credit for the taxable year.

SEC. 505. Subtitle A net income.

For the purposes of this subtitle the term "Subtitle A Net Income" means the net income with the following adjustments:

(a) Additional deductions: There shall be allowed as deductions—

(1) Federal income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes paid or accrued during the taxable year to the extent not allowed as a deduction under section 23; but not including the tax imposed by section 102, section 500, or a section of a prior income-tax law corresponding to either of such sections.

(2) In lieu of the deduction allowed by section 23 (q), contributions or gifts, payment of which is made within the taxable year to or for the use of donees described in section 23 (q) for the purposes therein specified, to an amount which does not exceed 15 percent of the taxpayer's net income, computed without the benefit of this paragraph and section 23 (q), and without the deduction of the amount disallowed under subsection (b) of this section.

(3) In the case of a corporation organized prior to January 1, 1936, to take over the assets and liabilities of the estate of a decedent, amounts paid in liquidation of any liability of the corporation based on the liability of the decedent to make contributions or gifts to or for the use of donees described in section 23 (o) for the purposes therein specified, to the extent such liability of the decedent existed prior to January 1, 1934. No deduction shall be allowed under paragraph (2) of this subsection for a taxable year for which a deduction is allowed under this paragraph.

(b) Deductions not allowed: The aggregate of the deductions allowed under section 23 (a), relating to expenses, and section 23 (l), relating to depreciation, which are allocable to the operation and maintenance of property owned or operated by the corporation, shall be allowed only in an amount equal to the rent or other compensation received for the use of, or the right to use, the property, unless it is established (under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) to the satisfaction of the Commissioner:

(1) That the rent or other compensation received was the highest obtainable, or, if none was received, that none was obtainable;

(2) That the property was held in the course of a business carried on bona fide for profit; and

(3) Either that there was reasonable expectation that the operation of the property would result in a profit, or that the property was necessary to the conduct of the business.

(c) Net loss carry-over disallowed: The deduction for net operating losses provided in section 23 (s) shall not be allowed.

SEC. 506. Deficiency dividends—credits and refunds.

(a) Credit against unpaid deficiency: If the amount of a deficiency with respect to the tax imposed by this subtitle for any taxable year has been established—

(1) by a decision of the Board of Tax Appeals which has become final; or

(2) by a closing agreement made under section 3760; or

(3) by a final judgment in a suit to which the United States is a party;

then a deficiency dividend credit shall be allowed against the amount of the deficiency so established and all interest, additional amounts, and additions to the tax provided by law not paid on or before the date when claim for a deficiency dividend credit is filed under subsection (d). The amount of such credit shall be 65 percent of the amount of deficiency dividends, as defined in subsection (c), not in excess of $2,000, plus 75 percent of the amount of such dividends in excess of $2,000; but such credit shall not exceed the portion of the deficiency so established which is not paid on or before the date of the closing agreement, or the date the decision of the Board or the judgment becomes final, as the case may be. Such credit shall be allowed as of the date the claim for deficiency dividend credit is filed.

(b) Credit or refund of deficiency paid: When the Commissioner has determined that there is a deficiency with respect to the tax imposed by this subtitle and the corporation has paid any portion of such asserted deficiency and it has been established—

(1) by a decision of the Board of Tax Appeals which has become final; or

(2) by a closing agreement made under section 3760; or

(3) by a final judgment in a suit against the United States for refund—

(A) if such suit is brought within 6 months after the corporation became entitled to bring suit, and

(B) if claim for refund was filed within 6 months after the payment of such amount; that any portion of the amount so paid was the whole or a part of a deficiency at the time when paid, then there shall be credited or refunded to the corporation an amount equal to 65 percent of the amount of deficiency dividends not in excess of $2,000, plus 75 percent of the amount of such dividends in excess of $2,000, but such credit or refund shall not exceed the portion so paid by the corporation. Such credit or refund shall be made as provided in section 322 but without regard to subsection (b) or subsection (c) thereof. No interest shall be allowed on such credit or refund. No credit or refund shall be made under this subsection with respect to any amount of tax paid after the date of the closing agreement, or the date the decision of the Board or the judgment becomes final, as the case may be.

(c) Deficiency dividends.—

(1) Definition: For the purpose of this subtitle, the term "deficiency dividends" means the amount of the dividends paid, on or after the date of the closing agreement or on or after the date the decision of the Board or the judgment becomes final, as the case may be, and prior to filing claim under subsection (d), which are includible, for the purposes of title 1, in the computation of the basic surtax credit for the year of distribution. No dividends shall be considered as deficiency dividends for the purposes of allowance of credit under subsection (a) unless (under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) the corporation files, within 30 days after the date of the closing agreement, or the date upon which the decision of the Board or judgment becomes final, as the case may be, notification (which specifies the amount of the credit intended to be claimed) of its intention to have the dividends so considered.

(2) Effect on dividends paid credit.—

(A) For taxable year in which paid: Deficiency dividends paid in any taxable year (to the extent of the portion thereof with respect to which the credit under subsection (a), or the credit or refund under subsection (b), or both, are allowed) shall be subtracted from the basis surtax credit for such year, but only for the purpose of computing the tax under this subtitle for such year and succeeding years.

(B) For prior taxable year: Deficiency dividends paid in any taxable year (to the extent of the portion thereof with respect to which the credit under subsection (a), or the credit or refund under subsection (b), or both are allowed) shall not be allowed under section 504 (c) in the computation of the tax under this subtitle for any taxable year preceding the taxable year in which paid.

(d) Claim required: No deficiency dividends credit shall be allowed under subsection (a) and no credit or refund shall be made under subsection (b) unless (under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) claim therefor is filed within 60 days after the date of the closing agreement, or the date upon which the decision of the Board or judgment becomes final, as the case may be.

(e) Suspension of statute of limitations and stay of collection.—

(1) Suspension of running of statute: If the corporation files a notification, as provided in subsection (c), to have dividends considered as deficiency dividends, the running of the statute of limitations provided in section 275 or 276 on the making of assessments and the bringing of distraint or a proceeding in court for collection, in respect of the deficiency and all interest, additional amounts, and additions to the tax provided by law, shall be suspended for a period of 2 years after the date of the filing of such notification.

(2) Stay of collection: In the case of any deficiency with respect to the tax imposed by this subchapter established as provided in subsection (a)—

(A) The collection of the deficiency and all interest, additional amounts, and additions to the tax provided for by law shall, except in cases of jeopardy, be stayed until the expiration of 30 days after the date of the closing agreement, or the date upon which the decision of the Board or judgment becomes final, as the case may be.

(B) If notification has been filed, as provided in subsection (c), the collection of such part of the deficiency as is not in excess of either the credit allowable under subsection (a) or the amount which, in the notification, is specified as intended to be claimed as credit, shall, except in cases of jeopardy, be stayed after the expiration of 60 days after the date of the closing agreement, or the date upon which the decision of the Board or judgment becomes final, as the case may be.

(C) If claim for deficiency dividend credit is filed under subsection (d), the collection of such part of the deficiency as is not in excess of either the credit allowable under subsection (a) or the amount claimed, shall be stayed until the date the claim for credit is disallowed (in whole or in part), and if disallowed in part collection shall be made only of the part disallowed.

No distraint or proceeding in court shall be begun for the collection of an amount the collection of which is stayed under subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) during the period for which the collection of such amount is stayed.

(f) Credit or refund denied if fraud, etc.: No deficiency dividend credit shall be allowed under subsection (a) and no credit or refund shall be made under subsection (b) if the closing agreement, decision of the Board, or judgment contains a finding that any part of the deficiency is due to fraud with intent to evade tax, or to failure to file the return under this subchapter within the time prescribed by law or prescribed by the Commissioner in pursuance of law, unless it is shown that such failure to file is due to reasonable cause and not due to willful neglect.

SEC. 507. Meaning of terms used.

The terms used in this subtitle shall have the same meaning as when used in title I.

SEC. 508. Administrative provisions.

All provisions of law (including penalties) applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by title I, shall insofar as not inconsistent with this subtitle, be applicable in respect of the tax imposed by this subtitle, except that the provisions of section 131 shall not be applicable.

SEC. 509. Improper accumulation of surplus.

For surtax on corporations which accumulate surplus to avoid surtax on shareholders, see section 102.

SEC. 510. Foreign personal holding companies.

For provisions relating to foreign personal holding companies and their shareholders, see supplement P of title I.

SEC. 511. Publicity of returns.

For provisions with respect to publicity of returns under this subtitle, see subsection (a) (2) of section 55.

TITLE IB—EXCESS PROFITS TAX

SEC. 600. Imposition of tax.

In addition to the taxes imposed by title I and title IA, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year or portion of such year to which the tax under title I applies upon the income of every corporation a tax equal to the following percentages of the net income:

RATE SCHEDULE

10 percent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credit (determined under section 602) and not in excess of 10 percent of the invested capital for the taxable year;

20 percent of the amount of the net income in excess of 10 percent but not in excess of 15 percent of such invested capital;

30 percent of the amount of the net income in excess of 15 percent but not in excess of 20 percent of such invested capital;

40 percent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 percent but not in excess of 25 percent of such invested capital;

60 percent of the amount of the net income in excess of 25 percent of such invested capital.

In any case where the full amount of the credit (determined under section 602) is not exhausted under the first bracket, the unused part shall be applied in reduction of the net income in the succeeding brackets until the entire credit is absorbed.

SEC. 601. Alternative tax.

(a) There shall (at the election of the taxpayer) be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the tax imposed by section 600, a tax equal to 50 percent of such part of the net income for the taxable year as is in excess of the average net income for any 3 of the 4 taxable years 1936, 1937, 1938, and 1939.

(b) If a corporation was not in existence during the whole of such 4-year period, the average net income shall be computed by taking into account all such taxable years specified in subsection (a) during which the corporation was in existence.

(c) For the purpose of this tax, the net income shall be the same as the net income for income-tax purposes in title I of this act.

(d) Except in the case of corporations which elected to file consolidated returns for the taxable years specified in subsection (a) in accordance with the applicable revenue acts, the tax imposed by this section shall be computed upon the basis of separate returns.

SEC. 602. Excess-profits credit.

(a) The excess-profits credit shall consist in the case of a domestic corporation of (1) a specific exemption of $3,000 or (2) 5 percent of the invested capital for the taxable year, whichever is the greater. A foreign corporation or a corporation entitled to the benefit of section 251, or a corporation organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, shall be entitled to an excess-profits credit of 6 percent of the invested capital.

(b) In the case of a return made for a fractional part of a year, the specific exemption of $3,000 shall be reduced to an amount which bears the same ratio to such specific exemption as the number of months in the period for which return is made bears to 12 months.

(c) In any case where a tax is assessed upon the basis of a consolidated return, only one specific exemption of $3,000 shall be allowed.

SEC. 603. Exempt corporations.

Corporations enumerated in section 101 shall, to the extent they are exempt from the income tax under title I be exempt from taxation under this title.

SEC. 604. Net income.

For the purpose of the tax imposed by section 600, the net income shall be the same as the net income for income-tax purposes in title I of this act, with the following adjustments:

(a) Additional deductions—(1) Dividends: There shall be allowed as a deduction, the amount received as dividends from a domestic corporation which is subject to taxation under title I. The deduction allowed by this subsection shall not be allowed in respect of dividends received from a corporation organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, or from a corporation which under section 251 of title I is taxable only on its gross income from sources within the United States by reason of its receiving a large percentage of its gross income from sources within a possession of the United States.

(2) Loss in inventory: (A) At the time of filing return for the last taxable year under this title a taxpayer may, notwithstanding any other provision of law, file a claim in abatement based on the fact that he has sustained a substantial loss (whether or not actually realized by sale or other disposition) resulting from any material reduction (not due to temporary fluctuation) of the value of the inventory for such taxable year, or from the actual payment after the close of such taxable year of rebates in pursuance of contracts entered into during such year upon sales made during such year. In such case payment of the amount of the tax covered by such claim shall not be required until the claim is decided, but the taxpayer shall accompany his claim with a bond in double the amount of the tax covered by the claim, with sureties satisfactory to the Commissioner, conditioned for the payment of any part of such tax found to be due, with interest. If any part of such claim is disallowed then the remainder of the tax due shall on notice and demand by the collector be paid by the taxpayer with interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the time the tax would have been due had no such claim been filed. If it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that such substantial loss has been sustained, then in computing the tax imposed by this title the amount of such loss shall be deducted from the net income.

(B) If no such claim is filed, but it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that during the period of 1 year after the date upon which the last return under this title is due the taxpayer has sustained a substantial loss of the character above described then the amount of such loss shall be deducted from the net income for the last taxable year under this title and the tax imposed by this title for such year shall be redetermined accordingly. Any amount found to be due to the taxpayer upon the basis of such redetermination shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 322.

(3) Amortization: (A) In the case of buildings, machinery, equipment, or other depreciable facilities, contracted for and constructed, erected, installed, or acquired on or after the effective date of this act, for the production of articles essential to the prosecution of the war, and in the case of vessels contracted for and constructed or acquired on or after such date for the transportation of articles or men essential to the prosecution of the war, there shall be allowed, for any taxable year ending after the effective date of this act, a reasonable deduction for the amortization of such part of the cost of such facilities or vessels as has been borne by the taxpayer (not in excess of the adjusted basis under section 113 of title I), but not again including any amount otherwise allowed under title I, or previous acts of Congress as a deduction in computing net income. The allowance under this subsection shall be inclusive of all depreciation during the amortization period on property subject to amortization: Provided, That amortization shall not be allowed under this subsection unless the construction, erection, installation, or acquirement of the facility or vessel shall have been authorized by the President, through such agency as he shall designate, and determined by such agency to be for the production of articles essential to the prosecution of the war, or, in the case of vessels, for the transportation of articles or men essential to the prosecution of the war: Provided further, That in the case of vessels, buildings, machinery, equipment, or other facilities contracted for, or constructed, erected, or installed prior to the effective date of this act, but acquired by the taxpayer subsequent to such date, whether by purchase, exchange, gift, transfer, or in any other manner, no amortization shall be allowed under this paragraph: Provided further, That after this act shall cease to be effective the Commissioner may reexamine the returns made under this title, and if he then finds that the deduction originally allowed was incorrect, the tax for the year or years affected shall be redetermined. The amount of the deduction under this subsection shall be allowed only with respect to such facilities or vessels which have become obsolete, or ceased to be required, or have been sold prior to 1 year after the date upon which this act shall cease to be effective. The amount of any deficiency in tax determined to be due may be assessed and collected at any time, subject to the provisions of section 272 of title I, without regard to the provisions of section 275 of title I.

The amount of tax overpaid, if any, shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 322 of title I.

(B) Tentative allowance: For the purpose of returns under this title, the tentative estimate of the amount of such amortization for any year shall not exceed 12½ percent of the cost of such part of the facilities or vessels as has been borne by the taxpayer: Provided, That when the aggregate tentative allowances equal 50 percent of the cost of the facilities or vessels no further tentative allowances shall be made.

(b) Consolidated net income: For the purpose of this title, consolidated net income in the case of affiliated corporations shall be the same as consolidated net income for income-tax purposes in title I, subject to the adjustments provided in subsection (a).

SEC. 605. Invested capital.

(a) As used in this title—

The term "intangible property" means patents, copyrights, secret processes and formulae, good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchises, and other like property;

The term "tangible property" means stocks, bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness, bills and accounts receivable, leaseholds, and other property other than intangible property;

The term "borrowed capital" means money or other property borrowed, whether represented by bonds, notes, open accounts, or otherwise;

The term "inadmissible assets" means stocks, bonds, and other obligations (other than obligations of the United States) the dividends or interest from which is not included in computing net income under this title, but where the income derived from such assets consists in part of gain or profit derived from the sale or other disposition thereof, or where all or part of the interest derived from such assets is in effect included in the net income because of the limitation on the deduction of interest under subsection (b) of section 23 of title I, a corresponding part of the capital invested in such assets shall not be deemed to be inadmissible assets;

The term "admissible assets" means all assets other than inadmissible assets, valued in accordance with the provisions of subsection (a) of section 606 and section 607.

(b) For the purposes of this title the par value of stock or shares shall, in the case of stock or shares issued at a nominal value or having no par value, be deemed to be the fair market value as of the date or dates of issue of such stock or shares.

SEC. 606.

(a) As used in this title the term "invested capital" for any year means (except as provided in subdivision (b) and (c) of this section):

(1) Actual cash bona fide paid in for stock or shares;

(2) Actual cash value of tangible property, other than cash, bona fide paid in for stock or shares, at the time of such payment, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor, unless the actual cash value of such tangible property at the time paid in is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner to have been clearly and substantially in excess of such par value, in which case such excess shall be treated as paid-in surplus: Provided, That the Commissioner shall keep a record of all cases in which tangible property is included in invested capital at a value in excess of the stock or shares issued therefor, containing the name and address of each taxpayer, the business in which engaged, the amount of invested capital and net income shown by the return, the value of the tangible property at the time paid in, the par value of the stock or shares specifically issued therefor, and the amount included under this paragraph as paid-in surplus. The Commissioner shall furnish a copy of such record and other detailed information with respect to such cases when required by resolution of either House of Congress, without regard to the restrictions contained in section 55 of the Internal Revenue Code.

(3) Paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits; not including surplus and undivided profits earned during the year;

(4) Intangible property bona fide paid in for stock or shares prior to January 1, 1940, in an amount not exceeding (a) the actual cash value of such property at the time paid in, (b) the par value of the stock or shares issued therefor, or (c) in the aggregate 25 percent of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding on January 1, 1940, whichever is lowest;

(5) Intangible property bona fide paid in for stock or shares on or after January 1, 1940, in an amount not exceeding (a) the actual cash value of such property at the time paid in, (b) the par value of the stock or shares issued therefor, or (c) in the aggregate 25 percent of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year, whichever is lowest: Provided, That in no case shall the total amount included under paragraphs (4) and (5) exceed in the aggregate 25 percent of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year; but

(b) As used in this title the term "invested capital" does not include borrowed capital.

(c) There shall be deducted from invested capital as above defined a percentage thereof equal to the percentage which the amount of inadmissible assets is of the amount of admissible and inadmissible assets held during the taxable year.

(d) The invested capital for any period shall be the average invested capital for such period, but in the case of a corporation making a return for a fractional part of a year, it shall be the same fractional part of such average invested capital.

SEC. 607. Reorganizations.

That in the case of the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership of a trade or business, or change of ownership of property, after January 1, 1940, if an interest or control in such trade or business or property of 50 percent or more remains in the same persons, or any of them, then no asset transferred or received from the previous owner shall, for the purpose of determining invested capital, be allowed a greater value than would have been allowed under this title in computing the invested capital of such previous owner if such asset had not been so transferred or received: Provided, That if such previous owner was not a corporation, then the value of any asset so transferred or received shall be taken at its cost of acquisition (at the date when acquired by such previous owner) with proper allowance for depreciation, impairment, betterment, or development, but no addition to the original cost shall be made for any charge or expenditure deducted as expense or otherwise on or after March 1, 1913, in computing the net income of such previous owner for purposes of taxation.

SEC. 608. Returns and payment of tax.

Every corporation not exempt under section 603 shall make a return for the purposes of this title. Such returns shall be made, and the taxes imposed by this title shall be paid, at the same times and places, in the same manner, and subject to the same conditions, as is provided in the case of returns and payment of income tax by corporations for the purposes of title I, and all the provisions of that title not inapplicable, including penalties, are hereby made applicable to the taxes imposed by this title.

SEC. 609. Short title.

This act may be cited as the War Emergency Act.

SEC. 610. Suspension of conflicting and inconsistent acts.

All acts or parts of acts conflicting or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are to the extent of such conflict or inconsistency suspended during the effectiveness of this act.

SEC. 611. Criminal penalties.

Any person who willfully violates any provisions of this act or any of the rules and regulations made thereunder shall, unless other criminal penalties be provided herein for such violation, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $100,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both, together with the cost of prosecution.

SEC. 612. Succession to rights and duties.

On the expiration of this act, the United States of America shall be successor to the rights and duties required or incurred by any board or commission created by this act.

SEC. 613. Separability.

If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 614. Effective date of act.

Except as otherwise provided herein, the provisions of this act shall become operative and in full force and effect immediately upon the declaration by Congress that a state of war exists between the United States and any foreign government and that the existence of such state of war creates grave national emergency; and such provisions shall remain in full force and effect for the duration of such war and thereafter until the Congress shall declare the emergency created by such war to be at an end.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I understand that the committee amendment has been reconsidered for the purpose of further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be necessary to reconsider it again.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to, so that I may offer two amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the committee amendment, it is proposed to insert the following:

Income derived from the mining, reduction, or beneficiation of tungsten, quicksilver, manganese, platinum, and antimony, chromite and tin, or the ores and material containing such metals, shall not be subject to the excess-profits tax provided for in this act.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Nevada that we adopted several amendments touching mining operations. If it be agreeable to the Senator, I have no objection to this amendment going to conference, so that it may be before us, and the broad question may be looked into.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement with respect to the amendment.

This subject has not been touched in any of the amendments. The War Department has established certain metals as strategic metals. The list is as follows: Manganese, chromium, mercury, tungsten, nickel, tin, and antimony.

In the first place, no revenue would be derived from that source in any circumstances. The total value of the production of those metals in the United States last year was less than $10,000,000. It is perfectly evident that no revenue would be obtained from that source.

To save time, I shall ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain statistics from the Bureau of Mines. The manganese produced in this country is from 5 to 6 percent of our requirements. Ninety-four percent of it is imported. It is an absolute essential to steel manufacture. Our imports come from Russia and the Gold Coast. Thirty-four and four-tenths percent of our imports come from Russia, and 26.2 percent from the Gold Coast. Practically all our imports come from those two places. So far as Russia is concerned, there are several ways in which our imports might be shut off. Only recently a press dispatch from Russia stated that Russia was about to place an embargo against the exportation of manganese because it was required in Russia. What should we do if the export from Russia were cut off? We could not manufacture steel.

We have slightly increased the production of manganese in the United States in the past year. Processes are now being developed for handling low-grade manganese. The Government is spending hundreds of millions of dollars in an effort to increase the production of all these materials.

Chromium is essential to the manufacture of high-grade steel. We produce only 1 percent of our requirements. Ninety-nine percent is imported. We obtain nearly all our importation of chromium from Africa and British possessions. They may come into the hands of an enemy, and our importations may be cut off.

Quicksilver is in the same position. Seventy-four percent of our quicksilver, which is an essential war material, comes through Spain. Nine percent of it comes from Italy. It is perfectly obvious that that importation may be cut off.

With respect to tungsten, we are in better shape. We produce in this country about four-fifths of the tungsten we use, but the tungsten we import comes chiefly from China. That source of importation undoubtedly will be cut off. The next largest importation comes from British Malaya. That source is in danger of being cut off.

With regard to nickel, we are in good shape, because most of it is imported from Canada.

With respect to tin, we obtain nearly all our tin from the United Kingdom, from the Netherlands East Indies, and from China. Those sources may be cut off. It is true that there is very little chance of materially increasing tin production in this country. Nevertheless, recently there have been some developments which are very encouraging with regard to tin.

Nearly all our antimony is obtained from China. That importation may be cut off.

The position I present is merely this: These are essential war materials. It is so stated by the War Department. Our importations may be cut off. It is necessary to increase production in this country. With these new industries expanding rapidly, or attempting to expand rapidly, generally with a great loss of money for several years, it is impracticable to attempt to assess excess profits taxes against them.

I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD certain statistics from the Bureau of Mines.

There being no objection, the statistics were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STRATEGIC MINERALS

The United States Bureau of Mines has compiled the following break-down of the percentage of individual strategic minerals produced domestically and the percentage of necessary importation of such strategic minerals, computed over a recent 5-year period in peacetime:

	Produced domestically	Necessary importation
	Percent	Percent
Manganese	5.0–6.0	94.0
Chromium	1.0	99.0
Mercury	40.0	60.0
Tungsten	50.0	50.9
Nickel	.5	99.5
Tin	.2	99.8
Antimony	10.0	90.0

MANGANESE

	Long tons
Manganese produced in United States, 1938	25,321
Manganese imported into United States, 1938	483,588
Manganese available for domestic consumption	508,909

Imported manganese was procured from the following countries:

	Long tons	Percent
Russia	166,043	34.4
Cuba	131,423	27.2
Gold Coast	126,858	26.2
Brazil	29,698	5.6
British India	25,480	5.5
Philippine Islands	4,002	.6
France	68	.0001
Canada	2	.000004
Other countries	14	.00002
1938 total imports	483,588	99.60

It is also interesting to note that importation of manganese in 1939 increased some 200,000 long tons over the 1938 figure. In 1939 the United States imported 698,490 long tons as against the 1938 figure of 483,588 long tons.

CHROMITE

	Long tons
Chromite produced in United States, 1939	3,614
Chromite imported into United States, 1939	317,511
Amount of chromite available for domestic consumption	321,125

Imported chromite was procured from the following countries:

	Long tons	Percent
Africa (Union of South Africa, other British South Africa, other British West Africa, and Mozambique)	118,233	37
Philippine Islands	71,914	29
Cuba	66,002	21
Turkey	16,632	5
New Caledonia	14,359	5
Greece	11,000	3
1939 total imports	317,511	100

MERCURY

	Flasks
Mercury produced in United States, 1939	18,633
Mercury imported into United States, 1939	3,499
Total	22,132
Mercury exported from United States, 1939	1,208
Amount of mercury available for domestic consumption	20,924

Imported mercury was procured from the following countries:

	Flasks	Percent
Spain	2,601	74.2
Mexico	563	16.0
Italy	336	9.8
1939 total imports	3,500	100

NOTE: A flask of mercury is equivalent to 76 pounds of mercury.

TUNGSTEN

	Pounds
Tungsten produced in United States, 1939	4,080,024
Tungsten imported into United States, 1939	1,485,157
Amount of tungsten available for consumption	5,565,181

Imported tungsten was procured from the following countries:

	Pounds	Percent
China	899,806	60.5
Mexico	146,637	10.0
British Malaya	123,682	8.6
Bolivia	96,164	6.4
Argentina	76,524	5.0
Australia	56,639	4.0
Peru	48,625	3.2
Ecuador	21,326	1.4
Burma	12,878	.8
French Indo-China	2,876	.1
1939 total imports	1,485,157	100.0

NICKEL

	Short tons
Nickel produced in United States, 1939	394
Nickel imported into United States, 1939	64,796
Total	65,190
Nickel exported from United States, 1939	10,167
Amount of nickel available for consumption	55,023

Imported nickel was procured from only one country: Canada, 98 percent.

TIN

	Long tons
Tin produced in United States, 1939	34
Tin imported into United States, 1939	70,102
Total	70,136
Tin exported from United States, 1939	1,997
Amount of tin available for domestic consumption	68,139

Imported tin was procured from the following countries:

	Long tons	Percent
British Malaya	46,785	66.6
United Kingdom	10,698	15.2
Netherlands India	5,316	7.5
China	3,259	4.6

ANTIMONY

	Short tons
Antimony produced in United States, 1939	393
Antimony imported into United States, 1939	1,045
Total	1,438
Antimony exported from United States, 1939	58
Amount of antimony available for consumption	1,380

Imported antimony was procured from the following countries:

	Short tons	Percent
China	661	64
Belgium	191	18
Mexico	125	12
France	56	5
United Kingdom	12	1
1939 total imports of antimony	1,045	100

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I offer another amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 97, in the committee amendment, line 11, it is proposed to strike out paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) of subsection (b) and insert:

(1) By computing the aggregate of the excess profits net income for each of the taxable years of the taxpayer beginning after December 31, 1935, and before January 1, 1940, reduced, in the case of each such taxable year in which the deductions plus the credit for dividends received exceeded the gross income, by the amount of such excess determined as provided in paragraph (4); but there shall be excluded from such computation the excess profits net income or excess of deductions plus the credit for dividends received over gross income for one of such taxable years, as the taxpayer may select.

(2) By dividing the amount ascertained under paragraph (1) by the total number of months in all such taxable years, less the number of months in the taxable year selected by the taxpayer for exclusion under paragraph (1); and

(3) By multiplying the amount ascertained under paragraph (2) by 12.

(4) For the purposes of paragraph (1), in determining whether, for any taxable year, the deductions plus the credit for dividends received exceeded the gross income, and in determining the amount of such excess, the adjustments provided in section 711 (b) (1) shall be made.

On page 126, line 16, in the committee amendment it is proposed to strike out subsections (b) and (c) and insert:

(b) By adding the plus amounts ascertained under subsection (a) (3) for each year of the base period, and subtracting from such sum the sum of the minus amounts, excluding, however, one of such plus amounts, or one of such minus amounts, as the taxpayer may select.

(c) By dividing the amount ascertained under subsection (b) by three.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I wish to apologize for the language. The language was taken from the bill itself. As I understand, it is a repetition of the language in the bill, with the exception of one paragraph. The one paragraph is paragraph (2), which says:

By dividing the amount ascertained under paragraph (1) by the total number of months in all such taxable years, less the number of months in the taxable year selected by the taxpayer for exclusion under paragraph (1).

All it means is simply this: Instead of having 4 years, and being allowed to set aside 1 of the 4 years, and dividing the 3 remaining years by 4, the amendment provides for dividing the 3 years by 3. The absurdity of thinking that anyone is receiving a benefit by being allowed to deduct an abnormally low year, and then divide the profit for the other 3 years by 4, should be apparent. If there were a profit of $100 a year for 3 years, and for the 4th year there were a profit of $80, if the $380 were divided by 4 the result would be $95, which is below the normal profit for 3 years. If there were no profit for 1 year, if 1 year should represent a total loss, and the profit for the 3 years selected were divided by 4, the result would be $75.

In other words, any way on earth it is figured, you are $25 below the normal average.

If you are going to have a normal proposition, have it normal; but it is absurd to say that you will get an average normal when you divide 3 by 4.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I would have no objection to the amendment going to conference striking out "4" and inserting "3." That is what the Senator seeks, as I understand.

Mr. PITTMAN. I seek to have the 3 years divided by 3 instead of 4.

Mr. HARRISON. The only trouble is that the Senator's amendment would strike from the bill one or two amendments which the Senate Finance Committee put in which we thought would be very helpful, and which we wanted to have go to conference. As the amendment is drawn, those parts which are stricken out, which are in the bill, would not be in conference, and they ought to be in conference.

As to taking 3 out of 4 years to reach the average earning, the Treasury and the House Ways and Means Committee have practically come to an accord; but at the last moment they found that there would be such a loss of revenue by virtue of this amendment that they adopted another method of dealing with these deficit years. There was strong sentiment in the Finance Committee to give corporations the advantage of 3 out of 4 years in selecting the average-earning base method; but when we struck out the 4.1 percent and put the 3.1 percent tax on all corporations we felt that the bill could not stand it. There would be too much loss of revenue.

What I was trying to see was if we could not preserve the part that we adopted in the Senate committee bill, and then the Senator may offer this amendment, and it may be in conference for debate.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Nevada is willing to offer it in any way possible. The Senator from Nevada may say that he does not know how to offer it, because he does not know what the bill means.

Mr. HARRISON. I have just been able to secure the text of the amendment which the Senator has offered. Of course, I could not pass on a proposition of this importance until I could read the amendment. The experts are now seeing if we can let it go to conference without destroying the effects of what the Finance Committee has done in getting this formula. Will not the Senator withhold the amendment for a moment?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly; I will withhold it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, as I understand, the committee amendment is still open to amendment. It has been reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In addition to that, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote on the amendment to section 724, "Personal service corporations," offered on Saturday by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], and adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator seeks to undo to some extent what was done by the substitute amendment offered on Saturday and agreed to?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is true. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan was intended to obviate some ambiguities in the bill, and it appears that that has not been completely done. The purpose of the amendment which I now seek to offer is simply to remove the ambiguities. If the chairman of the committee is willing to take the matter to conference and have it examined, I shall be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. HARRISON. I think it ought to go to conference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say to the chairman of the committee that I have discussed the matter both with the officials of the Treasury and with members of the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, and they say there is no question that the old definition of the 1917 act, which has been adopted practically verbatim in this bill as it came over from the House, was ambiguous, and resulted in a great deal of litigation, I think to the extent of 14,000 lawsuits. What we are seeking to do is to remove the ambiguity as to what are personal-service corporations. The Treasury officials and the members of the staff of the joint committee have told me that the subject ought to be redefined, but they have frankly stated that they have been so overpressed with the amount of work which has been put upon them by the two committees that they have not had an opportunity to do it. If the chairman of the committee is willing to take this amendment to conference, I shall be perfectly satisfied with whatever the conferees do about the matter.

Mr. BROWN rose.

Mr. HARRISON. I am perfectly willing to take it to conference. I think it ought to be sent to conference, but I think the amendment which was adopted the other day ought to go to conference, too. Therefore, I was wondering if it would not be better to offer this amendment not as a subsitute but as another amendment, so that both of them would be in conference.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for that suggestion. I think that is the proper course to follow.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then I will change the text of this amendment, and offer it as a new subsection to be inserted at the proper place, which I assume would be immediately after the amendment adopted the other day at the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment of Mr. CLARK of Missouri is as follows:

Insert at the proper place in the bill the following:

"As used in this subchapter, the term 'personal-service corporation' means a corporation in which capital is not a material income-producing factor and either

"(1) At least 80 percent in value of whose capital stock is owned at all times during the taxable year by shareholders who are regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation, or

"(2) Whose income is to be ascribed primarily to the activities of shareholders who are regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation, all of whose stock is owned at all times during the taxable year by or for not more than 20 individuals but does not include any foreign corporation, nor any corporation 50 percent or more of whose gross income consists of gains, profits, or income derived from trading as a principal. For the purposes of this subsection, an individual shall be considered as owning, at any time, the stock owned at such time by his spouse or minor child or by any guardian or trustee representing them."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I have another amendment which is not an amendment to the committee amendment, and I do not wish to interfere with any Senator who has an amendment to offer to the committee amendment while it has been reconsidered. I shall ask the Chair for recognition again later in the day.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, a day or two ago, in an effort to protect the mining industry and certain other industries in which a period of research and development precedes the reward, I offered an amendment to the committee amendment, which was inserted in line 8 on page 110, which provided that the abnormal profit or income derived as a result of some periods of research should be attributed to a period of not to exceed 5 years. The chairman of the Finance Committee, with amiable generosity, suggested to me that perhaps 10 years would be all right; and, rather overwhelmed by the generosity, I agreed to it. I should like to reinstate my original amendment, and substitute "five" for "ten." Therefore, I move, in the amendment I offered, that the word "ten" be stricken out and the word "five" inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered; and, without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado will be agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, proposing to add a new section to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in the bill at the proper place, as a new section, the following:

That any taxpayer shall be allowed credit against the tax for the calendar years 1936, 1937, 1938, and 1939, imposed by section 901 of the Social Security Act for the amount of contributions, with respect to employment during such years, paid by him before the sixtieth day after the enactment of this act, into an unemployment fund under a State law. The provisions of such act (except the provision limiting such credit to amounts paid before the date of filing returns) shall apply to allowance of credit under this act, and the terms used in this act shall have the same meaning as when used in the Social Security Act.

Refund of the tax (including penalty and interest collected with respect thereto, if any), based on any credit allowable under this section, may be made in accordance with the provisions of law applicable in the case of erroneous or illegal collection of the tax. No interest shall be allowed or paid on the amount of any such refund.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I apologize to the chairman of the Committee on Finance and the other members of the committee, as well as the Senate, for not bringing this matter to the attention of the Committee on Finance when the bill was under consideration in the committee. The reason was that at that time the ruling which brings about the offering of the amendment had not been made, and it naturally had not been called to my attention.

The amendment has to do with this situation: In many cases, and usually, I am informed, in cases of small corporations, under the Social Security Act, taxes were not paid on employees employed by independent subcontractors. Those taxes were not paid at that time in agreement with what was universally understood to be the law. Now the Bureau of Internal Revenue has reversed its ruling and has concluded that the original employer is liable for the social-security taxes on employees of subcontractors. So that there is no question about the liability, and the amendment does not affect the liabilities of those companies. But in the meantime the time within which credit can be claimed for taxes paid the States for offsets on their taxes has expired, and unless the amendment or some such provision shall be adopted, simply to extend the time, these people are going to be forced to pay the Federal tax of 5 percent and, in addition, a State tax of 4½ percent, which in many cases would wipe out small corporations.

The only purpose of the amendment is to extend the time within which such taxpayers may claim credit for social security taxes paid the States, and all I ask the chairman of the committee to do is to take it to conference.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it is perfectly satisfactory to us to have the amendment go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I now offer the amendment which I withheld. The amendment has been read once, and I ask unanimous consent that it be not read again.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the amendment is satisfactory now. The experts have looked over it, and it is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada on page 97, line 11, which has heretofore been read.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have one amendment to offer, but I desire to say a word of explanation.

Under the rule now followed in the House of Representatives and in the Senate with reference to conference reports, this matter would probably be in conference, but since identical language is used in both the bill as it passed the House and in the Senate committee bill, I personally would feel some moral compunction in urging the conference to consider the subject matter of the amendment without action by the Senate on the matter. I desire to offer the amendment for the purpose of taking the question to conference.

I will say, without reading the language of the amendment, unless some Senator desires to have me read it, that the graduated excess-profits rates in the bill which passed the House and in the Senate committee bill are based merely upon dollar value, without any reference to the percentage of earnings to invested capital, or the prior earnings of any company. In the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the whole of titles I and II of the bill he corrected this manifest error.

I understand that one of the primary reasons why the brackets were based upon dollars rather than upon the percentage of earnings to invested capital or prior earnings was a desire to aid the smaller corporations to protect the revenue. So the amendment I offer preserves both the dollar brackets for the benefit of the smaller corporation, if it is a benefit—and I presume it is—and at the same time returns to the sounder principle of measuring the tax by the percentage of earnings to invested capital, or prior earnings. I hope the amendment may be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 84 it is proposed to strike out in the committee amendment, beginning with line 17 down to and including line 25, on page 85, and in lieu thereof to insert:

25 percent of so much of the adjusted excess profits net income as does not exceed the greater of $20,000 or 20 percent of the excess-profits credit;

30 percent of so much of the adjusted excess profits net income as exceeds the greater of $20,000 or 20 percent of the excess-profits credit and does not exceed the greater of $50,000 or 40 percent of such credit;

35 percent of so much of the adjusted excess profits net income as exceeds the greater of $50,000 or 40 percent of the excess-profits credit and does not exceed the greater of $100,000 or 60 percent of such credit;

40 percent of so much of the adjusted excess profits net income as exceeds the greater of $100,000 or 60 percent of the excess-profits credit and does not exceed the greater of $250,000 or 80 percent of such credit;

45 percent of so much of the adjusted excess profits net income as exceeds the greater of $250,000 or 80 percent of the excess-profits credit and does not exceed the greater of $500,000 or 100 percent of such credit; and

50 percent of so much of the adjusted excess profits net income as exceeds the greater of $500,000 or 100 percent of the excess-profits credit.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. If he were present he would vote "yea." If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], who is necessarily absent. I understand that, if present, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that, if present, he would vote "yea." If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senators from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY and Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are necessarily absent. I an advised that, if present and voting, these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] are unavoidably detained.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pair on this question: The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who would vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if it is too late to request that the bill with all its amendments be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is out of order at this time.

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 22, as follows:

So the bill (H. R. 10413) was passed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KING, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. CAPPER, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed showing the Senate amendments by number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WHO PAYS THE TAXES?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have asked the Senator from Mississippi to yield in order that I may place at this point in the RECORD a statement which I gave out yesterday with respect to the monograph which has just been prepared for the Temporary National Economic Committee upon the general subject Who Pays the Taxes?

I think it is altogether appropriate at this point. I may say that in this pamphlet there is contained a table which shows that individuals who receive incomes of $1,500 or less in the United States are so numerous that in spite of the small compensation which they receive annually, their total receipts are in excess of $24,000,000,000, twice as much as the receipts of all individuals whose annual income amounts to $15,000 or more.

A conclusion to be drawn from these statistics is that the national tax receipts could be increased to a much greater extent by improving the economic status of the lower-income groups than by increasing the tax burden upon the upper-income groups.

The facts which are set forth in the monograph I think are of particular interest, and I ask unanimous consent that the table to which I have just referred, and the statement, may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement and the table are as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, CHAIRMAN OF THE TEMPORARY NATIONAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE, ON TEMPORARY NATIONAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE MONOGRAPH, WHO PAYS THE TAXES?

It makes no difference who actually signs the check or delivers the cash to the tax collector, the real burden of taxation is borne by the public and not by any particular class of taxpayers. This, at least, seems to be the conclusion to be drawn from a monograph entitled "Who Pays the Taxes?" which has just been prepared by the Department of Commerce for the Temporary National Economic Committee. The document is now in the Government Printing Office and should be ready for public distribution within a week or 10 days. It is particularly appropriate and timely now that Congress is about to enact the new tax measure, popularly known as the excess-profits tax bill.

The authors of the study, Dr. Gerhard Colm and Helen Tarasov, tax experts of the Department of Commerce, have used the statistics available from Government reports to allocate all forms of taxes imposed upon the American people according to income brackets. According to their figures, for example, 26 percent of all taxes imposed by Federal, State, and local governments were actually paid in 1939 by persons whose incomes were less than $1,000 a year.

It would appear from these figures that persons falling into this salary group comprised 46 percent of all persons or corporations receiving income and that their receipts amounted to 18 percent of all income that year. In other words, they were so numerous that, although individually their incomes are in the lowest bracket, the total income received by all of them was so great that it amounted to more than the total income of all persons receiving $15,000 annually.

It also appears from the study that these persons whose income is so small that they cannot save, and, in many instances, are compelled to borrow or to use funds not included in their current income for living expenses, nevertheless spent 23 percent of the entire amount expended for all current consumption purposes.

To put it in another way, the expenditure by a large number of persons with small incomes for the bare necessities of life constitute a much larger proportion of total expenditures by the whole population than the amounts paid out by persons with incomes in excess of $15,000 annually. It would appear, for example, from this study that despite the high plane of living of those who receive incomes in excess of $15,000, their expenditures account for less than 5 percent of all consumption expenditures and for approximately only 20 percent of all taxes. Persons who fall into this bracket would seem, according to the study, to comprise only one-half of 1 percent of all income units.

Another interesting point developed by the study is that a larger proportion of the total tax payment goes to State and local governments than to the Federal Government. Tax payments in 1939 accounted for 20 percent of all income received by all classes. Of the total, 11 percent was paid to State and local governments and 9 percent to the Federal Government. But those with incomes of more than $10,000 paid proportionately more to the Federal tax collector than did those with incomes in the lower brackets, for the taxes paid by the income group in the lower brackets consisted largely of levies on property and sales as well as consumption taxes. Those in the higher brackets also participated in the payment of such taxes, but since they are not so numerous their contribution was not so large as that of the persons who constitute the small-income groups. The total payment by the taxpayers in the upper-income groups is increased by levies upon profits, incomes, and on inheritances.

The monograph does not contain any recommendation and is not to be regarded as in any sense representing the conclusions of the Temporary National Economic Committee by which it is received solely as factual material for consideration in the later deliberations of the committee.

It is of great interest, however, because it is apparently the first scientific study that has been made of the aggregate effect of taxes on the several income groups. All levies were arranged by type and grouped in three classes, namely, those falling on personal incomes, those which are classified as consumption taxes, and finally business taxes.

Copies of the study, which will be published as the Temporary National Economic Committee Monograph No. 3, will soon be available from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. In the meantime copies will be placed on file in the office of the executive secretary of the committee, room 281, Apex Building, Washington, and at the Library of Congress for inspection by interested parties.

Another study on Taxation of Corporate Enterprise is also in the process of preparation. This has been prepared by Mr. Clifford J. Hynning, of the Department of Commerce, in consultation with Dr. Colm, and will cover the whole field of corporate taxation. It is expected that this study also will be ready for publication in the near future.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am delighted that the Senator from Wyoming has placed in the RECORD the statement and table to which he referred. I am sure it will be a valuable contribution.

TRANSPORTATION IN COMMERCE OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must state that under the unanimous-consent agreement previously entered into it now becomes the duty of the Chair, immediately on the passage of the tax bill, to lay before the Senate the conference report on Senate bill 3550. The report was read and considered on the 12th instant.

The Chair lays before the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3550) to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce.

(For the above-mentioned conference report, see page 11972 of the Senate proceedings of September 12, 1940.)

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, has the Chair laid down the conference report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report has been laid before the Senate in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is obvious we cannot dispose of the conference report today, because I understand some Senators wish to discuss it. Therefore I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I withhold it.

Mr. NEELY. I inquire of the Senator from Kentucky whether or not it is understood that we shall proceed to the consideration of the conference report tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that is the understanding, and it is the order of the Senate. It is now the unfinished business, and will so remain until it shall have been disposed of.

EXPANSION OF LENDING AUTHORITY OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, for a week I have been prepared to present the report of the conferees on the so-called Export-Import Bank bill. I hope that when the conference report which is now the unfinished business shall have been disposed of I may have an opportunity to present the conference report to which I refer.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is entirely satisfactory.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR LUNDEEN

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 308, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 308) submitted by Mr. SHIPSTEAD on September 6, 1940, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate in arranging for and attending the funeral of Hon. Ernest Lundeen, late a Senator from the State of Minnesota, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

REGULATION OF INSURANCE BUSINESS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senator from Kentucky to recall his brief conversation with me the other day with reference to taking up a District insurance bill. At that time we thought we might get it up that day, but unfortunate events intervened. Since there is no objection to disposing of this particular matter, which is very unimportant to most people, and which has hitherto been thoroughly explained, I hope that perhaps tomorrow we may take it up.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall be glad to discuss the matter with the Senator.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I renew the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James F. T. O'Connor to be United States district judge for the southern district of California.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask that all Army nominations appearing on the Executive Calendar be confirmed en bloc, and that the President be notified of this action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Army nominations are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to make a further request in connection with these nominations. The nominations which have just been confirmed are routine in character; and, because of the large amount of printing involved, I ask unanimous consent that the names of the persons nominated for appointment, promotion, or transfer in the Regular Army be not again printed, but that proper reference be made to the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on which the nominations appear.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I merely wish to call the attention of the Senate to the long list of Army officers promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel. A few weeks ago we had the Army promotion bill before the Senate, and during the course of the debate I stated to the Senate that if that bill should be passed we would have more colonels in the Army than there are in the State of Kentucky.

I also stated that we would have more colonels in the Army than majors and captains combined. I notice that today we are confirming the appointment of a long list of officers who have been advanced to the rank of lieutenant colonel under the provisions of that act. The list includes some 400 or more nominations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next nomination on the calendar.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, September 20, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God, Thou art the eternal source of every blessing and every joy; Thy goodness and mercy crown each day. Continue, our Father, to let the dawn of each day come to us with the breath of God. We thank Thee that our times are in Thy hands and Thou art with us in every state. Let us look beyond created things and find our abiding peace and fondest hopes in the sovereignty of our Lord and Saviour. Let us hear the inward voice that speaks and vitalizes human life. Give wisdom that we may know how to use our power and may all problems yield to one solution and that is to a high sense of right. Bless us with a deep zeal for righteousness, with sound reasoning which gives release to the channels of justice to all and let these be the fruits of the benediction of our Redeemer and Elder Brother. With sincerity of purpose and with quietness of temper, help us to pass through the duties of this day. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, September 16, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3426. An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, and as reenacted by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. TOBEY members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agencies:

1. Department of Agriculture.
2. Department of the Interior.
3. Department of Justice.
4. Civil Aeronautics Authority.
5. Federal Works Agency.
6. Interstate Commerce Commission.
7. The National Archives.

The message also announced that the Senate had ordered that Mr. WHEELER and Mr. REED be appointed as additional conferees on the part of the Senate to the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 162) entitled "An act to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes."

DESIGNATION OF TEMPORARY CLERK

The Speaker laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

SEPTEMBER 17, 1940.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Desiring to be temporarily absent from my office, I hereby designate Mr. H. Newlin Megill, an official in my office, to sign any and all papers and do all other acts for me which he would be authorized to do by virtue of this designation and of clause 4, rule III, of the House.

Respectfully yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a very beautiful radio speech made on the late Speaker, the Honorable William B. Bankhead, by Mr. Earl Godwin.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN]?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF COMMODITY EXCHANGE ACT

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4088) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to fats and oils, cottonseed, cottonseed meal, and peanuts, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman is asking only that this bill go to conference?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed the following conferees: Messrs. FULMER, BEAM, PACE, HOPE, and KINZER.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a resolution adopted by the Virginia delegation on the occasion of the death of our late Speaker, the Honorable WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

There was no objection.

The resolution referred to follows:

At a meeting of the Virginia delegation of the House of Representatives in the Seventy-sixth Congress of the United States, held on the 18th day of September 1940, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, first, That the Virginia members of the House of Representatives in the Seventy-sixth Congress desire to record their deep appreciation of the patriotic, untiring, faithful and devoted service of WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, of Alabama, as Speaker of the House of Representatives in the Seventy-fourth, Seventy-fifth, and Seventy-sixth Congresses of the United States.

"Second, that in the death of WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, the Nation has sustained an irreparable loss, the House of Representatives a wise counselor and guide, Alabama an ever loyal son, and the Democratic Party one of its most courageous champions.

"Third, that Speaker BANKHEAD added a new luster to the office of Speaker by his fair, courteous, and faithful administration of the duties of that high office, in which he was always impelled by the highest ideals and the loftiest patriotism.

"Fourth, that the members of the Virginia delegation will always cherish their memories of their service with Speaker BANKHEAD will find in his work in these most trying times an inspiration and an example.

"Fifth, that the dean of this delegation is authorized to request that a copy of these resolutions be made a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and to transmit a copy to the family of the deceased."

SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND.

A. WILLIS ROBERTSON.
COLGATE W. DARDEN, JR.
DAVE E. SATTERFIELD, JR.

THE LATE SPEAKER BANKHEAD

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of Calif. Mr. Speaker, I take this occasion simply to pay my tribute to our late Speaker, the Honorable WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD. May I say to the House that ever since I came here as a new Member 4 years ago and during all the time I have served as a Member of this House he has been an inspiration to me and his memory always will be. It is a source of silent but real satisfaction to me to be able to remember that I cast my vote for him when he was candidate for Vice President of the United States at the Democratic Convention held at Chicago.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Herald of September 18, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JONKMAN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of all business on the Speaker's table and after the disposition of any special orders heretofore made, I may address the House for 25 minutes on next Monday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include, first, a tribute paid to the present Speaker of the House in an article in the Denison Herald by George W. Stimpson, and, second, to include a letter written to me by H. P. Drought, State administrator for Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two letters, one from Charles Talmadge Cobb, of Collinsville, Ala., and the other from T. K. Stapleton, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Jackson, Miss., regarding my remarks inserted in the RECORD on September 14, entitled "Caught in the Draft."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article and statement by Henry F. Grady, Assistant Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. PATMAN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ind'ana?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement with regard to Richard Rollins, a former investigator of the McCormack committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

[Mr. DICKSTEIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1940

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing I report (H. Rept. No. 2948) an original privileged concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 88) authorizing the printing of additional copies of Public Law No. 785, entitled "Transportation Act of 1940," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 60,000 additional copies of Public Law No. 785, current Congress, entitled "Transportation Act of 1940," of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room and 50,000 copies shall be for the use of the House document room.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, this resolution refers to the Transportation Act?

Mr. JARMAN. It does.

Mr. MICHENER. This resolution is just to authorize the printing of additional copies of that act which are being requested?

Mr. JARMAN. That is true. There is a very general demand for them.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I had a special order permitting me to address the House for half an hour on yesterday. In view of the fact that the House was not in session yesterday, does the calendar of yesterday carry over to today?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that today, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have 7 days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the subject of our late Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects, and in one to include a short editorial and in the other to include some resolutions prepared by the Western Association of State Game and Fish Commissions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial appearing in the Gettysburg Star and Sentinel.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on an important subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FRIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered to the United Federal Workers of America.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I have two requests. First, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein excerpts from articles by A. H. Lane. Second, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein excerpts from a book entitled "The Hidden Hand."

Mr. SABATH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief editorial from the Sault Ste. Marie Evening News.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RISK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech delivered by the Governor of Rhode Island on September 1.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. RISK. Mr. Speaker, I further ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short article appearing in the Pawtucket Times on Federal pensions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an article by Bruce Catton on the subject No Faith In Voluntary Enlistments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

ARMY HOUSING

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 607), making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 607

Resolved, etc., That the following sums are appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, namely:

Military posts: For construction and installation of buildings, flying fields, and appurtenances thereto, including the acquisition of land, rights appertaining thereto, leasehold and other interests therein, and temporary use thereof, without regard to the provisions of sections 355, 1136, and 3648, Revised Statutes, as amended (10 U. S. C. 1339; 40 U. S. C. 255; 31 U. S. C. 529), $329,519,902.

Acquisition of land: For acquisition of land, including rights pertaining thereto, leasehold and other interests therein, and temporary use thereof, without regard to the provisions of sections 355, 1136, and 3648, Revised Statutes, as amended (10 U. S. C. 1339; 40 U. S. C. 255; 31 U. S. C. 529), $8,744,000.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes in explanation of the request.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is this the bill that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has agreed may be brought up by unanimous consent and passed by unanimous consent?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman cannot agree to pass it by unanimous consent.

Mr. MICHENER. I mean, so far as he is concerned.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; it is the same bill.

Mr. MICHENER. That ought to be a good recommendation.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimouse consent to proceed for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. In explanation of the request for immediate consideration, Mr. Speaker, the funds carried in this joint resolution, $338,263,902, are for the emergency housing of the conscripted army.

You will recall that we wrote into the so-called conscription bill a provision that no men shall be inducted for such training and service until adequate provision shall have been made for such shelter, and so forth. The Committee on Appropriations has started hearings on the $1,600,000,000 appropriation for the National Guard and the conscripted army, but it has developed, of course, that the matter of housing the selective trainees is a very vital portion of the program and every day counts. Housing for the National Guard already has been provided for. If Congress recesses until the first of the week and we are not able to get the entire program in shape for report before the first of next week, it will be several days afterward before there could be consideration. If we could pass this resolution today for the housing part of the program and get Senate action on it, it would save a week's time.

The Subcommittee on Deficiencies of the Committee on Appropriations has gone into the matter and there is a unanimous report from that subcommittee. We also have contacted the members of the full committee and my information is that there is no objection on the part of a majority of the members to the consideration of the measure at this time and in this way.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Who is going to handle this housing matter under this measure?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is to be handled by the Quartermaster General of the Army.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Are they handling the other contracts now for the defense program?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They are.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. And does the gentleman think that everything is going satisfactorily with regard to the letting of those contracts?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Are any of these buildings to be erected at any place other than in continental United States?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; some of this money for construction will be used upon projects in Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And some of it in South America?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not a penny of it.

Mr. LUDLOW. Some in Puerto Rico.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Puerto Rico; yes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Will we have an opportunity to have something to say in reference to this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If permission is granted for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution, it is my intention to ask unanimous consent that we have 30 minutes of debate, the time to be equally divided in order that the matter may be fully discussed by the membership of the House.

Mr. RICH. We could not discuss it very fully in 30 minutes; but the point I make is that you are proposing to appropriate this money out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and I had some pertinent questions to ask the majority side of the House about where that money is, because I know everybody is trying to get their hands on it, and if there is any money of that kind in this country I would like to know where it is.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I know the question the gentleman always asks, and I have asked that question, too, but right now this conscription army has got to be housed.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman is absolutely right about that.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. And the money has to be obtained from somewhere.

Mr. RICH. That is right.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. And there is no question right now about having to do this job.

Mr. RICH. The point I want to make is about the extravagant expenditure of funds that has been going on for the last 7 or 8 years and ask whether we are going to try to cut down on those expenses in order that we may maintain this army after we conscript them.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not think this is any time to talk about that, I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I think it is a very pertinent question to ask now. I think the proper time has been here during the last 7 or 8 years, and, as much as I like the gentleman from Virginia, I do not believe we could spend any time more wisely or judiciously than to try to get the Government to cut down its enormous overhead and its vast expenditures that are doing this country no good. We ought to do that and the gentleman from Virginia knows it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RICH. I yield. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. How much does the gentleman think ought to be cut from this appropriation?

Mr. RICH. I do not believe anything ought to be cut off of this appropriation, because I think we ought to house these boys. I think that some time ought to be given by the Members of Congress to trying to cut down in some places where it can be cut down wisely and judiciously.

Mr. RABAUT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. I asked the gentleman to yield in order to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] if he knows anybody in his district who is against this idea?

Mr. RICH. There are hundreds of thousands of people in my district who are against conscription——

Mr. RABAUT. I did not ask about conscription. I asked you about housing these boys. Do not dodge the issue.

Mr. RICH. They are against trying to conscript boys in peacetime, and the gentleman knows there are many people in Michigan who are against it, too.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman from Virginia should include a request for a reasonable time for discussion of the resolution. I would suggest something like 40 minutes, the time to be equally divided. Then, of course, it will have to be considered under the 5-minute rule after that if anyone cares to offer amendments.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I amend the unanimous-consent request to ask that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, and that there be 40 minutes of general debate, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia, as modified?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the Deficiency Subcommittee on Appropriations whether there was any consideration given by the deficiency committee to providing for reports from the quartermaster general to the Appropriations Committee on these expenditures? I have just had a few minutes to look over the break-down submitted. I notice suggested construction in different parts of the country and possessions for barracks and housing of various kinds. It is the practice of the War Department subcommittee, of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] is the distinguished chairman, in considering these requests that we make a limitation or at least have an understanding with the War Department that the construction of quarters shall not exceed a certain amount for this or that type of construction, taking into consideration the locality and the conditions prevailing there. But in this resolution there is no such limitation. I would like to have the assurance of the gentleman that the quartermaster's department, the War Department, will make some report to the Appropriations Committee and the proper subcommittees thereof with respect to these expenditures.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We expect to get that report, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not know anything about this until a few minutes ago. I just saw this break-down of the appropriation for the first time. I went into this housing matter very carefully a year ago. I have before me photographs of temporary quarters in Panama which were erected at a cost of $150 per man. If anyone wants to see them, I have them right here. These are very good temporary quarters, constructed of wood. Of course, they are a different type than is required here. They do not require heating and they have no foundations in Panama. However, we have temporary quarters, "enlisted men, listed at $450 per man, a total of $226,000,000." The Army officials claim that construction in Panama is 25 percent higher than it is in the United States, and it costs $150 per man there and $450 per man here. Has the gentleman from Virginia gone into that?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not know whether the gentleman's Panama figures include the utilities that go with housing.

Mr. ENGEL. They do not.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Well, the $450 per man is not for housing alone. It also includes the utilities.

Mr. ENGEL. Surely the utilities do not cost twice the amount of the housing.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If the gentleman will permit the matter to come up for consideration he will have ample opportunity to express himself on it.

Mr. ENGEL. Will there be time for debate upon it?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Oh, yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXCESS-PROFITS TAX

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the adjournment of the House, the Clerk of the House be authorized to receive any message on the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, that the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate to such bill and agree to the conference thereon, and that the Speaker appoint managers on the part of the House to attend said conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MICHENER. What this request accomplishes is this——

Mr. DOUGHTON. This is the revenue bill. It will go to conference tomorrow if the Senate concludes the bill today.

Mr. MICHENER. If this request is granted, it will mean that the tax bill will go to conference and it will not be necessary for the House to remain in session tomorrow and Saturday?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is right.

Mr. TREADWAY. Reserving the right to object, I only do so to confirm the request which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] has made. I hope the request will be granted, and I can assure him that the minority will cooperate in every way possible to expedite the conference report.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not want to give my approval to this request if it is to be understood that the Members of this House in not objecting to the request do object to some of the very fine amendments which have been incorporated in the bill by our brethren on the other side of the Capitol. I therefore desire to suggest that the House conferees do not take the granting of this request as an indication that the Members of the House are unanimously opposed to all of the Senate amendments including several very good amendments.

Mr. DOUGHTON. All I can say to the gentleman is that this will be just like any other conference. The ranking minority Member can assure his colleagues that we will try to support the views of the House as far as it is possible.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Let it not be understood that in granting this request any Member of the House is indicatting that it is the will of the House to reject all or any of the Senate amendments, but that they are merely consenting to sending the bill to conference.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is a question which answers itself.

Mr. TREADWAY. This is a request neither to reject nor approve the bill, but merely to send it to conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman outline at this time what the program for next week will be?

Mr. WARREN. I understand that on Monday there will be the deficiency bill to be followed by any conference reports that may be ready. Beyond that I do not think any program has been set.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. TABER. We shall probably have to follow the deficiency bill—perhaps not Monday, but later in the week—with a resolution carrying funds to put the draft into effect.

Mr. WARREN. This is my understanding. That will probably come up the latter part of the week.

Mr. TABER. That we cannot tell exactly until next week.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I wish, temporarily, to withdraw my request.

PROTECTION OF DEFENSIVE MATERIAL AND UTILITIES

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following report on the bill, H. R. 10465 (Rept. No. 2952) entitled "An act to amend an act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material, or war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1918, for printing under the rule.

House Resolution 604

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 10465, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material, or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1918. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

ASSIGNMENT OF CLAIMS UNDER PUBLIC CONTRACTS

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following report on the bill H. R. 10464 (Rept. No. 2953), "A bill to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes to permit the assignment of claims under public contracts," for printing under the rule.

House Resolution 605

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 10464, a bill to assist in the national-defense program by amending sections 3477 and 3737 of the Revised Statutes to permit the assignment of claims under public contracts. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION FOR DEFENSE HOUSING

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

GOLD OWNED BY THE UNITED STATES

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to enlarge a little on what I said a while ago on the right of the United States Government to issue its own money or credit for our national-defense program. In this issue of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in the Appendix, will be found questions and answers I have prepared on this subject.

We have in this country approximately $21,000,000,000 in gold, and, as all of you know, the title to this gold is in the Government of the United States. Many people will try to make you believe that the Federal Reserve banks own this gold. Any statement to this effect is not true. This gold is owned by the Government of the United States.

PRIVATE BANKS USING GOVERNMENT CREDIT FREE

I concede that there is a logical argument to justify the private banks of the country in using the Government's credit in private transactions, but I do not concede to the private banks of the country the right to charge the Government for the use of the Government's own credit, and that is what we do under our present system of issuing and selling to the banks of the United States Government tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds. This gold, $21,000,000,000, if used as a 40-percent reserve or base, is sufficient to justify the issuance of more than $51,000,000,000, which would more than pay the national debt and at the same time provide much of the money for our national-defense and preparedness plan.

I would not advocate the payment of the national debt quickly or suddenly, but I do advocate a program by which eventually the national debt will be paid through the use of this gold and that our national-defense and preparedness plans be financed entirely by the use of this gold.

Under this particular bill under consideration, $525,000,000 will be spent. The way that money will be raised is this: $525,000,000 in bonds will be issued by the Treasury and sold to the banks. The banks will give the Treasury credit upon their books for $525,000,000. So far so good. Suppose now the banks need the money. They turn right around and put up those same bonds as collateral and get money issued by our Government in return for them. In that way and in other ways they are using the Government's credit absolutely free of charge. It is not right. There is no way you can justify it. As I said, you can justify it for private transactions as being in the interest of the public for our own economic good.

You cannot justify paying a few private bankers $525,000,000 in order to permit us to have $525,000,000 to spend for defense plans. By the time these bonds are paid for, which you will authorize, you will pay twice as much, and one-half will be interest.

EDISON SAID SYSTEM WRONG

At one time Mr. Thomas A. Edison was inspecting Muscle Shoals, and since he was in favor of improving Muscle Shoals, he was asked the question, "Are you in favor of issuing $30,000,000 in bonds for the purpose of carrying on this work?"

He said, in substance, "No; that would not be right. If you issue $30,000,000 in Government tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds to do this work, by the time the bonds are paid the private banks will have collected $30,000,000 in order to let the ones who furnish the materials and who do the work receive $30,000,000." He said that any government that can issue a dollar bond that is good can issue a dollar bill that is good, because they are made at exactly the same place and carry the same guaranty.

I want to appeal to the membership of this House to study this particular proposal at this time because it is not right to pay a few private bankers a billion dollars a year interest for the purpose of enabling us, upon our own credit, the credit of this Nation, to finance our national defense and preparedness program. There is no logic or reason that will justify it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it not a fact that under the Federal Reserve law of 1913 the Federal Government can issue $2.50 in currency for every dollar of gold we have in the vault?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; that is the recognized legal ratio; and that would amount to $51,000,000,000 now, based upon our $21,000,000,000 in gold.

Mr. HOUSTON. It could pay off the national debt?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; and we would have some money left over for national-defense plans, and we would also save over a billion dollars a year in interest.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKELSON. May I ask the gentleman if he is not willing to admit that a gold certificate is a claim against the gold in the United States Treasury?

Mr. PATMAN. If issued to people and other nations, that is true. If we issued gold certificates to a foreign nation, that would be a claim upon the gold.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS].

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House Military Affairs Committee may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill H. R. 10495.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution calls for $338,000,000, $8,744,000 to buy land and $329,000,000 to provide facilities to house and train the men who may be called to service.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the gentleman whether or not the provision that appears in this bill making such large appropriations is not to a certain extent based on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. AUSTIN] during the time that bill was up for consideration?

Mr. TABER. I believe the fact this bill has been brought in here at this particular moment providing as large an appropriation as it does for proper cantonments and hospital facilities is largely due to that amendment.

This resolution provides for cantonments to house 503,000 men. We were told that these cantonments would be made in something like the following manner: There would be a floor above the ground on posts. On that floor would be a double floor with building paper between, that there would be a space of an inch and a half to 2 inches between a plaster board or similar construction on the inside and then building paper on the outside of the uprights and the siding outside that, so that the cantonments would be tight. They would be covered with a sound roof supported by roof boards and would be in such shape that they could be properly heated and provided for.

The cantonments are costing, according to what they tell us, $450 per man.

The tent construction will cost $320. This tent construction involves a wooden platform set up above the ground a little and a tent over it to house five men.

Mr. RABAUT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. Has any consideration been given at all to trailers?

Mr. TABER. What kind of trailers?

Mr. RABAUT. Trailers for temporary housing.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman mean automobile trailers?

Mr. RABAUT. Automobile trailers. You can house eight men in a modern trailer.

Mr. TABER. I have not heard about that. I do not know whether that would be an advisable thing to do or not. That would not provide water supply, steam heat, or other utilities which are required.

Mr. RABAUT. Are they putting steam heat in the tents?

Mr. TABER. No; they cannot put steam heat in the tents, but in every outfit where there are tents there will have to be hospital facilities made up of solid construction with steam heat, and there will have to be recreation centers for the men with steam heat, and then a mess hall provided where they can be fed to properly take care of them. This could not be done with trailers. Of course, the trailers could take the place of housing for the men.

Mr. RABAUT. The trailers could supply places for sleeping.

Mr. TABER. I do not know how they would handle the heating, however, of a large number of such outfits.

Mr. RABAUT. They have heat in these trailers. It is heat for the individual room.

Mr. TABER. There has been no consideration of that as far as the committee is concerned.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I know the gentleman is taking a tremendous interest in having proper housing and proper hospital facilities. Is the gentleman perfectly satisfied with what is being done? I understand that the tents in the warm climates will have wooden frames as well as wooden floors to make them more substantial.

Mr. TABER. That is correct. We are told by men who have had experience that in the southern part of the country these tents are healthier than the cantonments. Of course, they would not have the tents at all in the North, where we are obliged to have steam heat.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I have been assured that there would be cantonments in the North.

Mr. TABER. That is correct. The largest part of this item is for cantonments. There is provision for only 40,000 troops in tents in this whole item. The major part of it is for cantonments. Of course, there are a lot of other items like reception centers, mobilization shelters, shelters for student personnel, construction for armored school programs, construction for ordnance training installations, school programs for ground troops, and general hospitals for 10,000 beds. Where an outfit is located near a present camp where there is a regular brick barracks, they are going to use the brick barracks for hospital facilities for the enrollees and put some of the men in the temporary structures. This will drive some of the Regulars out of these barracks. Of course, this provides for Hawaii, Panama, and Puerto Rico. I do not believe there is much question but that the tents would be proper housing for such places.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is the money allocated to specific places?

Mr. TABER. It is not allocated definitely to specific places?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I know Fort Devens, at Ayer, Mass., in my district, will have a large reception center, and it needs more buildings.

Mr. TABER. A good deal of that would be in the $128,000,000 that was provided the other day.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. How does the character and cost of these facilities compare with those constructed during the World War?

Mr. TABER. I would not want to compare them, but the cost has gone up. It will vary considerably. For instance, around New York City the wage scale has to be somewhere around $14 for carpenters, whereas in a rural community the going rate of pay will be somewhere around $8.

Mr. BREWSTER. Are the facilities to be about the same?

Mr. TABER. The facilities will be a little different, according to the need. They will have to be a little bit tighter and a little bit more firm around New York City or New England or Minnesota or in areas of that kind than they will be in Florida.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Has the gentleman any idea when these accommodations will be available for occupancy?

Mr. TABER. We are told that it will take 3 months to provide these quarters. This means that with this money they would be ready somewhere around Christmas, not any before; perhaps it may be the 1st of February or the 1st of March, in some cases.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. This tent housing is for Panama, the Hawaiian Islands, and Puerto Rico?

Mr. TABER. I would not say that. It is in the southern part of the country.

Mr. ENGEL. In the tropics?

Mr. TABER. In the warmer parts of the country, anyway. Of course, we had a lot of tent housing in the other bill that was under consideration. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I believe some Members of the House are confused in that they believe this is a special item. This is just one item of $329,000,000 taken out of the $1,600,000,000 the committee is now considering. This is done because of the extreme emergency, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has said. We will gain 6 days if we get the bill through today. This will give the Army that much advantage in getting this housing program started.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I was called just as I was starting for the House, at about 5 minutes to 12, and asked to O. K. this bill for $367,000,000, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, without a committee meeting. It was because I was discussing the matter with a clerk of the committee that I was not on the floor of the House when the bill came up a few minutes ago. The idea of bringing up a $367,000,000 bill without a committee meeting, and with 40 minutes of debate, does not appeal to me. I have no desire to hamper or to handicap the housing program. These men must be housed. However, my experience with Army housing has been such in the past that I am not willing to let this bill go by in this way without a protest.

Just a moment ago I asked the gentleman from New York regarding the tent camps, which are going to cost us $320 per man. You have here an item for tent camps for 40,000 men at $320 per man—$12,800,000. This is for the Tropics, the gentleman says, the Hawaiian Islands, Puerto Rico, Panama, and so forth. I have photographs here before me that I took in Panama, where they built temporary wooden quarters without the lavatories for $150 per man; the material was shipped in from the States.

Surely it is not going to cost us more than twice as much for the construction of tent camps as it does for this temporary wooden housing. We have here temporary quarters at $450 per man, while I have here a picture from Panama of a permanent concrete building, with a tiled roof, with materials shipped in from the United States, that cost $630 per man. The Army says it costs them 25 percent more there than in the States, and this is permanent construction for $430 per man.

Mr. Speaker, I have had this housing matter up before. I have considered this matter for the last 3 years in the War Department subcommittee.

I have here the hearings. They are simply astounding and amazing. We were building Army officers' quarters for $17,500 with relief money. We had General Seaman, construction quartermaster, on the witness stand testifying in 1939. The law permits the expenditure of $14,500 per officer for field officers. They had spent $17,500, or $3,000 more than allowed by law.

Here is the testimony:

Mr. ENGEL. Now, what is the balance of the $87,000, or approximately $14,500, being spent for? That is what I am getting at now.

General SEAMAN. One hundred and fifty feet of pipe lines and connections, at $2 a foot, $300, for each set of quarters.

When General Seaman was before the committee I let him go back to his office, and he inserted these figures in the record of the committee hearings later on, after deliberation and consultation, and here is his reply:

One hundred and fifty feet of sewer mains and connections at $1.50 a foot, $225.

One hundred and fifty feet of electric line and connections, at $3 a foot, $450.

One hundred and fifty feet of roads, at $5 a foot, $750.

One hundred and fifty feet of walk, at $1.50 per square yard, $225.

Grading and drainage——

Mr. ENGEL (interposing). Right there, is that for each one of the five, or for the five?

General GIBBINS. Each one.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAMSPECK). The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. ENGEL (reading):

Mr. ENGEL. The amounts you have read will be multiplied by five?
General SEAMAN. Yes, sir.
Grading and drainage, and so forth, at 50 cents per cubic yard, $75.
Telephone system, connections and equipment, $200.
Miscellaneous, advertising, personnel, and supplies, and so forth, $675.
That is for each set of quarters.
Mr. ENGEL. Does that apply to the noncommissioned officers' quarters, too?
General SEAMAN. The noncommissioned officers' quarters are practically the same.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of interfering with this program. These drafted men coming into the Army have to be housed, but when they come to me with a bill for $367,000,000 and at 5 minutes of 12 o'clock I am asked to agree to a bill I have never heard of, I cannot help but protest. I do not know whether they had any hearings on the matter. If they had any, I have not seen them. Then 15 minutes later I find the bill on the floor of the House. I was late because I had been talking the matter over with the clerk of the committee.

I also want to say this, that General Marshall and Major General Gregory and Major General Hartman, the Chief of Staff and the Quartermaster General and Construction Quartermaster, have taken the places of these other generals I have referred to. I am not going to be taken off my feet on this sort of thing and appropriate $320 per tent per man when they are building temporary wooden quarters and good temporary quarters in the same area for $150 per man. The House is going to pass this bill, and I am going to vote for it, because we have to have the quarters. When it is passed and when the construction is going on the War Department subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Appropriations ought to keep a periodical check on what is going on and see that we do not have a repetition of what has happened before.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is the gentleman correct that to house 8 of these men in a tent the Government is going to be called upon to spend $2,560 for a tent.

Mr. ENGEL. The one item reads: "Forty thousand enlisted men at $320 per man, $12,800,000." The next item is "enlisted men, $450 temporary quarters, $226,000,000."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. But then, if we take a tent which will house 8 men and multiply $320 by 8 we will have a cost of $2,560 for the 8-man tents. Some of our New Deal brethren must be engaged in the tent-business racket.

Mr. ENGEL. I want to be fair about the matter.

You must have water; you must have sanitation; you must have other equipment. These temporary wood barracks down there do not have any heating appliances or lavatories, but neither will these tents. I would like to have an explanation of this thing.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. In the illustration the gentleman gave of the building at Panama, is the gentleman advised whether or not that was done by enlisted personnel?

Mr. ENGEL. It was done by civilian labor.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Was there any enlisted personnel used?

Mr. ENGEL. Some of it was done by the engineers and the permanent construction—a tile building, concrete, a beautiful red tile roof building—was built with civilian labor at $630 per man.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman is a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, War Department. He has made a special study of this matter for a number of years. I think we all appreciate the work he has done, and many of us have gone along with him and want to go along with him, because we know his ability and courage; but at this time we must not forget that we have conscripted the boys of the country, and we are going to take them, within a little more than 60 days, and we are going to march them off to camps somewhere. In these circumstances it strikes me that we must resolve all doubt in favor of speedily providing adequate housing for those conscripted boys.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM].

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I am entirely in agreement with the idea that the progress of the construction program to house Army recruits should not be delayed. I am equally of the opinion that this is a case where haste makes waste. I am of the opinion that this method of handling an appropriation, here being pursued by the deficiency committee, will actually delay construction by hasty and ill-considered action. To the best of my knowledge and belief more efficient methods of handling this $350,000,000 appropriation can be devised with a little more investigation. You are establishing a most dangerous precedent in rushing through vast appropriations in a hasty, irregular manner which can save little or no time in construction.

I deeply regret that this bill has been brought up without the consideration of the full Appropriations Committee. I will not object at this time, however, because the deficiency subcommittee has decided that this arbitrary process is the way to prevent any delay in the program. The basic fault lies in the organization of the Appropriations Committee of the House which permits a small minority of the committee to usurp the functions of all other subcommittees and of the whole committee in carrying out a program of this magnitude. The whole problem of national-defense appropriations must have more careful and thorough consideration if we are to deal with it intelligently, economically, and efficiently. There must be more close and careful congressional supervision of the whole program if we fulfill our responsibilities to the electorate we represent.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, there was no intention on the part of the deficiency subcommittee to rush this matter beyond what the exigencies of the occasion seemed to justify. The subcommittee on deficiencies was unanimous on the item. Practically every member of the Appropriations Committee that we could contact had no objection to its consideration. There was a clear majority in favor of this course.

Mr. ENGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. At 5 minutes before 12 o'clock the clerk showed me a list and there were seven members of that committee marked "aye."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Those 7 were in addition to the 11 members of the deficiency subcommittee, and others besides the 7 subsequently were contacted; but be that as it may the gentleman, of course, could have stopped consideration of the resolution if he did not want it to come up.

Mr. ENGEL. Surely, a couple of hours' consideration on this bill for $367,000,000 before the full Appropriations Committee would not have delayed the matter at all.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Now, the gentleman is an authority on the subject——

Mr. ENGEL. I am not an authority on it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Well, I respect the gentleman's understanding of the situation. What would the gentleman suggest that we should have done about it?

Mr. ENGEL. I would suggest that at least we should have had a chance to know that this bill was coming up when it came up. At 5 minutes to 12 was the first information that I, a member of the Appropriations Committee, had that the bill was coming on the floor. I was detained over there discussing it for 10 or 15 minutes with the clerk and then I came here and found the bill under consideration. Surely that is not giving proper consideration to a member of the Appropriations Committee on a bill of this magnitude.

Does the gentleman think so? I have worked with the gentleman from Virginia, and I have admired him. I think he is one of the ablest men on the floor of the House. His ability is unquestioned, and his desire to economize is unquestioned. I am going along with the bill because the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] have agreed to it, but of course the committee ought to keep a check on this and see that the history of the past is not repeated.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I agree thoroughly with everything the gentleman has said, but as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] so well said a moment ago, as a prerequisite to ordering this army to be mobilized we must see to it that proper housing is available, as expressly required by the Selective Service and Training Act.

General Marshall was before our committee this morning and made a very impressive statement about this matter in considerable detail. He made its importance very plain. We went into it very carefully. We must have the housing, and no matter how much time we might spend considering it, and we could spend a great deal, there would be nothing we could do in the end but go ahead with it.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. How does the gentleman account for the fact that these temporary wooden quarters in Panama cost $145 per man built with civilian labor, whereas the quarters provided for in this bill cost $450 per man?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that when he asked his question previously I was under the impression that much of the temporary housing down there had been built by enlisted men. Regardless of that, however, the gentleman knows that what you pay for labor in Panama cannot be compared to what we have to pay for labor in the States. In addition to that, there has been a great increase in the cost of building within the last 30 or 60 days. Neither the committee nor the Quartermaster General's office feels it is an exorbitant rate under existing conditions, when we are working under emergency conditions.

Mr. ENGEL. The officers who testified before our committee said that the cost at that time was higher because of the fact that all the material they used had to be transported to Panama.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Lumber may be higher in Panama, although I am not so sure about that, but labor, as the gentleman from Michigan knows, is very much cheaper. In addition to that the funds here provided not only include the houses themselves but sanitation, streets, lighting, sewers, mess halls, recreation halls, station hospitals, storage, shops, and many other facilities and appurtenances, all entering into the unit cost and not included in the cost of Panama houses which the gentleman mentioned.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. TABER. As I understand it lumber for construction in the southern and northern States on the eastern seaboard very largely comes through the Panama Canal. Lumber at the Panama Canal, therefore, should cost a great deal less.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT].

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I am somewhat inclined to agree with my colleague from Michigan. I believe that the deficiency subcommittee, insomuch as it deals with subject matters which come before every subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, should be comprised of the chairmen of all the subcommittees.

The particular resolution that comes before us this morning is to deal with an emergency and anyone can readily understand that it is an emergency. Those who most vigorously oppose the procedure by which the measure is brought up for consideration in the same breath say they are going to support the bill. I think under the emergency there is nothing else that could be done. We are getting into a program here that demands speed; and insomuch as we have gone ahead with the draft bill we must be ready to take care of these boys. This is our obligation, and we should proceed to do everything in our power and do it with the greatest speed. That is why it comes up as it does and necessitates the emergency.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Are the contracts to be placed under this bill to be placed by competitive bidding?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; not by competitive bidding.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Will they be negotiated contracts?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They will be negotiated contracts. All these emergency contracts are negotiated contracts.

Mr. DWORSHAK. With what limitation of profit?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Cost plus a fixed fee not to exceed 6 percent.

That is all the time I wish to use, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 607

Joint resolution making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941

Resolved, etc., That the following sums are appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, namely:

Military posts: For construction and installation of buildings, flying fields, and appurtenances thereto, including the acquisition of land, rights appertaining thereto, leasehold and other interests therein, and temporary use thereof, without regard to the provisions of sections 355, 1136, and 3648, Revised Statutes, as amended (10 U. S. C. 1339; 40 U. S. C. 255; 31 U. S. C. 529), $329,519,902.

Acquisition of land: For acquisition of land, including rights pertaining thereto, leasehold and other interests therein, and temporary use thereof, without regard to the provisions of sections 355, 1136, and 3648, Revised Statutes as amended (10 U. S. C. 1339; 40 U. S. C. 255; 31 U. S. C. 529), $8,744,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I agreed in the deficiency subcommittee to bring this item before the House because I felt that it was of the utmost importance that when we call men to serve we provide proper housing and hospital facilities to take care of them.

I know that much of this construction will cost more than it would in peacetime. We had the Quartermaster General before us, we had the Chief of Staff before us this morning. We have gone into the thing as thoroughly as we could, but we felt, I felt, and I still feel that everything should be done by the Congress to expedite the start of construction upon these projects just as fast as it can be done, because they can work just twice as fast on the cantonments now as they can after the 1st of December.

I wish we had opportunity to go into every detail but frankly I know we have not. It is true that we must hold those who have charge of the spending of these funds to strict accountability and to just as much efficiency as can be had under all the circumstances, but I am not going to be one who stands back and fails to provide the facilities to take care of these men who are going to be called.

I know that much of this temporary construction in the Tropics, much of the permanent construction in the Tropics would not be suitable for the cantonments we have provided. I know that in the Tropics they are not providing sewage disposal and water systems, and that sort of thing that we have to provide here. I know the labor they use is mostly supplied by Jamaicans and Panamanians, natives of the Canal Zone, rather than the type of labor we have to employ here in the States. The figures therefore are not so comparable as one might think.

I do not believe we are getting a good price on these things. On the other hand, I do not believe it is so bad as we might be up against. I would not favor anything that disrupted orderly practice in the Appropriations Committee but I do not believe that we can have orderly practice when we are confronted with this kind of situation and I feel we have been justified in bringing this in here and submitting it to the House.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in the Spanish-American War and in the World War more men died of disease than we lost in battle. Great masses of men brought from all quarters of the country, unaccustomed to the new mode of life, their routine completely changed, are naturally subject to many maladies unless every possible care is taken of them. There is an ever-present danger that contagion will sweep these camps and wipe men out by the hundreds as has repeatedly happened in our Army camps in the past. If some epidemic should start through the ranks this winter, as frequently attacks both civil and military populations, the country will hold to strict accountability every man and every agency of the Government in any way responsible for any possible delinquency in caring for these men.

Winter is coming on. Time is short. Every day counts. When these boys come to camps we must be ready to house them, we must be prepared to shelter them, we must be ready to take care of them and must provide for them every facility for the protection of life and health. That is the whole purpose of the pending resolution.

The expense is a matter that cannot be avoided, but it is not exorbitant. You cannot go into the sections of the country in which these cantonments are to be built and build them by contract appreciably cheaper than they will be built by the War Department. But they must be built and they must be built now.

There is no more important phase of the preparedness program than this important question of properly housing the young men and protecting them from pneumonia and influenza when they are brought from their homes and inducted into the service.

Mr. Speaker, in this connection, may I express appreciation, and I am certain the appreciation of every member of the Committee on Appropriations, of the work done on this bill and its companion bills as well as the entire preparedness program by the gentleman from Virginia, CLIFF WOODRUM and the gentleman from New York, JOHN TABER. I do not think the House generally realizes the long hours, the indefatigable labor, and the exhaustive study and investigation these two men and their associates on the committee have given to this work. [Applause.]

It has been charged that democratic government is not as efficient as totalitarian governments in waging war. It has been charged that America, while a prosperous nation, is fat and unwieldy and incapable of self-defense. We are demonstrating by this bill and by the correlated legislation we have enacted this session that we are not only capable of producing wealth and developing a civilization, but we are capable of protecting that wealth and defending that civilization. If any international brigand across the water has any predatory designs on our people it is reckoning without its host. We are developing in the shortest time, and with record efficiency, the most effective armament to be found in the world today, and we are training an army with efficiency and speed unequaled in either of the two former wars in which we were engaged. We shall shortly have men and guns and ships and planes that can hold their own against any attack and which can defend this country and this hemisphere against any power or combination of powers on earth. In the meantime, we must not lose a single boy entrusted to our care through preventable disease or exposure, and we cannot do that unless we make this provision for their care. This bill should be passed without amendment and by unanimous vote. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the chairman of the subcommittee which I believe is very pertinent and of interest to every Member of the House. I wonder what is going to be done about school facilities in connection with the housing program for those who are on reservations and those who are off reservations. As I understand this housing program from a conference with Major Wilson of the Army Quartermaster Corps, they will make provisions for housing on the reservations and the public buildings branch in the Federal Works Agency will take care of that portion of the housing that deals with the industrial sections, and so forth.

Now, this school problem comes up in connection with, first, the enlisted men on the reservations; and, secondly, with respect to those families who are moving into houses in areas where no school facilities have been made available, let us say in the area of an arsenal or an airplane plant. The net effect is going to be that the facilities of the local States are going to be taxed to capacity, it is going to cost a considerable lot of money, and in many instances the State tax for school purposes is already up to the limit and it would require legislative action on the part of the legislature before any relief may be provided. May I ask whether the word "appurtenances" in this bill would cover schools and whether or not schools could be built on reservations for the children of both officers and enlisted men and, further, whether under the rest of the housing program schools can be provided in the area of industrial centers where craftsmen are taken for purposes of the defense program?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I should say that in the case of an isolated post the War Department would make some provision for the children of military personnel. I should not think the bill would contemplate the use of funds for such purposes outside Army posts. The gentleman will remember that this large concentration of people in the different localities or communities will bring about a large expenditure of funds there. It probably is contemplated that localities will make some suitable arrangements for schools.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But the time element enters into it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; there will probably be some drag so far as the question of time is concerned, but, answering the gentleman specifically, there is nothing in here that contemplates the spending of any money for schools outside Army posts.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is there general legislative authority making provision for schools on reservations? This money, I take it, will be expended only on reservations. Is there general authority for making provision for schools?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Within the reservation and within the limit of money appropriated, the War Department has done that and has the right to do it, as I understand.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I fancy this problem is going to be very acute in a little while.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am very glad to have the gentleman draw attention to it. We are conducting hearings on it now, and I shall be very glad to call attention to the matter.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I take this time for the purpose of directing attention to it only because it is a very important matter.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it proposed to take the families of these officers along and then take them along across the seas if we should go to war across the seas? Why cannot their families stay home just like the families of the enlisted men, the buck privates who are drafted in the Army and serve for $21 a month?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know what is proposed, but look at this situation. You have 42,000 married enlisted men in the Navy today. When they come back to shore, obviously they live with their families, because it improves the morale of those who are in the service. By the same token, if their families are there, school provisions must be made for the children. That is the long and short of it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. But these additions to the Army and the Navy, people who are drafted and forced to serve in Uncle Sam's Army or Navy in peacetime under the New Deal, Hitler-Stalin type of compulsory peacetime military service will not have dependent families, we have been told.

Mr. DIRKSEN. They may or may not have. I assume that so far as possible they will select those who are without dependents; but the fact remains that this is a condition that exists at the present time and adequate provision must be made.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Navy in this connection is proposing to build 400 houses, which I assume will be tax exempt, but they may provide perhaps 800 children for the schools.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But they can make payments in lieu of taxes, according to the tenor of the bill.

Mr. BREWSTER. Is there such authority in all these bills, generally?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; authority was written into the housing bill the other day as it passed this body. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly believe that we should take care of these drafted men we are going to place in camps so that they do not freeze to death and so that they may have comfortable quarters in which to live, especially if we conscript them now in peacetime. I believe peacetime conscription is about the most unnecessary thing we could possibly have at this time. Nevertheless, while I oppose peacetime conscription, I believe we should now, since the bill has been passed, take care of these boys.

Let me call your attention to this—and I do not say this because the subcommittee chairman now has this bill in hand, because I have a lot of regard for him; but the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations should certainly have called the committee together and permitted us to have some information in regard to this bill before it was brought on the floor of the House. It is not right, it is not businesslike, and it is not proper to handle appropriations in this way.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield for a question.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. The conscription bill was before the Senate and the House for 6 weeks or 2 months. Why was not some information prepared on this matter so that the committee would have had some knowledge of the amount of money necessary to house these men?

Mr. RICH. That is a very good point. There is no reason why it should not have been handled in a businesslike way. When the members of the Committee on Appropriations did not know that this bill was coming to the floor of the House until they got into the Chamber this morning, it certainly shows that Congress is not giving attention even to the appropriation of funds, but that the powers that be who are back of peacetime conscription seem to be driving everything down the Avenue to the Capitol, and then they expect the Members who are supposed to be looking after the vital interests of the people of this Nation and to give them their time and attention to consider these matters, but they do not do that.

The appropriations that have been made during this session of Congress up to this time ought to make everybody shudder. We have appropriated already over $21,000,000,000, counting the appropriations and the authorizations of this session of Congress, and, according to the President's estimate, we are going to get receipts of about $5,600,000,000. Then we passed one tax bill to yield about $1,007,000,000, and the other day we passed what we called the excess-profits tax bill, under which we will get about $250,000,000 this year. This means that if we spend the money we have appropriated and authorized this session we will be an additional $14,000,000,000 in the red in a year. This is one of the most outstanding inequitable and unbusinesslike procedures I have ever heard of in all the history of the Nation or in all the history of the world. Nobody ever did anything like that before. It is a terrible travesty on American business that we should do such things.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Of course, the gentleman is worried, no doubt, about where Uncle Sam is going to get the additional $20,000,000,000 for the national-defense program.

Mr. RICH. I have been worried for 7 years about where we are going to get the money.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I will tell you where Uncle Sam is going to get the money. If the gentleman reads an article entitled "More Borrowing, Rather Than Taxes, Planned for Defense," which appeared on page 2 of the September 18, 1940, edition of the Washington Evening Star, he would have observed that several New Deal "brain trusters," including Benjamin Cohen, Leon Henderson, and Jerome Frank, met with several representatives of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and other international bankers and reached a decision as to where Uncle Sam was going to get additional money for national defense. They agreed that Uncle Sam should borrow an additional $20,000,000,000 and issue that amount of interest-bearing obligations, which, as to principal and interest thereon, will have to be paid in tax dollars produced in the sweat and toil of several generations still unborn. I believe that the gentleman and the country will be interested in obtaining these facts.

Mr. RICH. I want to say that those same fellows are borrowing that money to help these foreign nations that now owe Uncle Sam about $15,000,000,000.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. RICH. And now they want to borrow more money to help those same people, and I say we ought to stop it. That is the point I am trying to make.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And after the New Deal international bankers and "brain trusters" bankrupt Uncle Sam and we have inflation, chaos, and revolution, these internationalists shall reap the harvest of the seeds which they now sow, as they have in many of the European countries.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we are not only going to be further behind, but we will wreck this Nation, and we will not be able to take care of these boys like we ought to.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get into the question of the public debt, but I do want to call attention to the fact that with a $20,000,000,000 loan confronting us for national defense, with all these tremendous expenditures being made throughout the country, we are apparently not doing one thing to cut other expenses of the Government to offset these tremendous amounts we are appropriating here every day. Congress ought to remain in session and the Appropriations Committee, together with the Departments, ought to go over these nonmilitary items and make decisive cuts on some of the nonessentials that are contained in these appropriations.

The question of labor in Panama was discussed. I have in my office photographs of white men weighing 150 to 200 pounds driving spikes. I talked with them personally. I saw one big Irishman there working with a hammer. I saw the Jamaicans there and I have photographs of them and photographs of the thatched huts from which they come. One free American laborer down there engaged in that work will do as much as half a dozen of these Jamaicans.

They have two classes of employees there, the gold employees, who are the white skilled laborers, and then the silver employees, who are natives from Panama and Jamaica. The wages of the gold employees run anywhere from $1.39 to $1.44 an hour. The plumbers get $1.44, and the roofers, which is the lowest-paid group, get $1.39 an hour. The common laborers, who are Jamaicans, get 22 cents an hour, and the carpenters and painters and the Jamaicans in other crafts, get 29 cents an hour. But there is no question about the fact that one American will do as much work as four or five of these other men.

I want to say in justice to General Marshall and General Gregory and General Hartman, that they have done everything they could do to cooperate with me. They have drawn completely new plans for housing which I think will solve the problem. I refuse to be carried off my feet because of any emergency to the extent of allowing waste and extravagance to run rampant. And I do not want to come back here 2 years from now and have a repetition of what we have had during the last 2 years.

I was opposed to conscription; but that policy has been adopted and it is law, and I am ready to go along with it to the limit. I am ready to provide the housing and everything that these men need. The policy has been set. The time to discuss the policy is passed, but I refuse to swallow everything that is handed me.

As long as I am in this House and as long as I am a member of the War Department Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, or any other subcommittee, I am going to keep on checking up on these departments after the committee has done its work and the House has passed the bills. [Applause.] I want to give fair notice that I, for one, am going to check up on the expenditures as far as my feeble efforts will permit with respect to every dollar of the $367,000,000 contained in this bill, and I am going to insist on an itemized report of every dollar expended in this and every other national-defense bill.

It strikes me as passing strange that the other body can have a bill for 18 or 20 days; that individual Members of the other body can discuss a bill for 1, 2, or 3 hours at a time, and we in this House rush these bills through and are limited to the 5-minute rule on a bill appropriating $367,000,000. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Strike out the last period and insert: "Provided, That in expending funds appropriated in this resolution the War Department shall file with the appropriate Appropriations Committees of the Congress detailed reports showing the amounts of contracts let and the terms thereof, and in the case of land acquisitions, such reports shall show the price paid and the assessed valuation of the lands."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in offering this amendment is to make it possible for the Appropriations Committee to keep in touch with the expenditure of the funds proposed in this resolution.

It will be recognized, of course, that in appropriating $329,000,000 we are appropriating in this resolution, under short consideration, more than one-third of what has been the normal appropriation for the War Department in the last few years. It is being expended under emergency conditions. I for one do not want to delay the providing of the housing or proper facilities for the men when they go into camp. At the same time, in the interest of the integrity of government and in the interest of integrity of legislation, it seems to me that the Appropriations Committee should be kept currently informed on the expenditure of this money.

What the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] has said about the effort of the Appropriations Subcommittee for the War Department is correct. An effort has been made to keep track of these expenditures for quarters and to see that in given localities and under given conditions the costs are not out of line with those in other places.

I have discussed this amendment with the chairman of the deficiency subcommittee presenting this resolution, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], and with the ranking minority member, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. I understand it is the desire to put this bill through as rapidly as possible and that the engrossed copy has already been printed and prepared for signature. If I can have assurance that this amendment will be included in the full bill that is coming on next week, so as to make it applicable to both of these bills, I have no objection to deferring it at this time.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The committee already has asked for practically the information which the gentleman seeks in his amendment, and if it will satisfy the gentleman, we shall be very glad to put that amendment in the bill carrying the remaining defense items when we bring it in next week. I think it is quite proper to have that information. I should much rather pursue that course than to have this resolution amended.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is quite satisfactory to me. My purpose is to reduce as much as possible the danger of waste and excessive or reckless expenditure in this program. It is well known that emergency construction of buildings is often attended by waste and excessive costs. In this resolution, the usual safeguards of competitive bidding are removed. It seems to me that the very minimum of what we should do is to require that reports of the expenditures be made to the subcommittees that normally handle items for the defense establishments. Then these committees may know currently what is going on, and if something starts to go haywire it will be within the power of the committee to take appropriate action.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment at this time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] for his assurance to the House that he will keep a careful check of all expenditures in connection with the activities resulting from the preparedness program. I am sure that there is not a single Member of this House who would tolerate the expenditure of one penny in a careless and wasteful way. I also have complete confidence in the authorities down in the War Department and Navy Department, charged with the responsibility of this work. I am certain these officials will exercise all necessary vigilance so that this emergency work will be done economically and efficiently. At this time, I wish to direct the attention of the House to a related subject, and that is the question of salaries. It is important that we safeguard the amount and rate of pay and the type of men to be employed. Undoubtedly, this House is committed to the employment, as far as possible, of our own citizens. However, there are times in other jurisdictions, like the Panama Canal Zone and other insular possessions, where exceptions to this principle may have to be allowed. I am satisfied that the President will only make such modifications in this rule necessary by reason of emergency. I feel sure that within a reasonable time the authorities hope to eliminate all alien labor on these Government projects and employ only citizens of the United States.

I trust that this program will go forward without delay. I insist that every safeguard be thrown around the working men and women of this country, so that in the great rush and excitement incidental to the military activities all of the splendid things that I have been fighting for throughout my legislative career will not be suspended or infringed. I specifically refer to the benefits provided by Social Security Act, National Labor Relations Act, and Wage and Hour Act. I am confident that it is the wish and purpose of the President to do just as I have suggested in these matters, but I am taking this opportunity to place in the RECORD my views of what should be done so that the officials in the War or Navy Department, or any other official charged with the responsibility of dealing with problems of wages or hours to preserve all of the gains made by labor in recent years in wages, hours, and general working conditions, will be mindful of the wishes of this Congress. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I want to remind those gentlemen who are worried—as we all should be—about the borrowing on the part of the Government that the main reason the Government borrows from the banks is because it has permitted private banks to exercise the privilege of creating credit in the United States even to the extent of excluding the Government itself from performing that function. If you want to stop that borrowing, what you have to do is to be ready to restore to Government that function of creating originally the money and credit of the Nation. If you are not ready to do that, I would advise you not to complain about the borrowing of money by the Government. I am ready to do it, and I want to second what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] said today. The purpose of my asking for this time is a different purpose from that, however.

After the World War in which the United States engaged, you will all remember that there was appointed a select committee of the Senate, a special committee of the Senate, to investigate the munitions industry. The findings of that committee were rather sensational in certain respects, particularly with regard to the profiteering that had gone on and things of that kind. It would have been better if those things had been prevented in the first place. What I have to say reflects no lack of confidence on my part whatsoever in the officials of the War Department, the Navy Department, or any other official of the Government, but I think it would be a wise and prudent thing for us to consider the establishment at this time of a committee of the House, which is the body primarily responsible for the expenditure of this money, to review and investigate the expenditures of the funds appropriated by us for national-defense purposes. I think it would be a salutary thing to have this committee give publicity not only to cases where the Government is charged too much or sold inferior goods, but also to cases where we find companies or labor organizations or anyone else cooperating 100 percent with the defense program. I have no doubt of this. Many people in this country today are deeply concerned about all this money we are expending. As in the case of the bill before us it is sometimes necessary for us to appropriate money in a very short time in order to meet the requirements of an emergency. There are times when no Member can interpose objection to our doing this. But after the appropriation is made and the work in progress we certainly would do no harm, but on the contrary much good, by watching the matter carefully.

It may be said that the Committee on Appropriations would be the proper agency to perform the function I have in mind, but I say it is far too busy a committee to carry on that type of review and running investigation I have in mind. The appointment of such a committee as this might be an extremely salutary thing. Its very existence might prevent things being slipped over on perfectly conscientious and earnest Government officials who, however, do not have the opportunity or the power to go behind certain facts that may be in existence. I ask the House to remember that we have, for reasons that seemed good and sufficient to certain Members, removed all limitation on profits. We have removed the necessity for competitive bidding. The tax bill, when it comes back from the Senate, will, if I read about it correctly in the newspapers, certainly not do very much to bring excess profits back into the Treasury. At least it will not do so in the case of the large monopoly corporations whose earnings have been very high in the past 4 years. It is true we adopted the industry draft in the conscription bill, which I think was an entirely proper thing to do in order to put that weapon into the hands of Government officials. But I appeal to you gentleman that it would, I think, be a very good thing if such committee as I have proposed were set up. Indeed I have today introduced a resolution to create such a committee.

I do not do this with the idea, as I said before, of casting any reflection on anybody, but I do it because I think it would be far better to have this continuing review on the part of Congress in the furtherance of the discharge of its duty to the American people. The things this committee would say, the publicity it would give its findings, would have the effect of calming the people, of assuring the people that everything was going forward all right and being carefully taken care of. It appears to me that it would be a wise and proper thing to do.

I know some of the objections that will be raised to it. It will be said that the Appropriations Committee can do this, and it will be said that we already have the National Defense Council, and so on. But, as I said before, the Appropriations Committee is an extremely busy committee, the busiest committee in the House. I do not think it has time to do the kind of job I have in mind; and I believe it to be a part of the function and duty of the Congress in this trying time to carry through in the manner I have tried to indicate in these few moments.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: After the last period add the following: "Provided, That from the sums herein provided no greater price shall be paid for material furnished or services rendered than is now paid for like material and service under similar circumstances."

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do I understand from the gentleman from Virginia that no copy of this bill is available?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In my judgment, no emergency can be so pressing as to justify the appropriation of millions of dollars without making available to Congress at least a copy of the proposed bill authorizing the appropriation. Nor is there any reason why Congress should not be permitted to throw around the expenditure of the funds safeguards which are as essential to real preparedness as is the act of appropriation. Sometimes we do not make as much speed, do not accomplish as much, build as securely, when we hurry as when we take more time.

Mr. Speaker, my vote has been consistently cast against excessive appropriations and grants of unlimited power to the Chief Executive. My vote was cast against conscription and if I had the opportunity I would cast it the same way again. Congress having adopted conscription, we are caught between the devil and the deep blue sea. There is nothing we can do except to vote such sums as the executive department, the Army and the Navy ask us to vote. Otherwise we are accused of lack of patriotism.

The President is determined to have a third term. To secure a third term he must have a war or at least a realistic threat of war; hence, the conscription bill, based on the excuse that it was necessary, if we were to have preparedness.

As Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, the President will have under his control more than a million men, with the power of life or death over some of them. All unprepared as we are to house and train the National Guard, the men conscripted, some of them will die like rats in conscription cantonments, unless we vote funds to care for them.

Not a single man here is willing to sacrifice one life, to see one man ill, because of a failure to do our utmost to protect him; hence bills like this. What we can do, what we should do, is to see that the money we vote is used to the best advantage so that the conscripted men, the men enlisted—the men in the Regular Army, in the Navy—shall avoid suffering unnecessary hardship.

I have no doubt that of the money the Republicans have joined in voting to this administration for this defense program, at least 25 percent will be either wasted, foolishly expended, or used for some purpose foreign to that for which we voted it. What are we going to do about it? There is not a thing we can do about it. We have to vote for it because we just simply cannot take the chance of letting the conscripts endure unnecessary hardships. But I hope that if we win this election in November those fellows who steal it will have to pay for it during the coming years.

We can do one thing if we wish. We can make an effort to protect the funds we vote from the leeches who always seek to profit from individual or national misfortune. I know that we ought to get the most for every dollar we spend that it is possible for us to get. If it is true that a great national emergency confronts us, there is no excuse for wasting money and there is no excuse for using it for campaign purposes. Unless we pass some restrictive laws there will be profiteering, and it will not be by businessmen alone. There will be others all the way down the line who will want to profiteer. Day after day, here and in the other body, we hear a great deal of talk about patriotism and sacrifice. Everybody is willing that somebody else make a sacrifice.

The amendment I have offered is along the line of keeping things stable, of getting a dollar's value for every dollar expended. The amendment provides that, out of the sums authorized by this bill, the Government shall not pay any greater price for either material—which will catch the business profiteers—or for services rendered—which will catch the labor racketeers—than is paid under like circumstances for similar services or materials at the present time. You may say that is absurd. However, next week I hope to offer a bill to freeze prices at the present level. What is the object of that? It is so that some fellow who is smart in a business way and short on patriotism cannot slip in and make a profit out of someone else's misery and suffering.

Wages are good. The prices of farm products are good in this country, so we are told. Why not let it ride there and let everyone go along just as we are, taking no extra profit? Why should we not have some legislation so that everyone who has been talking about making a sacrifice will really make one? As an illustration, why not pass an act that all of those in the Federal Government who receive more than $10,000 a year shall for the duration of the emergency take $5,000, or 50 percent of the present income? That hits Congressmen, of course, but if the President is willing to cut his $75,000 in two we ought to be willing to cut our $10,000 in two.

Enact legislation which will require all of those, whether in Federal or private employment, who receive $10,000 or more a year, to accept as full compensation for the period of the emergency 50 percent of his present income. Let all those on the Federal pay roll and on private pay rolls who receive, say, $3,000 a year pay a Government tax of 25 percent, and so on down the list until we get to an income of $1,000 a year, when the tax might be 10 percent—these taxes in addition to all other municipal, State, and Federal levies—exempting, of course, those on relief.

Under such an act all those who have been talking about patriotism, aid to the Allies, war to save democracy, their desire and their willingness to make a sacrifice, would have brought home to them in a substantial way just exactly what the adoption of their policies mean.

My judgment is—and I may, of course, be mistaken—that many of those who now see the necessity of burning our fingers in this foreign war would have a change of heart. It is one thing, you know, to yell about one's duty to one's country—to talk about the willingness which the young men should have to offer up their lives to preserve our liberties; it is all well enough to suggest that we should police the world and settle the world's troubles. But it is quite probable that some of those who are now so anxious to involve us in this war would lose some of their enthusiasm if they were forced, by legislation, to contribute a fair and equitable portion of the cost.

I realize there are practical difficulties in the carrying out of the purpose of the amendment which I have offered, but there is none which is insurmountable. If we can pass laws limiting a profit—and it is well that we do; if we can pass laws taking some of our young men from their homes and their businesses, and so totally destroying their means of livelihood, of advancement, limiting their opportunity for future advancement, there is no reason in law, and certainly none in morals, why every individual in the Republic cannot, under the power given Congress to provide for the defense of the Nation—and that is the power which we are exercising when we pass these bills—be made to render adequate service to the country in this emergency which the President has so foolishly, so needlessly, brought down upon us.

I have often wondered how some of the politicians who talk about the necessity of selecting Mr. Roosevelt as a third-term President, of the necessity—and the two go together—of becoming involved in this war, would talk and act if their incomes were cut in half. It might be well to try the experiment and learn by the result who are the real patriots in our Nation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and on the joint resolution conclude in 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's amendment, while undoubtedly having a very commendable purpose—that is, to prevent exorbitant charges for materials and to prevent any Government department, the Army, or Navy, or any public-buildings agency from paying more than it should pay—it seems to me would be absolutely unworkable. The amendment provides that such agencies cannot buy anything at a price more than the presently prevailing price, which would mean they could not buy a stick of lumber, a keg of nails, an electric-light bulb, or anything else 30 days from now unless they were sure it did not cost any more than the present price.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I had that in mind. We have provided for the seizing of plants on a rental basis. If we are going to conscript the boys, why not hold the prices down? For instance, let us assume I have a lumber yard and I want to hike the price when you come along. If you need this lumber for an Army camp, why should you not be in the position to say, "Listen, you are going to take the price you charged me last week and no more." Why not make that apply all down the line?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman knows that prices are rising in the construction industry.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Surely.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Much of it for normal or legitimate reasons. The gentleman's amendment would absolutely prevent taking that into consideration. If there is to be legislation of this kind, it should not be in the form of an amendment that would make this housing program absolutely unworkable. They could not make a contract 30 or 60 days from now for building these camps if, in the course of normal business affairs or in the course of normal increases in business, there should occur a rise of prices in the construction business. The construction business is on the upward grade now. They would be tied up.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And they will keep going up until it will get where you cannot buy unless you have sums undreamed of appropriated.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The tax bill we just passed is supposed to have something to do with that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You are going to limit profits?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why not limit the profits that come through exorbitant prices?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman seeks to tack this on here. It would tie the whole thing up in a knot. Let us leave that for other legislation, and do not put it on as an amendment to this resolution and tie up these cantonments for the boys.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, we will not get it then.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. In view of what the gentleman from Michigan stated, I feel that we can take care of all the profiteers and they should be taken care of by the income-tax medium.

The excess-profits tax instead of going to 50 percent should go to 60 or 70 percent. We can go to 75 or 80, and thus prevent profiteering. There is no question in my mind that there is profiteering. I wonder if the gentleman from Michigan would vote for such a bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House the Clerk of the House be authorized to receive a message from the Senate on House Joint Resolution 607 and that the Speaker be authorized to sign the enrolled bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my request that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two particulars.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE STRAITS OF MACKINAC

Mr. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 1379) granting the consent of Congress to the Mackinac Straits Bridge Authority to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the Straits of Mackinac at or near a point between St. Ignace, Mich., and the lower peninsula of Michigan, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1379) entitled "Granting the consent of Congress to the Mackinac Straits Bridge Authority to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the Straits of Mackinac at or near a point between Saint Ignace, Michigan, and the Lower Peninsula of Michigan," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments in sections 1 and 2 of the bill and agree thereto.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment of the title and agree thereto.

Both Houses agree to the bill with the amendments adopted by the House as herein cited.

JOSIAH W. BAILEY,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
A. H. VANDENBERG,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

EDWARD A. KELLY,
PEHR G. HOLMES,
DONALD L. O'TOOLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1379) entitled "Granting the consent of Congress to the Mackinac Straits Bridge Authority to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the Straits of Mackinac at or near a point between St. Ignace, Mich., and the Lower Peninsula of Michigan," submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The bill, as it passed the Senate, granted the consent of Congress for the construction, maintenance, and operation of the bridge as proposed to the "Mackinac Straits Bridge Authority, created by Public Act No. 35 of the 1934 extra session of the Michigan State Legislature"; the House amended this provision so that the consent of Congress would run directly to the State of Michigan. The title of the bill was amended so as to effect this same change. These amendments the conference committee agreed to accept in the form adopted by the House.

Other amendments by the House are in section 2 of the bill; the first placed a limitation upon the financing cost to be included in the amortization fund for payment of the construction cost of the bridge, and the second provides that the bridge be operated and maintained free of tolls after completion of the amortization fund for the total cost of construction of the bridge. These amendments were agreed to by the conference committee in the form as adopted by the House.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to all the amendments adopted by the House, which leaves the bill exactly as passed by the House.

EDWARD A. KELLY,
PEHR G. HOLMES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, this is what is known as the Mackinac Straits Bridge bill. The bill passed the Senate, it then came to the House and was materially amended, it then went to conference, and the conference has accepted the House amendment.

Mr. KELLY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. The Senate has accepted the House amendment.

Mr. KELLY. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. If this bill becomes law, it will mean that the Mackinac Straits Bridge, which is involved, cannot be built except by authority of the State of Michigan, which operates through its State legislature?

Mr. KELLY. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. In other words, those Members opposing it in the House are simply saying that the State of Michigan may, if it sees fit, construct this bridge, or grant authority to someone else to construct it?

Mr. KELLY. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. I may say further that the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. DONDERO, and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. CRAWFORD, as well as some others, have opposed the bill. As I understand the gentleman from Illinois, this is now agreeable to those Michigan Members?

Mr. KELLY. That is correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFHAN. Is this the bill that was sponsored by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY], among others?

Mr. KELLY. Yes, it is.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. A minute ago one of my colleagues from Michigan across the aisle said that this was the bill of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY]. The bill originally was introduced in the House by Senator BROWN, of Michigan, when he was a Member of the House, and it has been since taken to the Senate and introduced there. That should be in here as the correct statement of where this bill came from and how it got here.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman tell us how it got away after it had been buried?

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INDIAN CHILDREN, SCHOOL DISTRICT 13, FROID, MONT.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1450) to provide funds for cooperation with school district No. 13, Froid, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] objected to the consideration of this bill when it was on the Consent Calendar. The gentleman has investigated the situation and knows about it. May I ask the gentleman what his attitude is at this time?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman that I have discussed this bill with the gentleman from Montana and he has convinced me there is a great need for this assistance out there. I believe that in this particular instance it is justified, so I have withdrawn my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $30,000 for the purpose of cooperating with school district No. 13, Froid, Mont., for the extension and improvement of public-school buildings: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so appropriated shall be subject to the condition that the schools maintained by said district shall be available to all Indian children of the school district on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That plans and specifications for construction, enlargement, or improvement of structures shall be furnished by local or State authorities, without cost to the United States, and upon approval thereof by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, actual work shall proceed under the direction of such local or State officials. Payment for work in place shall be made monthly on vouchers properly certified by local officials of the Indian Service: Provided further, That any amount expended on any project hereunder shall be recouped by the United States within a period of 30 years, commencing with the date of occupancy of the project, through reducing the annual Federal tuition payments for the education of Indian pupils enrolled in public or high schools of the district involved, or by the acceptance of Indian pupils in such schools without cost to the United States; and in computing the amount of recoupment for each project interest at 3 percent per annum shall be included on unrecouped balances: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "13" and insert "15."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "To provide funds for cooperation with school district No. 15, Froid, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children."

SMITHSONIAN GALLERY OF ART

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9806) to permit the Smithsonian Gallery of Art Commission to purchase a model of the winning design for the proposed Smithsonian Gallery of Art, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this bill have the approval of the full committee?

Mr. KELLER. It has.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the committee know that the gentleman is adopting this extraordinary procedure to have the bill enacted into law?

Mr. KELLER. Probably not, but there is certainly no objection in the committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Unless there is some minority member of the committee here to speak for the minority, I shall be constrained to object. When bills are brought up in this manner the minority certainly has the right to know that they are going to be brought up, and unless the minority does have that knowledge in this instance I shall object.

Mr. KELLER. If the gentleman will permit me to suggest what the bill really is, I think no one will object.

Mr. MICHENER. Following the usual policy, Mr. Speaker, unless the gentleman advises that at least the ranking minority member on his committee was advised that he was going to call the bill up for consideration by unanimous consent, I shall have to object.

Mr. KELLER. I make the statement it is a unanimous report, and there never has been any objection to it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PER CAPITA PAYMENT TO RED LAKE BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8369) authorizing a per capita payment of $12.50 each to the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians from the proceeds of the sale of timber and lumber on the Red Lake Reservation.

Mr. Speaker, this bill was on the Consent Calendar, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] objected. But I spoke to him about it the other day and he now states that he has no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, applying the same rule that I applied to the last bill up, has the gentleman conferred with the minority members of the committee as to what he expected to do here today?

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Not the minority members of the committee, but I conferred with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], and he said he would withdraw his objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say that I conferred with the minority members of the committee, and it was perfectly agreeable to them that the bill be considered as it is a unanimous report. The gentleman from Minnesota discussed this bill with me the other day and convinced me that it is a good bill. This money is paid out of tribal funds and does not take any money out of the Treasury, and I told the gentleman from Minnesota that I would withdraw my objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Having great respect for the intelligence and judgment of the gentleman from Michigan, and knowing that he is one of the official objectors, but wondering if he is not mellowing a little toward the close of the session, I withdraw any objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw as much as may be necessary from the fund in the Treasury of the United States arising from the proceeds of the sale of timber and lumber within the Red Lake Reservation in Minnesota, according to the provisions of the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 137), and to make therefrom a per capita payment or distribution of $12.50 to each of the living members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota, immediately payable upon the passage of this act, under such rules and regulations as the said Secretary may prescribe: Provided, That the money paid to the Indians as authorized herein shall not be subject to any lien or claim of attorneys or other parties: Provided further, That before any payment is made hereunder, the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota shall, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, ratify the provisions of this act and accept same.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "the fund" and insert "any funds on deposit."

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "arising from", strike out all of lines 6 and 7 and down to the word "and" in line 8, and insert "to the credit of the Red Lake Indians in Minnesota."

Page 1, line 9, strike out the words "or distribution."

Page 2, line 1, strike out the amount "$12.50" and insert the amount "$10."

Page 2, line 2, after the word "Minnesota" and preceding the comma, insert "living at the date of the passage of this act."

The Committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing a per capita payment of $10 each to the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians from any funds on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to their credit."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks made today in the RECORD, and also to extend my remarks in the Appendix.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an article on the value of Guayule rubber as a national-defense product.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include excerpts from a Carnegie Corporation report.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I notice that the gentleman inserted a speech in last Monday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so unjustified and unwarranted that I think any man who is guilty of any such thing——

Mr. HOFFMAN. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SABATH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Appendix a brief address by Hon. J. Dan Talbot at a patriotic meeting at Bardstown, Ky.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on two different topics.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I have to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in connection with my address to this House, to extend my remarks by inserting a number of names of persons actively engaged in this country with certain subversive groups, commonly known as the "fifth column."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I object to that, too.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, it is rather sad to see my colleague from Montana objecting to my request. I do not think I have ever objected to any man's request, especially so when it was made for the purpose of enlightening the country on some people who are actively engaged in subversive movements within the United States.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I always yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. THORKELSON. What was it you wanted to put in?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want to tell the country how many spies and saboteurs we have in this country that have not been subpenaed by the Dies committee.

Mr. THORKELSON. Are you sure you have all of them?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have got some of them. I only have about several hundred on my list now.

Mr. THORKELSON. If he wants to put that in the RECORD, I have no objection to it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I thank you.

Mr. Speaker, a gesture may be a gesture and speeches may be speeches, but there comes a time in every man's life when he must confront himself with the facts.

Again in the last 3 days I notice a number of press releases by the Dies committee as to what they are going to do, what they have found, and how they are going to find out more. To my disappointment I find a press release of September 18, supposedly made by my good friend, the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], chairman of this committee, and I quote from the New York Sun of September 18, 1940, in which he states as follows:

> Representative DIES in an interview yesterday declared that his committee a year ago learned of a plot to blow up the Hercules Powder Co., at Kenvil, N. J., but that its report evoked only laughs from the Government. He said that the blast which destroyed the plant last Thursday undoubtedly was the work of a foreign agent.

I submit that if Mr. DIES or any member of his committee or any representative of his committee or the so-called investigators knew that the Hercules plant was to be blown up a year ago, he should have named the person, he should have advised the Attorney General, or the F. B. I., he should have forced the American Government to stop the killing of almost 50 human beings and the maiming of almost 200.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Are you not charging almost directly that that committee is responsible for the death of these people? You do not mean that, do you?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; certainly not. I am just quoting a press release. I am not making that statement. I read from a press release. I will repeat it if the gentleman wishes to hear the language again.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, you are giving it circulation by reading it. Are you adding your endorsement to the charge?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; I am adding no endorsement. I am just quoting something which my distinguished colleague has made in the press. He said in that statement that about a year ago they learned of a plot to blow up the Hercules Powder Co. in New Jersey.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Pardon me. I do not want to take up too much of your time.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I wish you would not. I only have a short time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did not Mr. DIES report that to the Government?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know. But Mr. DIES has not subpenaed one single person who was drilling at the Nazi camp which is within that area of the Hercules powder plant, which is within the area of the DuPont Powder Co., which is within the area of two of the largest powder plants in this country.

Now, let me call the attention of this House to something that I believe you should know, and I think the Dies committee should know.

As far back as July 26, 1937, I said, as appears from the RECORD of that date, page 9971:

Mr. Speaker, the twenty-first camp of this type in this country was opened in New Jersey last Sunday with more than 15,000 men and women going wild about Hitler and Mussolini. I want the Members to know where Camp Nordland is located. This camp is situated within a number of miles of the largest munitions factories of this Government and one of the largest powder factories of the Du Ponts. I do not have to tell you, my friends, what happened in 1916 in connection with the Black Tom explosion. Mr. Speaker, if we are ever implicated in another war, we will have to fight the enemy within and without.

This camp is located on Lake Denmark. It is within the area of some of the largest powder plants in the United States. It is located near the marine barracks and not so very far away from the Hercules Munition Works and the Atlas Powder Manufacturing Co.

I gave that information to the House way back in July of 1937, calling attention to the fact that these subversive alien groups purchased 100 acres of ground for the sole purpose of being within the area of these important defense plants, the very area where the explosion took place last week that resulted in the killing of so many victims.

Why does not the Dies committee subpena members of some of these groups attached to this movement?

Does the gentleman from Michigan desire me to yield further?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes. The gentleman is undoubtedly familiar with the activities of these alien groups because he has spoken about them several times on the floor and given us information about them. I ask the gentleman if he has ever reported them to the F. B. I. and asked for action?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Just a moment. I read a quotation from the RECORD. I think everybody heard it. In that quotation taken from a speech of mine as far back as 1937 in which I called attention vigorously to this very thing. And I remember that my good friend from Michigan—and I have high esteem for him—and a number of others sort of ridiculed me.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, no; now, wait—not me.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I apologize if the gentleman thinks I ever ridiculed him.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not mean to be offensive.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I never ridicule anyone.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have called these things to the attention of as many people as I could.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman called attention to these organizations in speeches on the floor of the House, but did the gentleman get active and make a report to the F. B. I., giving them the information he had?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Before I answer the gentleman's question positively I shall have to look up my files. I have over 1,000 files.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why criticize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]? The gentleman has the information himself.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. What I am criticizing is not the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] but the methods he has been using. They ought to get some action and subpena the right people instead of sitting in the Waldorf-Astoria, calling a few so-called movie actors and asking, "Are you pink? Are you a pink?" "No, no." "You are excused."

Why not get to the bottom of this whole thing? Why not clean house and rid this country of "fifth columnists"?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I agree with the gentleman; but does not the gentleman believe that he, having information of this character, ought to report to the F. B. I. instead of just talking about it on the floor?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Let me again say to the gentleman from Michigan that this exposé of subversive activities carried on in various States which I have made from time to time, as disclosed by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, comes to their attention. The F. B. I., however, has no power to subpena certain individuals to determine how far they have gone, who they are, what they are doing, and so forth. That is the function of the Dies committee or some other committee of the Congress that has power to subpena witnesses and force them to give the necessary information to the committee. Then the evidence gathered can be given to the F. B. I. for prosecution.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from California, a member of the Dies committee.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. In the first place, of course, I will agree with the gentleman heartily about the importance of exposing these Nazi outfits, but I also want to say that in the last few months the Dies committee has had such investigators as it could put on it working on this very matter, and in the very regions the gentleman mentions; and I ask the gentleman to remember that, so far as actually apprehending people who might be likely to commit a crime of that kind is concerned, the Dies committee can hardly do it with the handful of people that they necessarily have to depend on to do its work. That kind of work is a job to be done by a real law-enforcing body.

I am not disagreeing with the gentleman that this work should be pushed as vigorously as possible—I have been contending for that myself—but I think in justice to the committee it should be clear that the committee's function is to bring out these facts and expose them, and that in the nature of the case the Dies committee, with four or five investigators for the whole country, cannot itself prevent terrible things like this explosion from happening.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree with the gentleman, but in the first place I do not believe the committee has the proper investigators. That is an honest expression of opinion, not merely a critical one. In the second place, I do not expect the Dies committee to pick up these things, but I do expect the Dies committee, in view of the fact that I have a number of times asked the Dies committee to call me into conference on certain matters, that they should; but they were jealous and envious lest my name appear in the papers as helping them.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to that kind of language. I do not think it is proper.

To say that the Dies committee was jealous and envious does not help the situation, and I am sure the gentleman did not mean that.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I meant just what I said.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Could not the gentleman have gone there as a witness? Does he have to be called in in conference?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Shall I stand in the front door or the back door waiting to be called in? Does the gentleman think a Member of this House should have to do that?

Mr. HOFFMAN. If I had any information that I thought was of value to the Dies committee I would go over there and say, "Let me testify."

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have sent some information over to the Dies committee, and after several weeks received a letter from a fourth-rate clerk stating that it will be called to the attention of the committee. I know of a number of very fine, patriotic organizations that have sent a lot of information to the Dies committee, and they have not even received an acknowledgment.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKELSON. May I ask this question—and I realize, of course, it takes money to finance these movements—has the gentleman any idea who is furnishing the money for those subversive activities, particularly those he is mentioning now?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] says he knows. I think you had better ask him. I could not give you the answer just now.

Mr. THORKELSON. I was wondering.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Does the gentleman know why this appeaser named Westrick was not subpenaed by the Dies committee before he left the country?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know. I exposed Westrick a long time ago and after weeks of exposing I find out by the press that the Dies committee is going to do this or that, and that they are going to subpena Westrick and others.

I am not particularly concerned how they run their show but I say that we have a menace in this country, a menace in the form of the "fifth column" and unless we go right into the heart of it, we are not going to clean out the "fifth column." I will name you 50 organizations in this country who are practicing and preaching intolerance, hate, and everything that stands against democracy, yet not one of these organizations has been subpenaed. I will give you the names of dozens, yes hundreds, of names of those actively engaged as "fifth columnists" who have been exempted from subpena. Oh, a lot of insignificant people have been subpenaed and brought before the Dies committee. Everything was a secret and behind closed doors. No, Mr. Speaker, you are not going to get rid of this question unless you expose every rat in that column publicly. You cannot do it behind closed doors. You cannot keep quiet about it. You cannot stand here and say nothing about what is going on if you have any love and affection for your country.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman just made a comment that they are exempted from subpenas. Will the gentleman explain what he means by that?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Certain people are subpenaed and certain people are not.

Mr. BLOOM. But they are not exempted.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They are not exempt. The committee exempts them.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he could furnish the information that he is speaking of, that the Dies committee is not furnishing?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It will be in the RECORD.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. You are preparing to do that today?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Why, it is right here.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Fine. I would be very much obliged to the gentleman if he would furnish the information.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Of course, I am opposed to communism, the bund, and all those things, and I appreciate the work that the gentleman has done.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. You are about the only one who does, then.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I do not think so. Perhaps some may not appreciate the attitude that the gentleman presents when he says if we do not rise up and do this and that we do not love our country like we ought to love it. I think we all love our country. The gentleman says he has the names of 50 organizations that are identified in helping to develop this "fifth column" movement in this country?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. He has the names?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. And he has the names of hundreds of others——

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Do not tie me up, now. I do not want to get in too many.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Is the gentleman going to put the names of these organizations in his speech?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I may say that I have been in favor of the Dies committee and I am in favor of it now. I think it has done a good work. When we have the names and when they have the names, we can insist that they bring in those folks before the committee.

Mr. BLOOM. Have a No. 2 Dies committee.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I think there is enough work for two Dies committees.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I stood up on this floor 2, 3, and 4 years ago and at that time the gentleman from Kentucky asked me a number of questions. I believe he was sympathetic. I tried to warn the country against the "fifth column" movement at that time, but little attention was paid to me.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I was aware of the fact that we had a "fifth column" in this country; that we had folks boring from within. I have thought all the time that the present danger to this country is more from right here in the United States than from somebody across the sea.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. How are we going to get at them then?

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman gave the information with reference to these associations before the term "fifth column" was ever mentioned on the floor of this House.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. BLOOM. They never were known as "fifth columnists" at that time.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Although I am not going to put this into the RECORD, because it would be useless to squander any money on it, I also wish to call your attention to the RECORD of August 19, 1937, pages 11954 and 12049, and the RECORD of May 9, 1937, page 7459. I have other RECORDS that go back as far as 1934 and 1933, but I do not believe it is necessary to put these speeches in now.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I believe every Member of the House appreciates the efforts of the gentleman from New York and certain activities of his in an endeavor to expose un-American, subversive activities. Is it not a fact that the gentleman himself served on a committee of that type and character once before?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. On the McCormack committee.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. That committee had practically the same task to perform as the present committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I created that committee.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. They held executive hearings. I believe I heard the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] praising their procedure on the floor the other day. They held executive hearings, did they not, and issued public statements afterward?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; we never released any public statements. We had executive hearings, and after the executive hearings were completed and printed we would sit down in conference and go over the material and then call a public hearing. It was on that public hearing that the newspapers got the information. At no time, to my knowledge, did we issue any statements to the press while we brought certain witnesses before us in executive hearings. We have always protected the reputation and character of those who appeared before us.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. The gentleman who is now speaking has himself been before the Dies committee and has been accorded a satisfactory hearing?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; a very courteous hearing.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. He has been given an opportunity to present all the evidence he had in his possession?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. On one phase of the inquiry; yes.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I can assure the gentleman now, here, at this time, publicly, that we of the committee will be delighted, indeed, to have the gentleman come before us again, either in an executive session or a public hearing, to give us the benefit of his knowledge about any and all un-American subversive activities in this country. We will be delighted to receive from him a list of the organizations he claims are vendors of hate in this country and are un-American in their character, and whose activities are subversive. We will be glad to have that list.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, there is no finer gentleman than my friend, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES]. I admire him. I appreciate that he understands the situation probably as well as anyone on this committee. The gentleman recalls that I have come to him and asked that I be brought into the councils of this committee, not for myself, but for my country's sake, because I knew I had the information. The gentleman never brought me back an answer other than that he volunteered—and I thank the gentleman for his action—that he would cooperate, and as far as the gentleman is concerned, he has cooperated. I am not trying to criticize the gentleman from Texas to the extent that I am scolding him. I am still advising him, because in order to advise him to listen to me I must go on the floor and tell him just what I think he ought to do.

I exposed the German Library of Information on this floor months ago, but it was not until 2 weeks after that that one of the investigators must have buzzed the ear of our good friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], and then they were going to investigate the German Library of Information.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Months ago we ascertained that the German Library of Information is a registered agent of the German Government. We know who its directors are and we know how much money they have received from the German Government. Since they have complied fully with all the requirements of the law and have registered as German agents, there is nothing further we can do about it, as far as we know.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Except that you could have brought in during the interim a report to the House asking for some legislation to eradicate it if it is an evil; and if it is not an evil and is doing the right things, then you could have given it a clean bill of health, as you have given a clean bill of health to certain moving-picture stars.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. The gentleman knows, of course, that our colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] has introduced legislation dealing with the registration of foreign aliens that provides stricter regulation than the present statutes, and that this measure has passed the House.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman also knows that on every bill that has been presented from his committee I have cooperated and sent it out from my committee.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. That is correct. I thank the gentleman for that; and I may say that one of those bills passed the House and the Senate and was vetoed, while the other passed the House and as yet has not been considered by the Senate. I am not criticizing the gentleman. I appreciate his cooperation with the committee.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am not criticizing the gentleman, either. It is just a question of legality.

What is this so-called American bund? The so-called members are just little fish. Behind this whole picture are the big fish. Let me call to your attention the fact that about 3 or 4 months ago a man by the name of Paffrath wrote four articles appearing in Liberty magazine, the title of which was, "I Am a Nazi Spy." In these articles he fully explained that he was sent here by the Nazi government and the Propaganda Minister. In fact, he built up a great story that he was in my employ and that he was sent to get into my employ to get a lot of information for the German Government. He mentioned certain superior officers that he had to report to on this matter. As a matter of fact, the articles themselves almost made this man the outstanding German spy in this country.

I have presented my case on this floor and I have appealed to the committee and called the attention of my friend and colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] to the fact that Paffrath is walking around. This man never was in my employ. He admits that he was a Nazi spy and he was sent here to help undermine our Government in one way or another and the Liberty magazine printed it and I pleaded with the Dies committee to subpena Paffrath. That has never been done. He is just another rat of the "fifth column" walking within this country. Do you not think it was important enough to find out what his activity was, with whom he was connected, and how much money he was receiving while he was working for the German Government, and who was paying it?

Now, thank the Lord, Mr. Fritzie Kuhn is in jail and so they have elected a new leader. This man is G. William Kunze and he is the fellow in charge of the Nordland Camp, and I might say, from my investigation of the Nordland Camp, that for the last number of years it is nothing but an immoral place. I do not want to use any foul language, but it is immoral. Not only did they have uniforms and guns and everything else, which they have cleaned out since, but the whole place is immoral and they try to inculcate into small children the philosophy and ideology of Hitlerism.

Yes; in connection with my 50 names that I hope to put in, I am going to give you 2 real Communist groups that you have not even touched.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Certainly, I yield with pleasure to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. The gentleman from New York knows that we have had before us Fritz Kuhn, a leader of the German-American Bund and one of its founders. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. The gentleman knows we have had before us Earl Browder, the head of the Communist group.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. And we have had before us the leader of every Communist organization we knew of in this country, and we have had before this committee men who founded the Communist Party in America and practically all of the living ex-candidates for President and Vice President on the Communist ticket, and I wish the gentleman would be a little fairer and a little more restrained in his remarks when he states that we have had nothing but "small fry" before us, when the gentleman knows we have subpenaed before that committee the leader of every one of these organizations that has been under fire.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Let me give the gentleman and the committee credit for Earl Browder's exposé, but let me also say in fairness to myself and to the committee and to this Congress that a number of other individual Communists that you subpenaed were just a lot of convicts who were trying to save their own necks by coming before the committee and giving certain testimony involving certain people that really were not the type that had the red ribbon around them. I say that in fairness to both of us.

Now, I say you have done a good job. I say you are responsible for the conviction of one of the leaders, and you have focused the attention of the country on what is going on, but in the same breath I must say that you have not picked up those who are behind Browder, and, as I am informed, there are one or two Communist camps in this country, and you do not even know where they are; in fact, it took me a long time to find out, and I did not have to pay any money for it.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman say who is behind Browder?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know; apparently, the Communists, but that is up to the committee to find out.

With the activities of the "fifth column" in the United States becoming more brazen than ever before, despite the publicity given to it by an awakened press, it is time to examine the work of the Dies committee to determine how effectively the menace is being combatted by this group. All over the country organizations and individuals whose avowed or unadmitted purposes are the destruction of our democratic form of government and the propagation of Nazi ideology, are conspiring against our democratic institutions which they seek to supplant by foreign dictatorial ones.

Many months ago I pointed out to Congress that the Dies committee had merely scratched the surface in the course of its widely publicized and expensive investigations. Today I am forced to repeat that criticism of a congressional body which can offer little for the money and time and newspaper space spent on it. Recently this committee decided to subpena several openly Nazi organizations in the city of New York. By a strange coincidence these groups, such as the German Library of Information, the German Railways Information Office, and so forth, had a few days before made the headlines in newspapers, independently studying their subversive nature and performing a public service by exposing them to the public. In other words, not until years after these groups were originally denounced and not until the newspapers exposed their activities did the Dies committee finally come to spasmodic life.

Needless to say, these groups had plenty of time to remove all incriminating literature and documents before the investigators of the committee at last descended upon their offices.

I contend that the Dies committee has not made a single independent move to investigate subversive groups in the past few months. They waited until some other agency or individual took the first step.

Hundreds of un-American groups and "fronts" remain untouched, free to ply their totalitarian wares in the market places of our Nation, waiting for der tag, when they can come out in the open against our democracy.

The appeasers, composed of powerful individuals willing to sell their American birthright of freedom for a mess of Nazi pottage—and ersatz pottage at that—demand the immediate attention of some investigating agency of the Government. These powerful men are a thousand times more important and dangerous than the crackpots and madmen whom they finance. There is no need to name names; PM, a New York newspaper, has recently exposed these traitors, pointing out that three of them are the wearers of Hitler medals, with one of the three an official of a giant corporation, somehow having been appointed to a post connected with the national defense.

This is the same kind of situation which in France resulted in the debacle of its military arm. Certain Frenchmen, like certain Americans in our midst, connived with the Nazis, supported their aims in their native country by financing native Fascist groups, and finally saw their land given over to a barbaric horde of invaders.

Last June, in the Anti-Nazi Bulletin, publication of the Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League, an article on the American Fellowship Forum, a Nazi front group, contained the following significant passage:

> The advisability of placating Hitler a la Munich follows easily once you accept the premise that Hitler can't be beaten. The cry that we'd better not stick our necks out, as yet merely a still, small voice heard only in Yorkville and from certain Members of Congress, may be expected to grow in intensity as the summer preelection months roll by.
> Still required to convince the American public is the notion that Hitler, after all, could be worse, and, anyway, doesn't really conflict with the interests of the United States. This is the identical dressing to the unsavory dish presented to the people of Great Britain and France before Munich.

Our appeasers and Nazi-inspired traitors are hoping to put across an American Munich on the people of this country by financing native groups with the funds required to spread antidemocratic propaganda and sow the seeds of the same kind of cancerous un-American growths which led to the destruction of France.

Perhaps there may have been some excuse for France, Norway, or the other victims of Nazi cunning betrayed from within; they did not realize the importance of curbing their traitors. There can be no excuse for us, with the lesson of what happened in those countries before us, if we allow our appeasers and Nazi-inspired native traitors to sabotage our democracy.

It would seem to me that the Dies committee has done nothing about these powerful interests, that are the real internationalists, who betray the American people by encouraging appeasement with Nazi Germany, the avowed enemy of everything we hold dear. They have done nothing about the spread of un-American propaganda by native traitors who reprint the mouthings of Herr Goebbels, or about the native Fascist organizations like the Ku Klux Klan, recently linked to the German-American Bund through a joint rally in New Jersey. They have done absolutely nothing about any of the openly un-American groups active at this very hour spreading discontent and terror.

Here is a list, taken at random, of half a hundred of these organizations which the Dies committee has perhaps read about in the papers but never bothered to investigate:

1. The Christian Front, including other Coughlin-inspired groups.
2. The Christian Mobilizers (see list A for names and addresses of important members).

The following are some of the activities of the groups mentioned:

1. The Christian Front, a pro-Nazi, anti-Semitic organization supporting Father Coughlin.

2. The Christian Mobilizers, outgrowth of the front, advocating violence and revolution. Leader, Joseph McWilliams, close to Fritz Kuhn. Mobilizers almost merged with the bund.

3. American Destiny Party, running Joe McWilliams for Congress. Composed for the most part of Nazis. "Fuehrer" McWilliams has repeatedly praised Hitler and advocated terror and revolution.

4. Christian Knight Crusaders, another Coughlin group, whose aims closely parallel those of the front.

5. Arabian Nationalists, headquarters in New York. Working closely with Nazi agents.

6. Russian Nationalists, headed by the notorious Count Spiridovich, who is linked to the bund and other Nazi groups.

7. Rumanian Iron Guards. American branch of the Hitler Iron Guard group in Rumania.

8. Armenian Fascists, Ukrainian Fascists. See exhibit The Hour, article 1, September 14, 1940.

9. Italian Fascists; purpose is self-evident. Attempting to corrupt Italian-Americans by preaching obedience to Fascist Italy rather than the United States.

10. World Alliance. One "Colonel" Sanctuary is the moving spirit behind this organization, which seeks to array public opinion against the Jews.

11. Mosley's English Fascists and New York tie-ins (Stewart Collins). A bookshop on West Fifty-eighth Street in New York is the headquarters for this subversive group.

12. American Nationalist Confederation, headed by notorious Fascist George Deatherage in St. Albans, W. Va. An attempt to merge all native Fascist groups.

13. League for Constitutional Government (John B. Snow), another high-sounding name covering pro-Nazi and anti-Semitic aims.

14. Constitutional Educational League (Mr. Kamp), one of the "fifth column" groups which is attempting to throw investigators off its trail by calling others "fifth columnists." Not a single Nazi or Fascist, however, is included in its denunciations. Headquarters in New York.

15. National Gentile League (Shea), headquarters in Washington and Baltimore. Headed by a semi-illiterate crackpot who is at present engaged in distributing propaganda for the Japanese Government.

16. Kyfhauser bund, a German group seeking to reestablish the "glory" of the old German Empire. 228 East Eighty-sixth Street, New York City.

17. K. K. K.-bund. Their joint rally in New Jersey showed how far Nazi agents have penetrated in the Ku Klux Klan.

18. American Defense Society—high-sounding name for a pro-Fascist organization.

19. American Patriots—same as the American Women's League.

20. American Women's League—this organization which pretends to be against Communism, is linked to the notorious Allen Zoll, who will soon be tried on charges of attempted extortion after having attempted to obtain money from a radio station in New York.

21. James True Industrial Control Reports.—True sends out a viciously pro-Nazi and anti-Semitic news letter replete with "facts" also, by some strange coincidence found in the German hand-outs.

22. Edmondson's Economic Service—from his lair near Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Edmondson sends out his Vigilante Bulletins filled with Herr Goebbels' propaganda.

23. Brinkley's Newspaper Publicity (Wichita, Kans.)—this paper, published by the goat-gland faker, who was forced to remove his radio station into Mexico when his promises of cures for various ills resulted in complaints, is now the publisher of a newspaper which features anti-Semitic drive plus the mouthings of the semi-illiterate columnist, Edward James Smythe, who recently admitted that he was responsible for the Klan-bund rally. Documentary proof in my files proves Smythe a Nazi agent.

24. Propaganda coming into the United States via the Clipper and Spanish Lines—unmolested.

25. American Nationalist Party—located in New York; this is linked to the bund; composed of many bundsters.

26. Industrial Defense League of Boston—another Fascist outfit with a high-sounding but meaningless name.

27. Japanese propaganda—still flooding the country with such a Fascist as Donald Shea of the so-called National Gentile League one of the agents.

28. Printing presses, and so forth, financed from abroad and their manner of distributing pamphlets and leaflets harmful to our citizenry.

29. Radio broadcasting by Nazi sympathizers, also radio broadcasts from Germany.

30. German youth camps and teaching of Nazi philosophy to children. Been going on in the United States for 10 years; taught racial hatred and intolerance; these children carry such ideologies to New York City educational centers.

31. Trade relations and pressure methods applied by groups here. (See the Board of Trade for German-American Commerce.)

32. Foreign exchange with Germany relative to the transfer of money.

33. Stahlhelm activities—composed of German and Austrian veterans of last war, closely allied with German-American Bund.

34. Nazi Guard infiltration of Germans since advent of Hitler government, particularly important since calling out of Guard.

35. Immigration Conference Board (John B. Cecil), an alien-baiting outfit which attempts to hide its Fascist sympathies behind an impressive name.

36. Molly Pitcher Brigade (Mrs. Parr), connected with the Christian Front and distributor of anti-Semitic literature.

37. Distributors of German White Paper, who are responsible for extensive publication of Nazi propaganda material.

38. Communist camps in Beacon and Camp Unity, as well as others teaching Communist philosophy to children.

39. Russian airplane engineers working in Wright airplane factory in Paterson, N. J. Why are foreign representatives allowed to keep places during critical times like the present?

40. Silver Shirts. Where is Pelley? Are the Silver Shirts still strong but merely in hiding?

41. German-American Board of Trade, dangerous group attempting to guide American businessmen into the camp of the appeasers; controlled directly from Berlin.

42. American Fellowship Forum, another "American Munich" group with whom Nazi Propagandist George Sylvester Viereck is connected. Mails literature to same list as German consulate.

43. George Sylvester Viereck, propagandist active during World War; still active agent of Nazi government here. Busy spreading anti-American propaganda.

44. German Library of Information. Floods the country with Nazi propaganda.

45. German Railway Tourist Bureau. Has representatives all over the United States, although it is almost impossible for anyone to go abroad. Why are these "representatives" stationed in key cities?

46. Activities of German consuls. Just as in Norway, Holland, and all the other countries invaded by Nazi Germany, consuls here are preparing the way for military attack by spreading propaganda and conniving with native Fascists.

47. Deutsche Konsum Verband, an organization of German merchants levying a tax on every German doing business in the city of New York to finance German imports and exports.

48. Interocean News Service (Dr. Zapp), Nazi news service, sending out propaganda, particularly to South America.

49. Deutsche Wirtschaftsdienst, an organization of German merchants to capture markets for Germany in South America.

50. Irish Republican Army, sympathizers here in America of the German bund and carrying on vicious anti-British activities.

The following Nazi organizations, bund members, and "fifth column" sympathizers of Camp Nordland, who directly as well as indirectly have been aiding the upkeep, financially, since 1937 are listed below.

These should be investigated as to their activities at once, since the serious happenings at the Hercules powder plant:

1. Erster Deutscher Lesezirkel, 176 East Eighty-fifth Street, New York City.
2. Blane Lesemappe; New Jersey representative, Hans Sass, 643 Pleasant Avenue, Union City, N. J. Hans Sass was a former bund storm trooper commander.

And others.

Mr. Speaker and Members of this House, I could name many other individuals and organizations, but I do not desire to take up more of your time than absolutely necessary.

If any of the organizations or individuals mentioned here by me can show that I am wrong and want to clear themselves of the charges made against them, let them come forward and do so. I will be the first one to cooperate with them if my charges should prove unjustified.

These are perilous times, and we are going through a national as well as international emergency. In order to preserve our democracy and to keep this a land of liberty we will have to destroy subversive groups that preach intolerance and bigotry and that try to deprive certain groups in this country of the rights guaranteed to them by our Constitution. Events abroad have shown us that no country is safe unless her internal structure is sound. If we want to keep our democratic institutions, if we want to keep this country free, we have to keep alert and take precautions before it is too late. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix by inserting my own minority report to the report of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COSTELLO). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill (S. 3636) to amend the National Defense Act, as amended, so as to provide for retirement of assistant chiefs of branches and of wing commanders of the Air Corps with the rank and pay of the highest grade held by such officers as assistant chiefs and wing commanders, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the names of certain organizations and individuals that will appear as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for permission to extend my remarks on two different topics in the RECORD, and I am advised by the gentleman who objected that he will now withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article by A. H. Lane, and I have a second request to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include excerpts from a book entitled "The Hidden Hand."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, much has been said on this floor recently about what is termed "Washington's milk problem." This subject has long been discussed, and at times very bitterly and ofttimes personalities involved. Usually the arguments contained more heat than light, and at times the discussions were entered into by parties who had no interest personally or otherwise. Ofttimes arguments have been presented by parties who knew nothing about the subject, and cared less, and the question has arisen as to why.

I am reminded of the story of two men driving through the country at a rapid rate of speed when they passed by a pasture field in which there were a lot of cows. One man said, "Oh, look at the cows. I wish I could count them." The other man said, "I have already counted them." Then his friend replied, "How did you do it?" He said, "Each cow has four teats. I counted them and divided by four. There are 400 cows in that pasture." The one man knew his cows; the other could not even count them.

Milk happens to be the chief source of income on the farms in those heavily populated sections of the country. And many a man who is always a law-abiding and peaceful citizen is ready to fight on a moment's notice when milk is mentioned. Few people realize the immensity of the dairy business of the Nation, or the volume of milk produced annually. Why, it would make a river 3,000 miles long, 40 feet wide, and more than 2½ feet deep. Fifty-one billion quarts are our annual production. Twelve billion quarts of this are used right on the farms where it is produced. Thirty-nine billion quarts enter the channels of trade. These 51,000,000,000 quarts of milk must be drawn from the cows twice a day, and in many cases three times a day, every day of the year, by the men and women and children on the farms. It is milked into approved regulation pails and poured through approved strainers into regulation cans and moved into a milk house on the farm that has been approved, and put into a refrigerator and cooled to a certain temperature. This, however, only applies to those areas that supply their milk and its derivatives to municipalities that have set up sanitary regulations in the interest of the public health. A great deal of the milk produced is produced in outlying areas where no sanitary regulations are provided, and it finds its way into channels of trade where it is used in other ways except as milk and cream distributed from door to door as we understand it.

This milk, cooled to its proper temperature, is then taken from the farms on trucks traveling the main highways, and all of the milk not produced along the routes traveled by milk trucks must be delivered by the farmers to the highway, there to be picked up on trucks that may be used only for transportation of milk. They are either refrigerated or the milk is iced while in transportation. It is then delivered to the cooling or receiving station, and is then usually transported to the municipalities in tank trucks, tank cars, or in cans under refrigeration to the main distributing plants.

This transportation costs the producer anywhere from 15 cents to 75 cents per hundredweight, depending on the distance or method of transportation. In the central plant the milk is standardized, pasteurized, put into commercial containers, and placed in refrigerators to be delivered to the consumer's door the following day.

The consumer's door may be on the tenth or twentieth story of an apartment house. The consumers using milk want the milk they want. Consequently, we find as many as 10 or 12 delivery trucks delivering milk in the same block in the city. It is put up in various kinds of containers, principally glass or paper. All of this costs a lot of money. Up to the time the milk enters the central plant the cost is borne by the producer. Bottles are very expensive, and too often we find the consumer failing to cooperate by not returning the bottles. I have in mind one city in Pennsylvania a few years ago that was using so many bottles—I mean the bottles were not returned—that the dealers began putting on a deposit. The result was that the following year they used just as many crates of bottles as they used carloads of bottles the year before. This sounds fantastic, but it is nevertheless true.

There was a time not many years ago when we heard little or nothing about sanitary regulations in the production and handling of dairy products. The milk retailers in the city purchased milk where they could get it at a price they established themselves. At certain periods of the year that price was high and other periods very low, and a farmer could drive to a milk plant in the morning with his milk to have the dairyman tell him that he did not need his milk; that he was getting too much; or he could find fault with it and he could eliminate him by that method. Many a farmer found himself without a market without an hour's notice.

This unfair trade practice, together with other unfair trade practices, worked a terrific hardship on the producers. On the other hand, there were no sanitary regulations on the farms or in the plants, and epidemics were from time to time being traced to the milk supply. Milk was gradually being used more and more. People everywhere were beginning to find out its food value and the demands were rapidly increasing. With it came the demand for a higher-classed product from the consumer and relief from unfair trade practices from the producers. Some unfair trade practices that still exist are, for instance, bootlegging of milk. May I say right here there is not so much milk bootlegged. Bootlegging confines itself principally to cream. A great many people do not know that cream may be shipped long distances, made under unsanitary conditions, may even reach the stage in which it cannot be poured, and still be washed in a lime or chlorine solution, diluted with condensed or skim milk or water, pasteurized several times, and sold as a fair quality of milk to the unsuspecting public. Another unfair trade practice that some folks say still exists, and probably does, is the purchasing of butter—cheap butter—butter known as rancid or off quality. This, too, can be melted, reverted into cream, and finally back into milk, and sold to the same consumers who, with the producers, are the victims of these unfair trade practices.

During the last few years we have heard charges and countercharges of bootlegging here in the Capital; and let me say right here that the milk problems of Washington, D. C., are no different than they are in every municipality in the country. The same kind of tactics have been used wherever milk has been sold at some time or other. But there must have been some bootlegging resorted to here in the Capital, because during the time when this bootlegging charge was made the sales of local milk went down as much as 60,000 quarts per day. And after the bootlegging was stopped, if it has been stopped, the sales increased for the balance of that year more than $500,000.

Charges have been made that during the investigation of this bootlegging the hands of the committee were tied. They did get far into the racket but found that it smelled as high as heaven. It is my candid opinion that the stench came from the product that was being bootlegged in and that the investigation got along all right according to the record, which contains volumes, and which I have read. There was nothing wrong with the investigation except that the trail led to the front door of the wrong party, and there it stopped.

I have always contended, and have said on the floor of the House on more than one occasion, that milk in the District of Columbia is retailing too high. Yet those people who want cheaper milk have access to 11-cent milk at the chain grocery stores. I am informed that there are more than 200 stores in the District of Columbia selling milk at 11 cents per quart. It has been pointed out here that Mayor LaGuardia has done marvelous work along this line for New York. I am pointing out that Washington, D. C., has the same service that New York has; that is, milk stations have been opened to sell cheap milk to people on relief. This method here in the city has recently been severely criticized. I said at that time, and it was only a few weeks ago, that I felt sure that when the people of the city understood that this milk was available at the 11 stations established here that they would avail themselves of this cheap milk. And I find that now, in about a months time, the sales have more than doubled. I am talking of the 5-cent milk sold to people on relief at the 11 stations open throughout the city.

Now, let us compare the retail price of milk in Washington with that of Chicago, and we find that the local price is 14 cents for 4-percent milk. In Chicago it is 13 cents for milk testing 3.6, or equivalent to 14.4 cents for 4-percent milk. It is true there is a lot of milk selling for less than this price in Chicago, and has been for some time, because of a price war going on there. Now, let us come back and, for just a minute or two, consider whether the putting of these sanitary regulations into effect and the organization of the producers' associations in the milksheds supplying these cities has been worth while. First, let us consider the quality of milk. We find that in 1920, here in the District of Columbia, and I quote from the District of Columbia Department of Health report, the bacteria in raw milk received from the farms was 1,898,000 per cubic centimeter as against 18,500 in 1938. The bacteria in pasteurized milk received by consumers in 1920 contained 120,000 bacteria per cubic centimeter as against 7,000 in 1938. We find a corresponding increase of butterfat, which was, in 1928, 4 percent as against 4.14 in 1938. We turn to the infant mortality rate in the District of Columbia and we find that in 1925 we had a death rate per thousand of live births under 1 year of age of 87.5, as against a death rate in 1938 of 48.1. In other words, as the standard of the quality of milk and cream sold here went up the death rate of children below 1 year of age was practically cut in half. I am asking you to judge for yourself whether or not it was worth while.

Much criticism has been aroused about the farmer-producer organizations, not only here in this milkshed but in other milksheds, too. I shall confine my remarks, however, to the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers' Association, covering the milkshed supplying this municipality with milk. The history of this organization, however, will check with that of every other farm cooperative.

Due to unfair trade practices, due to infant mortality and raging epidemics, and due to a demand for a higher quality of milk as well as for a stable supply, the University of Maryland, 20 years ago, organized the producers in both Baltimore and Washington areas. I question whether the university has ever done anything that was of greater service or that will stand to its everlasting credit more than this organization of milk producers. And let me say here that the Baltimore organization and the Washington organization are two separate and distinct cooperatives at the present time. My interest in maintaining the local organization is because I know that unless we maintain the producer's organization in the Washington milkshed we cannot maintain the producer's organizations in other milksheds. I have a great many farmers in my district who belong to the Interstate Milk Producers' Association of Philadelphia, and they are enjoying a fair market and I do not want to see it taken away from them. The charge has been made that there are many farmers in my district who want to sell milk into Washington. This is not true and never was. We now have two farmers from Pennsylvania shipping milk into Washington, D. C. We do have some milk going into Baltimore from my county. The sanitary regulations for the Washington market are of such a nature that most of the farmers in my district would have to build new barns were they to ship here. The markets they now enjoy are not so bad that they would be justified in making this added expenditure.

Criticisms have been made of the salaries received by the officers of the producers' organizations. These salaries are paid by the producers by a brokerage charge of 1 cent per gallon. This is called a revolving fund. Out of it producers are paid if dealers fail. In other words, accounts are made safe by this fund. This has created quite a large fund, really larger than was necessary; and some years ago they started to pay back each year to the producers from this fund. The amount returned last year to the producers in this milkshed was $122,000 and will probably be $100,000 this year. In checking the salaries of the officers of the producers' organization with those of the officers of the dairies serving this city we find that they are just about the same.

The call has been made for an investigation of the local milk market by the Federal Trade Commission. I remember about 1934 or 1935 the Federal Trade Commission investigated the markets of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia. The hearings were conducted by Judge H. W. Hilldrop, of Tennessee. It was my privilege to sit in on these hearings in Philadelphia. A gang of attorneys lived in Philadelphia's swankiest hotel for a number of weeks. I recall one afternoon in the hearing when the judge rapped the gavel on the table and said, "Gentlemen, don't you think we ought to have a smoke?" Of course, everybody agreed and so the court recessed for 15 minutes to smoke. At the end of 15 minutes, which was 4:30 p. m., the court was called to order. A witness was put on the stand and sworn in when the judge pulled his watch again and said, "Gentlemen, I have forgotten I was invited out to go places and see things tonight. The court will recess until tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock." That night I picked up the Philadelphia Bulletin and read an account of the milk hearing. It said that the hearings were about to come to a close; that the committee had exhausted its fund of $850,000 and would ask for an additional $150,000 to conclude the hearings.

The report of these investigations filled volumes. I have looked them over and all they said was that they had not investigated sufficiently to make a definite report. They should have another $1,000,000 to investigate Chicago and St. Louis markets before making any definite recommendations. This is not a slam at the Federal Trade Commission but it is a statement of fact of the investigation conducted by Judge Hilldrop for the Commission in the three cities mentioned. I am reliably informed and willing to believe that the Commission is better handled today.

I have listened for a long time—for a number of years—to charges being made against various corporations—various organizations—and generally those making the charges upon whom rests the burden of proof are hard to find when the proper time comes. I was very much amused yesterday to pick up the newspaper and see that the Government's antitrust case against 45 individuals, corporations, and associations in the milk industry of Chicago were dismissed and the charges dropped. The case was one of the largest in the Department of Justice's campaign against alleged monopolies. Special Assistant Attorney General Tierney informed Judge Woodward that the consent decree had been arranged. The judge then dismissed the charges of conspiracy to violate the antitrust law against all of the defendants. The judge said that he felt the action best served the interests of all concerned. The charges in that case were just the same as the charges against the local producers' organization, milk dealers, and wagon drivers, together with the local health officials, as are being made here in this market.

I might have discussed in detail the stable supply of good milk now available here as compared with the milk the city would be compelled to use if the present set-up were broken down and the retailers permitted to go out and purchase cheap milk. By cheap milk I mean the surplus milk from other markets, and those other markets might be anywhere in the United States, or distressed milk, which is a quantity of milk that springs up anytime, anywhere, due to local weather conditions. These two supplies of milk are likewise stopped without notice for many reasons, principally due to weather conditions. I would like to discuss many other phases of this market and the industry, generally, but time and space forbid. However, I shall be glad at any time to furnish such knowledge as I have of the milk industry generally to interested persons seeking constructive information.

My object in inserting this matter in the RECORD is because I felt it was my duty to turn the light on this subject. I have avoided heat and personalities and confined myself to facts. I shall continue to stand by them and want it definitely understood that I am fighting no battles for any particular individual or organization and do not intend to be actively engaged in any further milk fights in Washington, D. C. This matter will stand in the RECORD as information for those who want information after this. I harbor no ill-will against any of the parties involved, but do believe that those who have made former charges and those who want to make charges hereafter should be in a position to make those charges good. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include excerpts from an article by A. H. Lane.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. POLK, for 2 weeks, on account of important business.

SENATE

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of all wisdom, who knowest our necessities before we ask and art always more ready to give than we are to receive: Forgive, we beseech Thee, our pitiful worship and the poverty of our prayers. Make us to worship Thee in the depths of our spirit and in truth. Hearken not to our petitions but to the crying of our need for clean hands, pure hearts, and the forgiveness of our sins. We ask for no far-off vision which may obscure the nearer duty, for no enchantment which may slacken our hands or enfeeble our spirits, but for the vision of Thyself in the common things of every day. Remove the suspicion which regards Thy service as an intrusion on our time, an interference with our daily task, and do Thou so fashion our lives that every citizen of our beloved country, from the chiefest to the humblest, shall put character above reputation, virtue above success, and devotion to God above every other loyalty. In our Saviour's name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Thursday, September 19, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Arkanas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are necessarily absent.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1450) to provide funds for cooperation with school district No. 13, Froid, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10413) to provide revenue, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. CULLEN, Mr. MCCORMACK, Mr. COOPER, Mr. TREADWAY, Mr. CROWTHER, and Mr. KNUTSON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8369) authorizing a per capita payment of $10 each to the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians from any funds on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to their credit, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

LEAVE PROVISION FOR POSTMASTERS CALLED TO DUTY WITH THE ARMED FORCES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act of June 25, 1938, entitled "An act extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes," which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 314) creating a special committee to find ways and means for an automatically balanced Budget, reported it without amendment; and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4360) to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Theodore R. Troendle, sole stockholder of the Dawson Springs Construction Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2145) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4338) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1937, as amended, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2146) thereon.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on September 19, 1940, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 2991) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States certain lands in the city of National City, Calif.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DOWNEY:

S. 4367. A bill for the relief of Kurt Bernhardt; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

S. 4368. A bill to amend section 6 of an act of Congress approved May 20, 1935, entitled "An act concerning the incorporated town of Seward, Territory of Alaska; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. PEPPER:

S. 4369. A bill for the relief of John Eliou; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 4370. A bill authorizing the President to appoint an Under Secretary of War during national emergencies, fixing the compensation of the Under Secretary of War, and authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe duties; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

UNIFORM DIRECTIONAL MARKERS FOR SAFE AIR TRAVEL

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce a joint resolution for appropriate reference. I also request that a statement relative to the matter of uniform directional air land markers for safety in air travel may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 300) for the promotion of safety in air travel by the construction of uniform identifying land markers was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The statement presented by Mr. PEPPER in connection with the joint resolution is as follows:

UNIFORM DIRECTIONAL AIR MARKERS FOR SAFE AIR TRAVEL

The Aviation Defense Association, of Washington, D. C., announces its immediate campaign to cooperate with the Civil Aeronautics Administration, in a program to arouse Nation-wide interest in safety of air travel.

With thousands of air pilots, instructors, and students almost continually in the air, it is urgently necessary to provide directional land markers throughout the country to make aviation safe.

Uniform markers of various sizes will be necessary. In some sections the arrows and names of towns, painted on the roofs of buildings, will guide the pilots and students. In other instances markers may be painted on highways or monuments or may be constructed in open fields or on hillsides.

Already the Civil Aeronautics Administration visualizes over 400 intermediate landing fields and 2,400 actual airports with a potentiality of 3,600. Furthermore there will be many ground and flight schools, with 1,500 air pilots being trained every 4 months, a total of 45,000 during the present year.

The Aviation Defense Association plans to enlist the support of Governors of States, county officials, mayors of cities in this great undertaking so vital to the safety of air pilots, both military and commercial.

With the proper air markers the hazard of flying will be greatly reduced, and for that reason we call upon not only State officials, but the citizens of the United States, to assist in placing these uniform directional signs in their immediate neighborhood.

The lighting of directional air markers other than those at airports and landing fields which are taken care of, is most desirable. They should be illuminated in accordance with regulations and instructions which we can furnish.

The Civil Aeronautics Administration has located some 2,200 standard beacons in addition to blinkers, and all persons should be informed these air navigation lights must be certified to before being placed.

Last year, our association sponsored and established legislation for the annual celebration of National Aviation Day on August 19, Dr. Orville Wright's birthday, through congressional resolutions introduced by Senator PEPPER, Representative J. H. PETERSON, and other Members of Congress.

This year, as an aid to the establishment of air land markers, Representative J. H. PETERSON, of Florida, and Senator CLAUDE PEPPER, of Florida, have introduced the following joint resolution:

"For the promotion of safety in air travel by the construction of uniform identifying land markers

"Whereas the rapid progress of aviation and its continued growth and importance to commercial interests and to our national defense has increased the necessity for establishing additional safety measures; and

"Whereas the construction of uniform directional identifying landmarks on the tops of structures and on the ground has now become imperative; and

"Whereas it is desired to foster public opinion and sentiment for the construction and maintenance of these identifying landmarks for the convenience and maintenance and safety of commercial, private, military, and naval interests in air travel and 'for youth education in aviation': Therefore, be it

"Resolved, etc., That the Work Projects Administration, Civilian Conservation Corps, and other public organizations are authorized to give their support, insofar as practicable, to the construction of uniform directional identifying landmarks for safety in air travel, on the tops of public or private buildings or lands under the supervision of the Civil Aeronautics Authority of the Department of Commerce. That the Governors of States and Territories be requested to aid in all Federal agencies now engaged in the promotion of safety for air travel."

The Aviation Defense Association asks the people of the United States seriously to urge their Representatives in Congress to support the above resolution so necessary to our national air defense.

THE AVIATION DEFENSE ASSOCIATION, INC., Washington, D. C.

By J. E. MYERS,

Colonel, United States Army, Retired, President.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 8369) authorizing a per capita payment of $10 each to the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians from any funds on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to their credit was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR DEFENSE IMPROVEMENT BILL—SABINE-NECHES WATERWAY, ORANGE, TEX.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

TRANSFER OF MILITARY AND NAVAL EQUIPMENT TO GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I intend to present a resolution to the Senate, which I should like to read—it is very brief—and then take about 3 minutes to explain it.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States, if not incompatible with the public interest, is requested to inform the Senate whether in the negotiations of the arrangement between himself and the Secretary of State, representing the Government of the United States, and the British Ambassador at Washington, representing His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, for the acquisition by the United States of naval bases in the Western Hemisphere and the exchange therefor of certain vessels of the United States, said arrangement contemplated further delivery to Great Britain of additional naval and military equipment and material as would appear from the letter of the British Ambassador to the Secretary of State, dated September 2, 1940, wherein it is stated that certain islands in the Caribbean and in British Guiana will be leased to the United States by the British Government "in exchange for naval and military equipment and material which the United States Government will transfer to His Majesty's Government," and whether the reply of the Secretary of State to said letter of the British Ambassador that "the United States Government will immediately transfer to His Majesty's Government 50 United States naval destroyers" meant that additional naval and military equipment and material would follow.

Mr. President, that resolution is identical to one offered in the House by my very able friend, Representative ROGERS of Massachusetts. It simply seeks to ascertain whether it is planned to send any more American weapons or vessels or military or naval equipment abroad. I recognize that two points of view are possible on the question of sending weapons abroad. I happen to be one who has always been opposed to doing that. In my judgment, there is no such thing as a surplus of weapons. There is no such thing, when an emergency is faced, as a weapon that is completely and truly obsolete.

I have had some service in the Army with tanks which are supposed to be obsolete, but the fact of the matter is that even with so-called obsolete tanks young men can learn how to drive and how to make repairs, and they can learn signal communications, tactics, and a great many other things.

I think there is no question that a number of naval reservists will be deprived of training which they otherwise would receive, because so many destroyers have left Boston and have gone abroad.

There may be two opinions on this matter. I happen to think that we ought to defend America first. I cannot, however, conceive how anyone can doubt that a question of such importance, regardless of one's opinion about it, should be submitted to Congress, and should be thoroughly debated and approved by Congress.

It is said, of course, that we were not using the destroyers, that we have not been using the Enfield rifles, and have not been using the 75's. In my view, the whole reason why we have an Army and Navy is so that we shall not have to use them. The reason why I support national defense is because of my belief that if we are sufficiently well armed it may not be necessary for us to use our weapons.

We continually see rumors in the press to the effect that two-thirds or nine-tenths or some huge fraction of our airplane production is going abroad, and that that is the reason why the accretions of airplanes to our Army and Navy are so small. I do not affirm; I do not deny; I do not know what the facts are. But I say we should have the facts. We should know whether or not our Army and Navy are getting up-to-date planes, and if not, what is the reason. If we are to train pilots to fly modern, high-speed planes, we must have modern, high-speed planes in which to train them.

So I submit the resolution to the Senate. It is a counterpart of one which has been submitted in the House. I submit the resolution simply to obtain information, to find out whether or not any further depletion of our one-ocean Navy and our admittedly inadequate Army is contemplated.

No one is more enthusiastically in favor of acquiring naval bases in this hemisphere than am I. In fact, I think the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] and myself introduced the first piece of legislation in this body on the subject. I think it is still pending. We introduced a measure calling upon the Secretary of State to enter into negotiations to acquire naval bases. No one is more enthusiastically in favor of acquiring naval bases than am I. However, I think the procedure which was used is not in accordance with our theory of government.

Certain issues are raised by sending part of our Navy abroad. After all, that is what it is. Let us call things by their true names. We are sending part of our Navy abroad. We are becoming a partner in the blockade. We are coming measurably nearer to the conflict. Let us not blink the facts. Perhaps we want to do it; but let us do it consciously, deliberately, and because we want to. Let us not slip into it sidewise, without admitting to ourselves that that is what we are doing.

This transaction raises five or six issues, which I have mentioned today, and a great many more which I have not mentioned, any one of which would be a major issue of congressional dispute in normal times.

I simply wish the RECORD to show my belief that if the American people want to embark on this policy, that is their right; but the question is one which ought to be debated and settled by Congress.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Is the Senator advised of the importance to the Navy of the flying boats which authoritative sources seem to say are about to be transferred? Can the Senator give me any information as to their importance?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know which ones are in contemplation. I certainly think that flying boats are of the most tremendous value to a navy. So long as we have only a one-ocean Navy, and so long as the Pamana Canal in as vulnerable as it is, we certainly ought to build up our own Navy; and the flying boats are an essential part of the fleet.

I submit the resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to submit the resolution at this time. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 317) was received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the course pursued by the Senator in having the resolution referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. That was the course which I intended to suggest to him if he had not done so of his own accord.

I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate in rehashing what the French would call a fait accompli in the transfer of 50 destroyers in exchange for certain bases. If the President has done one thing during these troubled times which, in my judgment, has met with the overwhelming approval of the American people, it is the accomplishment of this transfer under the terms which were part of the understanding.

I do not know to what extent the President could with wisdom reveal to Congress or to the public day by day or week by week negotiations which are going on in regard to our foreign relations. Neither do I desire to prognosticate as to how long the Congress would have taken to debate the wisdom of the course which the President took. The war might have been over before we ever should have arrived at a conclusion about it. I am not saying it would, but it might.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at this moment. I am in the middle of a thought. I shall be glad to yield later.

The President took a course which he was authorized to take under the law. There are some who, for political reasons, have criticized the method by which he accomplished this transaction; but the American people as a whole have not criticized it. On the contrary, they have applauded it.

I do not believe that the American people are very much interested in the fine technicalities of executive authority. In my judgment, the course which the President took was a primary and fundamental course in the interest of American defense.

Someone has referred to the 50 destroyers as one-seventh of the Navy. They may be in number, but certainly not in value or in tonnage. Hitler referred to them as "50 old crates." He may have been exaggerating in his effort to minimize their value to the British Navy, but even if it be true that the destroyers were of no practical value, or not very great practical value because of their age, and that the bases were of no monetary or practical value to England, it seems fair to say that the destroyers are of great value to England and that the bases are of infinite value to the United States. But, regardless of that fact, the transaction has been accomplished. I believe that the American people overwhelmingly approve it; and I sincerely trust that no effort is to be made to embarrass our Government because of something which has already happened, which I believe the American people approve, and which I believe was thoroughly legal and wise.

TRANSPORTATION IN COMMERCE OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on Senate bill 3550, to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I now renew the motion which I made nearly 2 weeks ago that the Senate adopt the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. NEELY. I do.

Mr. GLASS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 607, making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 607?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Virginia whether the matter which he wishes to dispose of will probably lead to any considerable debate.

Mr. GLASS. I hope not, sir. I apprehend there will be no considerable debate. It is a very emergent measure, passed by the House yesterday.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in spite of the fact that the conference report has already been too long delayed, the matter to which the Senator from Virginia has addressed himself is of such an important, and in fact emergent, nature that I shall not object to the request; but I give notice that I shall object to a unanimous-consent request to take up any other matter until the conference report now before the Senate shall have been disposed of. I do not, however, object to the request of the Senator from Virginia.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 607) making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, namely:

Military posts: For construction and installation of buildings, flying fields, and appurtenances thereto, including the acquisition of land, rights appertaining thereto, leasehold and other interests therein, and temporary use thereof, without regard to the provisions of sections 355, 1136, and 3648, Revised Statutes, as amended (10 U. S. C. 1339; 40 U. S. C. 255; 31 U. S. C. 529), $329,519,902.

Acquisition of land: For acquisition of land, including rights pertaining thereto, leasehold and other interests therein, and temporary use thereof, without regard to the provisions of sections 355, 1136, and 3648, Revised Statutes, as amended (10 U. S. C. 1339; 40 U. S. C. 255; 31 U. S. C. 529), $8,744,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Virginia what statutes are waived by the exemptions at the bottom of page 1 and the top of page 2 of the joint resolution?

Mr. GLASS. One is a limitation on the construction of permanent barracks. Another is a statute requiring the Attorney General of the United States to pass upon the title of land. Another is a statute with regard to the advance of public moneys before the performance of the work.

Almost this entire appropriation, except $8,000,000 of it, is for the construction and installation of buildings for draftees. The law requires that there shall be no draftees until provision is made for their accommodation, and this measure simply makes provision to house them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSPORTATION IN COMMERCE OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3550) to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the attention of the Senate is invited to the fact that the conference report now before us is identical with the bill as it passed the Senate without a dissenting vote, excepting that the words "or District of Columbia" have been inserted in the ninth line, on page 2, of the Senate bill in order to assure the penal and correctional institutions of the District the same privileges and immunities that will be enjoyed by other similar Federal establishments. The report also contains the following additional language, which was inserted after the word "government" in the tenth line on page 2:

Or to commodities manufactured in any State penal or correctional institution for use by any other State or States or political subdivisions thereof; to parts for the repair of farm machinery; or to agricultural commodities.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. I wish the Senator would explain what is meant by the provision he has just read—that the bill does not apply to goods made in one State for other States.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, it means, for example, that the penitentiary in the Senator's State could manufacture and transport in interstate commerce automobile license plates for the State of Missouri.

Mr. GURNEY and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. NEELY. I yield first to the Senator from South Dakota. Then I shall yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, can the Senator give me any information as to whether a penitentiary making binding twine would be allowed to sell that binding twine in intrastate business?

Mr. NEELY. Only to another State or subdivision thereof. The great delay in bringing this conference report before the Senate was caused by the fact that some of the conferees insisted upon excepting binder twine and farm machinery from the operation of the bill. But a majority of the conferees decided that there was no more reason for excepting binder twine and farm machinery than there was for excepting any other article of commerce.

Mr. GURNEY. Did the Senator misunderstand me? The binding twine made by the penitentiary, say, of South Dakota could be sold in South Dakota?

Mr. NEELY. Certainly. I thought the Senator said in interstate business.

Mr. GURNEY. I said "intrastate business."

Mr. NEELY. I am sorry that I misunderstood the Senator's question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator said that under this conference report a penitentiary in one State could sell road machinery to another State desiring to use it. Would that be true also of counties and cities within the State, or other subdivisions of the State?

Mr. NEELY. It would.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course we all know that under our present road-building program most of the machinery in all the States, I presume, is bought by the State, or by the counties, or by the cities; so that comparatively very little road machinery is bought by private individuals, unless it be bought by road-construction corporations which on a large scale build highways.

I wish to ask the Senator whether the conference report might bring about a situation in which very material injury would be done to competitors in the sale of road machinery if most of it is bought from a penitentiary outside of the State? What effect would it have on them?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in my opinion the conference report contains nothing that could, by any possibility, injure free business or labor. Its purpose is to protect both.

Mr. BARKLEY. Frankly, I do not know to what extent any penitentiary is engaged in making road machinery.

Mr. NEELY. Few, if any, penal institutions make road machinery, and few make machinery of any kind.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose there are a larger number which make license plates, which is not very important anyway, so far as the amount is concerned.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator from Kentucky is, as usual, correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the bill, the penitentiary in Kentucky, which might be manufacturing license plates for automobiles in that State, could sell them to Missouri or any other State?

Mr. NEELY. Certainly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I believe that as the law is now, any State has the privilege of barring out goods for its own benefit. Is not that so?

Mr. NEELY. Of course.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If any State wishes to stop a State like the State of Minnesota from selling binder twine, it can do so now, can bar it out?

Mr. NEELY. Any State could prohibit its penal institutions from manufacturing or selling binder twine or anything else.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Under the bill as it is reported it would be possible for one penitentiary that is manufacturing blankets or something else to exchange those with another penitentiary in another State?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I cannot hear the Senator's question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. As I understand the bill, the different States may exchange with each other or sell to each other penitentiary-made goods, provided the goods they buy from the other States are used in State institutions, used by the States.

Mr. NEELY. That is correct, and the privilege of purchasing extends to all the States' political subdivisions.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I have listened to what the Senator has said, and I call attention to what has been written into the bill by the conference, on line 10, page 2. I quote:

> Or to commodities manufactured in any State penal or correctional institution for use by any other State or States or political subdivision thereof.

And I continue:

> To parts for the repair of farm machinery or to agricultural commodities.

I have received a great deal of correspondence from people back home in my State who feel that this provision is not broad enough. For instance, I have here a letter from the Wisconsin Council of Agriculture, which represents a large group of agricultural folks in Wisconsin, and a similar letter from Mr. K. W. Hones, who is the head of the Wisconsin Farmers Equity Union. They say:

> The farmers here feel that the reduction in price of prison-made farm machinery is an item in their favor that must be considered. Also, there is not only the opportunity to buy prison-made farm machinery for less money, but furthermore those prices for prison-made farm machinery are definitely a stabilizing influence on the general price structure of other farm machinery.

I read further from one of the letters:

> Up in your corner of the State, should this conference report on bill S. 3550 pass, the farmers will be more handicapped on binder twine than here in southern Wisconsin for the reason that today they are buying prison-made twine from Minnesota, due to the lower transportation cost into northwestern Wisconsin from Waupun. For that reason, I am sure that farmers in northwestern Wisconsin are most keenly alert to the threat which this bill presents.

If the Senator will permit me further; as I understand, the bill, now provides in substance that, so far as commerce between the States is concerned as it relates to prison-made goods, the only exception is as to repair parts for farm machinery, and agricultural commodities. If the prison farm produces agricultural commodities, those commodities can be sold across the State border?

Mr. NEELY. That is correct.

Mr. WILEY. Or if the prison produces farm machinery parts, these parts can be sold across the State border; but nothing else can, unless the deal is between another State or county, school district, or municipality, in another State, with the prison.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in my opinion, the Senator from Wisconsin has correctly interpreted the language of the conference report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I desire to read a telegram which I have received from Mr. Thatcher, who is chairman of the legislative committee of the National Farmers' Union and who is also president of the National Federation of Grain Cooperatives. I presume other Senators have received the same telegram. This is addressed to me and reads as follows:

Our organizations angered by high-handed action conferees on prison-made-goods bill. Acceptance of report would be big victory for Farm Machinery Trust and great setback to farmers in our long battle against trust. Urge recommitment to exempt farm machinery and binder twine.

That is signed by Mr. Thatcher, as I stated.

The labor organizations and the farm organizations have been cooperating and working very closely together. I feel disappointed that any disruption should come in and break up that fine relationship which has been established between these very worthy organizations, the labor organizations and the farm organizations, as this conference report seems to do.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, there certainly was no high-handed action by the conferees in adopting the report. They met again and again and thoroughly debated every controversial question involved in the bill. Mr. Thatcher's gratuitous criticism is without justification.

Mr. President, the conference report raises a single question, and that is, Shall we protect free laborers and free manufacturers from the disastrous competition of convicts and the products of their labor? If so, the conference report should be adopted.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. There is a provision in the measure which allows farm products produced on prison farms to go into interstate commerce. Some of the penitentiaries have big farms, and the work of the farms is done with cheap convict labor. Those farm products go into other States in direct competition with the products produced on the farms of those States. The farm products of our State are practically all sold below the cost of production. So the same argument applies to farm products; and if agricultural machinery produced by convict labor is to be prohibited from moving in interstate commerce, farm products produced on prison convict farms should be treated in the same way.

Mr. NEELY. No farm organization opposed the bill while it was before the committee. If I am not mistaken, an officer of one farm organization has approved this legislation.

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly the amendment providing for allowing convict prison farm products to go into interstate commerce was not offered at the request of the farmers of the country.

Mr. NEELY. That is quite true.

Mr. FRAZIER. I cannot imagine what farm organization would take such a position. In some of the Southern States I understand there are prison cotton farms. Cotton is a drug on the market in the South. It is selling for about one-half or one-third of the parity price. Certainly the cotton farmers down there do not want to compete with cotton raised with prison labor.

Mr. NEELY. Can the Senator inform us to what extent cotton is produced by State prisons?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not know. I simply used cotton raised by prison labor as an example. I know that some of the State penitentiaries have large farms.

Mr. NEELY. The cotton grown by convicts is probably less than one-fifth of 1 percent of the entire crop.

Mr. FRAZIER. That may be. But how about farm machinery? The farm machinery produced by convict labor is probably less than one-fifth of 1 percent of the total produced in the country.

Mr. NEELY. That may be true; but a majority of the conferees, nevertheless, believed that farm machinery should not be excepted from the operation of the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. In North Dakota the only product manufactured in the penitentiaries for sale is binding twine. North Dakota has only a small prison farm, which produces enough farm products for its own inmates, and that is all. It does not have any farm products to sell at all. Certainly none go outside the State. But the Minnesota penitentiary manufactures farm machinery, and our farmers of North Dakota buy some of that Minnesota convict-produced machinery—not a great deal, but quite a little—and it comes into North Dakota at a lower price than the International people sell their machinery, and helps regulate and keep down the prices.

We all know that the Machinery Trust makes apparently an exorbitant profit on its products. It now charges the same price or a higher price than it did even in the World War time, and the prices of farm commodities are far below what they were then. It takes about five times as much farm commodities to buy an International harvester as it did a few years ago.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator's argument is to the effect that the unrestricted sale of convict-made goods would reduce the prices paid by the consumers. This reduction in price would sooner or later mean a reduction in the compensation of every free laborer engaged in the production of articles of commerce similar to those made by convicts who receive practically nothing for their toil. I cannot accept this theory or believe that its adoption would be less than intolerable to free labor.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I think the statement of the Senator at least partially depicts the situation, but I call his attention to the condition the farmer is in, and I wish I had words graphically to impress it upon him and other Senators. As everyone knows, the farmer is in a very bad situation, generally speaking.

Apropos of what the Senator from North Dakota referred to, I have in this letter from the head of the Wisconsin Council of Agriculture some proof of what he suggested, and I read into the RECORD this paragraph:

I am wondering also if a little sectionalism hasn't popped out in this bill for the reason that, it is my understanding, in the South convict labor is largely engaged in agricultural pursuits. Texas, I understand, uses such labor extensively in the production of cotton. Louisiana employs her convict labor in the production of rice and sugar. Here in the North we use our convict labor in industrial pursuits, as well as in the field of agriculture. The agricultural production of convict labor in the North is of a nature that does not go into interstate commerce, while the agricultural production of the convict labor in the South does go into interstate commerce.

In relation to the machinery that is produced by the prisons, it is a relatively small amount compared with the total production, but to the farmer in my section it is important. Let me call the attention of the Senate to this very significant fact. For years now probably 90 percent of the farmers of Wisconsin have been producing their main product, which is butterfat, and they have been getting less than the cost of production for it. If they must pay these big prices for machinery—and they are big prices, for I know something about the matter myself—it simply means that you will have to do something for the farmer. You will have to fix the price of his product, so he can get a sufficient price to enable him to buy farm machinery.

Mr. President, like everything human, this matter is like a two-edged sword—it cuts both ways. I for one would not be in favor of imposing upon the economy of the country a vast flood of prison-made goods. But that is not the situation. In the farm area—remember this—the farmer who has been buying the machinery from the trust, as it is spoken of, has been paying the topnotch prices. Even the foreign farmer has been able to buy farm machinery made in the United States at a considerably lower price.

If the farmer had a sufficient income to buy that farm machinery, there would be no question about this proposition. But shall we continue to interfere with that segment of our society which is the backbone of the Nation—I mean the farmer, who produces the food that you and I live by and whose farm has been going down in value, and the little money that he had saved before 1929 hit him is all dissipated?

Taxes are going up and the farmer's income is coming down. His machinery is worn out and he has a chance to get machinery at least in a competitive market. Now there will be no competitive market. The so-called trust will "boost the price on account of war conditions" and the farmer will be "sold down the river again."

So far as union labor is concerned, in my humble opinion, the production of this machinery in the small quantities in which it is produced will not interfere with union labor in the least. We have fixed the wage to be paid to labor. We have fixed the minimum wage that labor shall receive. But we have not fixed the wage the farmer shall get for his work or products. We have simply said to the farmer, "Get what you can get, let the big boys fix the price of your products and you farmers—well, you are just farmers. You do not count." That is what this legislature has said.

I ask that there be incorporated at the conclusion of my remarks the letters and a telegram to which I have referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters and telegrams are as follows:

MADISON, WIS., September 12, 1940.

United States Senator ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building:

Conference report on S. 3550 is damaging and positively detrimental to the true interests of Wisconsin and midwest farmers. On behalf of 37 major Wisconsin farm organizations, I ask that you stand firm in opposition.

MILO K. SWANTON,
Executive Secretary, Wisconsin Council of Agriculture.

WAUKESHA, WIS., September 16, 1940.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WILEY: We are advised that bill S. 3550 is to be considered by the Senate Tuesday afternoon, September 17. There are two primary reasons why we are opposed to this bill. First, we believe it is to the best interests of all concerned to keep those in our penal institutions occupied at some profitable labor, thereby cutting down expenses to the taxpayers. Also, when this labor is converted into producing such articles as binder twine, etc., that can be sold to the farmers at a lower price than they would otherwise have to pay, a saving is effected.

If there is any class of people that need help and consideration, we feel it is the farmers. They are not organized like many other industries and consequently do not get the recognition and support that other industries receive. The relationship between the price of farm products and farm machinery, etc., has changed very materially in the last few years. The prices of farm machinery, etc., have advanced a great deal more than the prices of farm products.

We represent an organization of Holstein breeders in Waukesha County and are expressing the sentiments of over 1,000 Holstein breeders. We hope and trust you will give this matter your careful thought and consideration.

Thanking you for your attention to this, we are,

Very truly yours,

WAUKESHA COUNTY HOLSTEIN BREEDERS' ASSOCIATION,
By A. F. BENNETT.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, WIS., September 12, 1940.

The Honorable ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Re S. 3550.

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: For years Machinery and Twine Trusts have tried to abolish prison-made machinery and twine at the State legislatures. Farmers by the hundred flocked to the hearings and in all sincerity testified as to how the price had been brought down through competition. We have successfully blocked them at home.

Now these trusts, knowing that Washington is out of the farmers' reach, have prevailed on Congress to pass this damnable bill. As soon as this competition is eliminated, these trusts will again have clear sailing to raise prices to whatever level they feel they can wring out of the farmers.

In Wisconsin there are many millions of dollars worth of Minnesota prison machinery and many thousands sold every year. This machinery has been sold for much less than that of the trusts, and farmers have saved this difference. Twine has been kept down in price because of this fact.

To pass this bill will do Wisconsin farmers great injustice and set a precedent for the future for eliminating all competition, leaving farmers exclusively at the mercy of the trusts.

We are sorry that some labor leaders are being fooled, as it will not do labor one bit of good.

Hoping you will do all you can to stop it, I am,

Sincerely yours,

WISCONSIN FARMERS EQUITY UNION,
K. W. HONES, State President.

SHEBOYGAN, WIS., September 17, 1940.

United States Senator ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senate Chambers, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We understand that bill S. 3550, which would stop the sale of prison-made goods, will be up for consideration shortly.

As farmers of the State of Wisconsin, we feel that the passage of this bill should be blocked altogether; but, if this is not possible, that such amendments be made to it so as to exempt binder twine and farm machinery.

Your earnest consideration of the problems involved will be very much appreciated, and we hope that you will be able to successfully oppose this bill.

Yours very truly,

SHEBOYGAN DAIRYMEN'S COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION,
HERBERT C. HINZ, Secretary.

WISCONSIN COUNCIL OF AGRICULTURE,
Madison, Wis., September 14, 1940.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senator, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WILEY: I am replying to your telegram by air mail for the reason that it permits more of an opportunity to give the facts.

Bill S. 3550, in the opinion of the organizations affiliated with the Wisconsin Council of Agriculture, is a typical example of organized industry and labor looking for protection at the expense of the farmer. It will restrict competition for industrial products, but it leaves the door wide open for the competition of prison labor in the open field of agriculture. As I have said before, we in agriculture are willing to stand our share of the competition which prison labor gives. We expect industry and labor to do the same.

Convicts must not be supported in idleness at the taxpayers' expense. From the standpoint of rehabilitation of manhood, bill S. 3550 is a step in the wrong direction.

I am wondering also if a little sectionalism hasn't popped out in this bill for the reason that, it is my understanding, in the South convict labor is largely engaged in agricultural pursuits. Texas, I understand, uses such labor extensively in the production of cotton. Louisiana employs her convict labor in the production of rice and sugar. Here in the North we use our convict labor in industrial pursuits, as well as in the field of agriculture. The agricultural production of convict labor in the North is of a nature that does not go into interstate commerce while the agricultural production of convict labor in the South does go into interstate commerce.

In the final analysis the farmers here feel that the reduction in price for prison-made farm machinery is an item in their favor that must be considered. Also, there is not only the opportunity to buy prison-made farm machinery for less money, but furthermore those prices for prison-made farm machinery are definitely a stabilizing influence on the general price structure of other farm machinery.

Up in your corner of the State, should this conference report on bill S. 3550 pass, the farmers will be more handicapped on binder twine than here in southern Wisconsin for the reason that today they are buying prison-made twine from Minnesota due to the lower transportation cost into northwestern Wisconsin than from Waupun. For that reason, I am sure that farmers in northwestern Wisconsin are most keenly alert to the threat which this bill presents.

Sincerely yours,

MILO K. SWANTON,
Executive Secretary.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator in referring to the mistreatment of the farmers, evidently meant during the Hoover administration, when vast numbers of them became bankrupt. Under the Roosevelt administration the farmers have received untold millions of dollars from the Government in benefits both direct and indirect.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I am sorry there has been injected into this discussion the matter of politics, but if you talk about what the farmers have gotten, let me give a significant example. Under your program, what you have done for the average farmer in Wisconsin is that you have paid him for soil conservation. I speak of the average farmer, and I am talking as one, as a farmer who has a 300-acre farm, and an investment of thirty-odd thousand dollars in it, who has been paid on the average $50 a year. That is what the farmer has gotten.

In the meanwhile the farmer's taxes have gone up, and the price he receives for butterfat, on which he lives, has gone down. So that he has not received enough from his farm, over a period of some 9 years, to pay the taxes on the farm fully equipped.

I do not want to be personal, but on my farm there is no mortgage. I have no interest charges to pay. It produces well but does not pay its way. In the State of Wisconsin and in the Farm Belt in the past 10 years the Government has taken over tens of thousands of farms because the farmers could not get a decent return on what they produced.

The answer, if an answer is desired, is to give the man who produces a fair return for what he produces, and then there will be no question about paying him a grand subsidy of $50 a year, which will not create stability in the farming section, or recreate the morale in the discouraged farmer. What the farmers want is a decent return on what they produce. They do not want any "pap." They do not want any suggestion that they have been dealt with in a noble way, a generous way, especially when farms by the thousands have been taken over by Uncle Sam, and farm values have hit the bottom.

In 1933, when the Democratic administration came into power and the insurance companies were foreclosing on farms, the insurance companies usually could get out of a farm the value they had put into it; but now throughout the country generally they cannot get 50 cents on the dollar for what they have in farms. Our own Government is selling back farms at 50 cents on the dollar. If the Democrats think they have helped the farmer by such methods, they are blind with New Deal philosophy. They need glasses. They should take off the blinders so that they can see straight.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, this is the first time that I have heard the Senator from Wisconsin boast that he is a farmer. Many years ago General Goff and a brilliant Democratic statesman by the name of Wilson engaged in a political debate in West Virginia, in the course of which General Goff is said to have stated that he understood the farmers' problems because he himself had been a farmer. In response to this Mr. Wilson said, "General Goff's boast that he has been a farmer reminds me that a ground hog once dug a hole in the hillside, and therein established his winter quarters. On a sunny afternoon he went out for an airing, and when he returned he found in his burrow, an animal with much fur, more odor, and no manners. The ground hog said to the intruder, 'Who are you?' The uninvited guest, which happened to be a polecat, answered, 'I am a ground hog.' The ground hog eyed the odoriferous beast, stroked his fur, and otherwise investigated him and then said, 'You don't look like a ground hog; you don't feel like a ground hog; and you don't smell like a ground hog.'" [Laughter.]

My friend from Wisconsin does not look, feel, or smell to me like one of the farmers for whom we have been endeavoring to provide prosperity. [Laughter.] The Roosevelt administration may not have made any contributions directly to my distinguished senatorial farmer friend from Wisconsin, but it has made the farmers of the Nation billions of dollars richer than they were on the last day of the last period of Republican control, March 4, 1933. Out in the West at that time wheat was selling for 23 cents a bushel. Look at today's paper and learn the present price of wheat. Under the last Republican administration corn was burned as fuel, because it was cheaper than coal. Look at today's quotations and learn the difference between Hoover and Roosevelt prices for those who till the soil. The farmers will, in appreciation of Democratic blessings, enthusiastically and effectively help to elect Franklin D. Roosevelt President for a third term.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I do not wish to get into the debate; but the Senator from Wisconsin made a very high-sounding statement about paying producers what their product is worth, and thus solving the troubles of the farmer, with which statement I am entirely in accord. However, since the Senator from Wisconsin has been a Member of this body I have not heard him advance any plan nor have I seen him submit any legislation which would tend to accomplish that purpose in any degree whatever. Furthermore, I have not heard the candidate for President on his particular ticket in this campaign announce any plan for the farmer other than to approve everything this administration has done.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator from New Mexico will not hear the Senator from Wisconsin even suggest a plan for farm relief between now and the 5th of November, because the Senator is vainly depending upon the renegade Tammany Democrat, Wendell Willkie, to solve all farm problems during the next 4 years. What a disappointment is in store for the Senator from Wisconsin on the night of the election!

If the trend indicated by today's paper continues, Mr. Willkie will not even carry Maine or Vermont.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I do not rise as a prophet or the son of a prophet, as some of my colleagues pretend to be. When I listen to distinguished Senators, one of whom referred to a plan which would rehabilitate the country, I am reminded of the fact that in 1937, for the first time since he took office in 1933, the President of the United States predicated the great depression of 1929 upon World War conditions. Why? Because he, too, had a depression.

When the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] speaks of conditions which obtained back in Hoover's day, I am reminded of something else which obtained. A man honored by the world and by his country, after being elected President of the United States, came into the Presidency and was doing a good job when the great tidal wave resulting from world conditions not only inundated America but inundated the world, and we had a depression. Then another tidal wave started, a tidal wave emanating from the minority party, whose members started out with buckets and paint brushes, filth and vermin, and told semitruths and whole falsehoods to the country, so that the great leader, who was recognized internationally and otherwise, went down in the campaign of 1932.

Mr. President, in the Democratic platform of 1932 there were significant promises, none of which have been fulfilled in seven and a half years. The people of this country in November will show that they have not forgotten that the promises were not fulfilled. The great promisors were not great performers.

To what do I refer? I refer to reemploying the unemployed. I refer to reducing bureaucracy in this country. In that day, 1932, 28,000 persons were employed in the city of Washington. Now there are 160,000 to 170,000 Government employees here. I refer to the matter of balancing the Budget and paying off the indebtedness of this country. You Democrats have not fulfilled.

What was done to make good your pledge to the people? Nothing. None of those things was attended to. None of the promises was fulfilled. There was no performance—only promises. All the time we were looking forward to seeing the new prophet in Israel do the job.

The Senator speaks about two politicians back in his State of West Virginia. I am reminded of an old friend of mine in Wisconsin who spoke with a German accent, although he was an American from head to toe. In the seventies he went out into the wilds and built a home, raised a family, and produced wealth. In his old age he had gone into a little village to live out the remainder of his days. He had voted for Roosevelt in 1932 because he said Roosevelt promised so much. He voted for him in 1936 because he again promised so much. But in 1938 he said he was through with him. Why? Listen to the philosophy of this man. He said, "You cannot dig yourself out of a hole by digging deeper." He had learned in the school of experience the rules of life—industry, the need of savings, honesty, square dealing. No; "you cannot dig yourself out of a hole by digging deeper." During the past 7½ years our Nation has been trying that false, debilitating philosophy, which some say has made America stronger. You cannot drink yourself sober. You cannot spend yourself out of debt. You cannot keep on sinning and reform yourself. Neither can government strengthen its vitals by profligate methods.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] refers to the present prices of corn and wheat as though Roosevelt had something to do with them. What did have something to do with them? Your money and mine, in the Treasury of the United States, when we went into a big building program to defend the country. Roosevelt had nothing to do with that. The Congress of the United States appropriated the money. World conditions had something to do with it; but I suppose Roosevelt will claim that his was the magic wand.

Let me suggest one other story, a story brought to my mind by the story related by the Senator from West Virginia when he spoke about the odoriferous little black animal with a white stripe down his back. The Senator intimates that I know nothing about farming. Since 1914, when I took over the farm on which my parents lived, buying it from them so that they might live out their remaining days in comfort, I have operated a dairy farm of 300 acres in my State. I know the problems of the farmer, because I have had to pay the bills. I know what the farmer is going through. But enough of that.

A few years before my father passed on, we went out to the farm one day. We went to the hen coop. It had around it some of the odor which has been referred to. We knew what put the smell there. We knew what to do about the smell. We did not have to have a philosopher tell us that a skunk was around trying to get the chickens. We did not have to have a lot of new theories propounded to us about how to get rid of the skunk.

Applying that story to present conditions, the Senator from New Mexico says that we have no legislative program to remedy the economic condition our country is in. I agree with him. It cannot be remedied by legislation. Why? I repeat the disease from which America is suffering cannot be remedied by legislation. One of the great mistakes of the last 7½ years is that the New Deal Democrats have been worshiping the golden calf of legislation. They have gone to the wrong shrine. Seven and a half years of trial and error have demonstrated that they are working up the wrong alley and praying to the wrong god. They have tried to make two times two into five; they have tried to make men who had courage and vision and pep and energy into leaners, chiselers, and grafters; they have put America almost in the same condition that France was in when she went down before the "blitzkrieg" of the Germans. Now they say to America, "We have done a great job." Mr. President, let them open up their eyes, go up into the mount and see what they have done, and in humbleness get down on their knees and pray to God to put an end to their reliance on mechanistic, idealistic theories and let them get down to "brass tacks," to realistic living and thinking.

Churchill said what the road was; Willkie said what the road was. Why you, who never built a structure, who never made a factory go, who never ran a farm profitably, want to keep on the profligate way you have been going is incomprehensible. America will not "fall for it" much longer. America wants you to go back and humbly start up the way that made America great—the way of thrift and honesty and hard work and character and decency, if you please. America wants none of your chiseling, none of your undermining, none of your paint-brush methods.

I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that if he wants to know the way to build America it is as simple as A, B, C, but it is the simple things you will not see; you will go to your theorists and your experimenters, those who deal in magic, and expect to get things done. America has had enough of this course—this loose way of dealing with great values.

What is the way? Here is America. There are 130,000,000 of us. America needs a leader who can coordinate labor, capital, and management; who can give the man of enterprise encouragement, who can give to men the courage to adventure again, who can give them the spirit which will beget vision. That will make America great again.

A few years ago in the Middle West we had a football team that could not win football games; yet in the backfield there was a great punter, a great sprinter, a great ball thrower. In the line there was a great end man, there was a great center rush, there were two great guards, and there were fine tackles; but each one of them wanted to be the whole show. Each was a great individual player, but the team won no games. The team had a great coach. He was in the newspapers all the time; always pleasant, congenial, loved publicity. Every time he sneezed he had to have an editorial written about it, and every time one of his players did something he had to outplay him for publicity. He could not give the visiting team a chance at all when they came to town. No; he had to have the headlines, he had to get the columnists all the time. The team was losing games. It could not play football. Why? Because each one acted as an individual.

Then one day the school woke up, and said, "We will get rid of that fellow who wants to have the headlines and we will get someone who can take these 11 men and form them into a fighting group, a winning team." The new coach was a modest fellow. When he came on the scene he did not get into the newspapers. He took the men who constituted the team; he talked to them and said "Men, submerge your little personal selves; unite in one great effort; remember 'all for one and one for all'; make this a team and not an exhibition; make it a group that will accomplish something and not one that will merely befuddle the lookers-on; get 11 men into action as one." The funny thing was the team started to win. Why? Because they had a leader; they had a coach who could coordinate the activities of the team, just as labor, capital, management, the farmer, the businessman, the professional man, the clergyman, and all other elements of our society should be coordinated. So the team started to win because they worked together; they built together, and they "went to town" together. Because a leader led them, inspired them, got them to play for their alma mater, they won. The leader was a builder, who built not for self but for the school.

What do the Republicans suggest? They have suggested all along that a new coach be secured, someone who would not always play the headlines, but would weld the national team into a fighting unit to defeat the depression; someone who could take men of different creeds, of different faiths politically and economically, inspire them to fight as one man; see the goal, and win the game.

That, Mr. President, is the remedy; it is the remedy Wisconsin a few days ago undertook to apply there, and that is the remedy this Nation in November will put into effect by electing Wendell Willkie. It requires a man who can inspire; who can create confidence in all classes; who can get the American team to play as one man.

The present party has demonstrated clearly in the last 7½ years that it or its leader cannot do the job.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator from West Virginia still have the floor?

Mr. NEELY. Yes; unless he has been deprived of it by the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not desire to be discourteous to any Senator, but I think it is a very important matter which is now before the Senate, and I wish to give notice that if the Senator yields for any more speeches, I intend to make the point of order and ask that the rule be enforced.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me for a question?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if the people should respond to the admonition of the Senator from Wisconsin to kneel in prayer, I hope that they will include a pious supplication for deliverance from a repetition of the Hoover administration under Mr. Willkie or any other apostle of the great engineer.

I now yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, there is a proviso contained in the conference report which exempts, among other things, agricultural commodities. I should like to suggest to the Senator a condition which exists in the penitentiary in my State, with the view of obtaining from him an interpretation of "farm commodities." As the Senator knows, the sugar industry is now operating under the 1937 Sugar Act, and each factory is assigned a certain sugar quota for sale and distribution. The Louisiana State Penitentiary has a sugar factory which has been operating for over 30 years, and it has been assigned a sugar quota. It produces sugarcane on its land. The cane is useless unless it is processed into sugar, and said cane cannot be sold to any other factory because all other factories have all the cane they require in order to produce their respective quotas. I am wondering if the product of the cane produced on the lands of the penitentiary would come within the purview of an agricultural commodity.

Mr. NEELY. In my opinion, it would.

Mr. ELLENDER. I presume the conference managers discussed that phase of the question and came to that conclusion?

Mr. NEELY. That specific question was not discussed by the conferees, but the general principle was considered.

Mr. ELLENDER. And the Senator is of the opinion that the first processing of cane into sugar would be exempted?

Mr. NEELY. That is my opinion. I am informed that sugarcane must be processed in order to be utilized.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. NEELY. If the Senator's interpretation in which I have concurred is not correct, the provision of the report which exempts farm products would be a nullity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the conference report. I rise merely for the purpose of suggesting that when the bill which is the basis of the report was drafted, inadvertently, three or four words were omitted, namely, the words "or the District of Columbia." The bill when it was under consideration was amended by inserting the words "the District of Columbia," so that the correctional institutions belonging to the District might avail themselves of disposing of their products in the District of Columbia. The Senator from Missouri accepted the amendment, but in the report the words in the second line "or the District of Columbia" have been omitted. I have prepared a concurrent resolution which has been drafted by the legislative counsel and submitted to Judge HATTON W. SUMNERS, of the other House, who is very anxious, after the report has been adopted, that the concurrent resolution be acted upon and agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, as I understand the Senator's resolution is simply designed to correct a clerical error in the conference report?

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In other words, it was not at all in disagreement between the two Houses, and the conferees did not attempt to go outside their authority. The resolution simply proposes to correct a clerical error in the conference report.

Mr. KING. The Senator has stated the matter very clearly.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I intend to support the resolution which the Senator from Utah purposes to offer, and I doubt whether it is necessary. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a short statement upon the subject to which the resolution refers, indicating what I believe to be the intention of the conferees and their interpretation of the bill as it now stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Some question has been raised as to the intention of the conferees in the wording of that part of the bill which reads: "Provided, That nothing herein shall apply to commodities manufactured in Federal or District of Columbia penal and correctional institutions for use by the Federal Government."

The original language of the bill exempted from its provisions commodities manufactured in Federal prisons for use by the Federal Government. It was questioned whether prisons of the District of Columbia were Federal prisons and whether the products of prisoners in these institutions could be utilized by the Federal Government, including the District of Columbia. Obviously, it was the intent of the House and Senate in passing this bill so to provide. In the opinion of the conferees, the prisons of the District of Columbia are Federal prisons and the District of Columbia is a part of the Federal Government.

The conferees saw no necessity of clarifying this point. But inasmuch as the question had been raised, the bill was worded, as quoted above, in order that the Federal Government, including the District of Columbia, could continue the use of the products of its own prisons in accordance with the intent of Congress and existing law.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I am informed by the Judiciary Committee that no hearings were held on this bill. It passed the Senate in the morning hour on the 22d day of June under a unanimous-consent agreement to consider bills to which there was no objection. It went to the House; the House amended it; and, as I understand, the Senate refused to accept the amendment of the House protecting prison products such as farm machinery and binding twine. The State of Minnesota, the State of Wisconsin, and the State of North Dakota have binding-twine factories.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me say that it seems to me that the principle involved in this bill is the question of the competition of free labor against convict labor, which is even worse than pauper labor; but does the Senator see any difference from the standpoint of the farmer between binder twine made by convicts and farm machinery made by convicts, or overalls or shirts or shoes made by convicts?

In our State we formerly had a shoe factory, and we formerly had a work-shirt factory, and we formerly had an overall factory. We have abandoned them, thank Heaven; but the farmer has to buy shoes, and he has to buy overalls, and he has to buy shirts. What difference does it make whether it is binder twine which is manufactured by convicts in competition with free labor, or overalls or shoes manufactured by convicts, or any of a number of other articles which might be mentioned?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, farm-machinery and binding-twine factories in prisons were not established for the purpose of competing with private labor. They were established to protect the farmers against the extortion of the Machinery Trust and the Sisal Trust, and for no other purpose. The fact that they give employment to prisoners is a secondary consideration. That was the original purpose of starting the farm-machinery plant and the twine plant in the prison of Minnesota. The prisoners are paid under a schedule which under the N. R. A. was found satisfactory by competitors, because they were given a differential allowing for the lack of skill of prisoners. There was no trouble with the wage scale under the N. R. A.

As a matter of fact, the benefit to prisoners of having work, and being paid something like $150,000 for the work they do, is very great. They are paid 27 cents an hour, and they get their board and their room and their keep. The real purpose back of this legislation is to protect the cordage interests, the sisal interests, and the monopoly—the Farm Machinery Trust.

My father bought a binder in 1892 for $90 cash. The list price was $110. It is necessary to pay about $265 now. The prison of Minnesota sells a binder for $165, showing the benefits received by the farmers. Something like 12 States receive the benefit of a lower price on twine because of these prison factories. It was not intended that they should be in competition with free labor, but that they should serve as a regulator of monopolies taking extortion from the farmers in the form of twine prices and machinery prices.

This proposal has been before the Senate many times before. Under the Hawes bill, the States are protected now, if they want to take advantage of the protection of the law, by passing legislation within their own borders to prohibit the entry of farm machinery and twine into farm States; but with all the drive of the farm-machinery interests and the sisal interests they have not been able to pass legislation of that kind in the States where farmers were getting the benefit of these prices. So these interests come here to Washington to use the power of the Federal Government to override the sovereignty of States which have refused to enact legislation prohibiting the entry of these goods within the States. Talk about centralization. There is protection for the States which want it under the law as it now exists.

When a bill of this character came before the Judiciary Committee, I think that, not as a matter of duty but as a matter of courtesy, the authors of the bill should have given notice that such a bill was to be considered, and an opportunity to be heard should have been given.

That is about all I have to say.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he concludes his remarks?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not a member of the Judiciary Committee, but I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this bill was unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee; it was on the calendar for 3 months before it was ever considered by the Senate, and was then passed without objection on a call of the calendar. So every Senator had the completest opportunity of being heard on the matter, if he wanted to, because the bill was on the calendar for at least 3 months before it was finally passed by the Senate.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I admit that that is true, but a bill of this kind should have had hearings before the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am one of the conferees on this bill. I have declined to sign the report, and I am opposed to the adoption of the report.

I have no complaint to make of the treatment of the question by the conferees. There were a great many meetings, and there was a very free and frank discussion; but from the first meeting to the last it developed that there were two things in the House bill which some of the House members and one of the Senate members of the conference committee wanted to retain in the legislation. One of them was the exemption of farm machinery and the other was the exemption of binding twine, so as not to have the bill apply to either one of those articles made in a factory in any State penitentiary.

The present situation is a little embarrassing to me, Mr. President, because, to begin with, I am opposed to the products of prison labor entering into competition with the products of free labor. I have been opposed to that for a great many years, and I do not want to be placed in the attitude of favoring the admission of prison-made goods into competition with those made by free labor; but I believe this is a case in which there ought to be an exception to the rule, and I base my opposition to the conference report on that idea.

In principle and theory there is, as I see it, no difference between the manufacture by prison labor of binding twine, as has been suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and the manufacture by such labor of overalls or shoes. In principle, anything made in a prison factory comes into competition with the same article made by free labor if it is something that goes on the market generally; so in theory, really, there should be no exception. Nobody will advance that claim, however, when he comes to make a practical application of the theory. It is admitted by everybody, I think, that men in prisons must have something to do. Solitary confinement is a cruel punishment that we would not inflict upon anybody, regardless of what crime he had committed. It is the most cruel punishment which can be imagined. So we start with an exception. We must have the prisoners working, we must give them something to do. Every humanitarian voice in Christendom cries out for that. If we can, we want to reform the unfortunates who are in prison; and many of them are reformed. One of the things which must be done to accomplish that is to give them work. As I have said, I think everyone agrees to that, so there is an exception to the rule. If we give them work we necessarily bring them into competition with free labor. It cannot be avoided; and there is a confliction in our minds, in my mind, at any rate between what I want to do on the one hand and what I want to do on the other. I want to protect free labor, and I want to protect prisoners who would become insane patients if they were not permitted to work. How shall I solve the problem?

If we must give the prisoners work, I think it must be admitted that we should go as far as we can to give them work which will compete as little as possible with free labor, though that cannot be accomplished completely. That is not the only consideration, in my judgment, but that is a necessary condition. Regardless of everything, we should do that.

Mr. President, the farmers of the country for many years proclaimed against a Binder Twine Trust and a Farm Machinery Trust. Their complaints may have been exaggerated, and undoubtedly often were exaggerated. They were clamoring against a monopoly of men and corporations who controlled farm machinery which the farmers have had to buy, and they were unable to get relief. So far as I am able to see, I think there was some foundation for that belief of the farmers. I think there was a combination and a monopoly against which they had to struggle.

So the farmers, and some of the States following along the same line, said, "Inasmuch as the labor of these prisoners will compete at some place if the goods go out into commerce, we will let it compete in a field where there is a monopoly, and see if such competition will not bring down prices and relieve the farmers from the monopoly." Therefore there came into the field farm machinery and binder twine and some other things manufactured in penitentiaries. I am using those as examples.

Mr. President, farm machinery and binder twine were necessities for the farmer. The farmer had to pay monopolistic prices for them. The lawmakers of the States took the manufacture of those things by prisoners as one way of getting relief. They said, "We must first put our prisoners to work," and no one objected to that. But whenever they were actually started to work someone objected, wanted them put to work in a different field. While they were put to work where it would bring as little competition as possible, it was also thought that while the States were putting them to work they would give the farmers of the United States relief from a monopoly on some of the things which farmers had to buy; and that is how that situation came about.

I do not think it is a question as to whether, if the prisoners were allowed to do this, it would relieve the situation.

If they could not make binder twine, what would they make? If they could not make farm machinery, what could they do? They have to do something. We have that proposition to start with.

There is another thing which must be taken into consideration. Some of the States went into the farm-machinery business. Minnesota, for instance, established a large factory for the manufacture of farm machinery. The output of the factory began to percolate into interstate commerce in other States, and the farmers claimed it had a direct effect upon the monopolistic prices they were being compelled to pay. The prison-made farm machinery competed with the monopoly, and the same thing was true as to binder twine. The State which went into the business put a great deal of money into it, and I do not believe there is so much complaint now about a Farm Machinery Trust and a Binder Twine Trust as there was. They have not had to compete with prison-made goods, it is true, something which I regret, but I do not see any way to avoid it.

We brought the monopoly to its knees, or partially so, let me say. The farmers of the country are getting the benefit, not only in Minnesota but all over the Union, and now it is proposed to strike down the means which enabled the goods to go into interstate commerce, and brought a benefit to the farmers of the United States by competition with the Machinery Trust. Is that fair? Is that right to Minnesota? Should we say to them, "You have invested your money and you have accomplished the results you started out to accomplish, but you must quit now"?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall not interrupt the Senator at this time about the farm feature of the situation, because I wish to speak on that in my own time, but, so far as the matter of investment is concerned, does the Senator think it makes any difference whether the State of Minnesota invested its money in a factory for the manufacture of farm machinery, or some other State invested its money in a factory for the manufacture of furniture, or some other State invested its money in a factory for the manufacture of shoes, or overalls, or anything else? Is not the principle exactly the same?

Mr. NORRIS. That is absolutely true, and I am not trying to deny it. I do not see any difference. But if we are confronted with a condition such as that I have tried to point out, and desire to secure a remedy, would it not be better for free labor if we sought to remedy the situation by limiting the manufacture in the penitentiaries to farm machinery or binder twine, or should we open the door and let them manufacture everything, a condition which I do not wish to see? I do not want to see it because I want to protect free labor, and I want to protect the poor unfortunates who are in the penitentiary, and give them something to do.

It may not be consistent all the way through. As I stated to begin with, in theory there is no difference between making toothpicks and threshing machines. I think the principle is the same. We have to exercise some discretion. To my mind we are justified in doing so. Perhaps I am wrong, but I should not like to see all the prisoners in the United States deprived of work. I should not like to see solitary confinement ever get a foothold in this country, and I would just as much hate to see unrestricted competition with free labor by prison labor.

As I look at the matter, it seems to me that there can be a fair compromise. This is perhaps a confliction of two ideas which I have firmly in my mind. I confess I cannot reason them out satisfactorily, because in theory I have to make an exception.

Another reason why, if we are to make an exception, we should make it here, is that of all the industries in the United States, that which needs help more than any other is agriculture, and if by taking this method we help agriculture a little, so much the better. It may be contrary to our theories, but as a practical matter I think that is another reason why we should reject the conference report, namely, that it will injure agriculture, as I see it.

As we all agree, agriculture is depressed. Everyone desires to help in some way.

Mr. President, I think we will hurt agriculture when we say, "You must cease operating along this line. It has worked satisfactorily"—or so it is said; I do not know anything about its intricacies. "You have competed with these great monopolies and trusts. You have given the poor fellows in the prison a job, but you must cease doing that."

Mr. President, if the present system should be continued, I think it would not hurt free labor in the end as much as it would to take the other course. I believe the present system should be continued in order to help agriculture and organized labor, as well as every other division of our citizens, who ought to be glad to retain the system even though it means some sacrifice.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I may inform the Senator from Nebraska and the Senate that organized labor in Minnesota has never at any time made any protest against the operation of the farm machine and twine factory at Stillwater. Organized labor recognizes, as does the Senator from Nebraska, that there is a humanitarian principle involved, to give prisoners work, and because the average workingman in Minnesota understands that he and the farmer are both producers of wealth, he has taken a broad attitude and has never tried by legislation to interfere with that industry.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have said all I care to say, but I wish to ask to have read at the desk a letter I received from Maud E. Nuquist, a member of the department of institutions of the State of Nebraska, in regard to this subject. There may be some things in the letter which are not exactly applicable, but I think on the whole it is worthy of consideration. I ask that the letter be read, omitting the first paragraph of the letter, which refers only to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

STATE OF NEBRASKA,
BOARD OF CONTROL,
Lincoln, September 14, 1940.

Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR NORRIS: We feel that to absolutely prohibit the interchange of prison-made goods between States would work a very great hardship, not only upon prison officials and those charged with their administration, but would have a very bad effect on the men confined in penal institutions. The problem of keeping our prisoners usefully and constructively employed is our biggest problem. A man cannot be rehabilitated when he is forced to live a life of idleness.

For several years we have made not only all license plates and road signs for Nebraska in our prison industries, but we have exchanged license plates made in our factory for Wyoming for woolen blankets that they make from the wool from Wyoming sheep at their prison industries. These blankets are of a better grade than we formerly bought on the open market for the same price.

Nebraska has likewise exchanged shoes for fruit processed in Utah prison industries, and canvas jackets for vegetables processed in the Kansas penitentiary.

None of the goods made in these prison industries can come in competition with goods manufactured by free labor, because of the fine Federal law that restricts that, and that took away from the prisons of the country the old contract system whereby private employers profited at the expense of incarcerated men.

We believe a free exchange of goods manufactured in prison industries, between States, would be a distinct advantage to the States.

Now there are not too many license-plate factories in the prison industries of the country but that all of the State license plates, for all of the States, could be made in these factories at a reduced cost to the public over the amount required for private industry.

We believe that the quantities of manufactured articles in prison industries are not sufficient to upset the labor market in the country, since the production goes only to tax-supported institutions and the population in these institutions is such a small percentage of the general population that the savings thus made to the various States is a benefit to the general public.

We believe that complete restriction of interstate trade in prison-made articles would not be a benefit. I have the feeling that the firms selling machinery required to manufacture license plates and other prison products, are much more interested in securing the passage of this bill than is organized labor, for it would mean the sale of much machinery for them. As it now stands, the State best equipped to produce a certain article can do that and exchange its products with other States equipped to produce some other needed article for State institutions, and each State is not thus required to make a big investment in machinery that might be required to furnish its inmates with products at a savings of public funds.

Most cordially,

BOARD OF CONTROL.
MAUD E. NUQUIST.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, before the Senator from Nebraska yields the floor——

Mr. NORRIS. I had yielded the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the Senator a question about this letter, because he is a member of the Senate conferees, and, of course, I always have a great respect for his legal opinion and any other kind of opinion. The Senator does not understand, does he, that there is anything in the conference report or in the bill itself which prohibits the exchange to which this lady refers in her letter—the exchange between penitentiaries of various States among themselves for State use? The question of State use is what the letter is directed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and I said when I offered the letter, that it probably contained things which were not applicable to this particular question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The reason I raised that question was that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the chairman of the conferees, made a very explicit statement a little while ago that exchange between penal institutions of various States for State use was not prohibited in any way, and, as a matter of subsequent construction, I do not want it to be in question among the conferees as to whether that is true or not, because I had always understood that there was no suggestion in the bill or in the conference report to prevent exchange between penal institutions of various States for State use, or even subsidiaries of States.

Mr. NORRIS. I am glad the Senator has raised the question. I had no idea of raising that question when I asked that the letter be read.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I asked the Senator the question only because the question was raised in the letter.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it probably was, and I agree with the Senator, or the chairman of the conference committee about the scope of the bill, and I do not want to make any other representation with regard to it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate only for a minute simply to say that there is, in my opinion, only one issue involved in the bill and the conference report now pending before the Senate, and that is the naked issue of whether it is the purpose of the people of the United States and the Federal Government, within the limits of the power of the Federal Government under the Constitution over interstate commerce, to prevent the most callous, the most humiliating competition that free labor can possibly have—the competition with controlled convict labor.

We hear a great deal, first and last, about protecting the American laboring man and the American farmer against unfair competition with pauper labor abroad, yet it is seriously urged on the Senate floor that products made by the most humiliating form of pauper labor—which is labor controlled in penitentiaries, unlimited as to hours, unlimited as to wages—be brought into competition with the products of free American labor.

Mr. President, in my opinion, it makes no difference, from the standpoint of that principle, what the product of the penitentiary factory is, if it is to be permitted to enter into the ordinary channels of commerce and private purchase against the products of free labor.

No Member of this body is more sincerely interested in the welfare of the farmer than am I, or has been more sincerely distressed by the situation that has confronted the farmers of the United States, beginning with the war inflation during the last war, and which has persistently existed since.

Whatever benefit may come to farmers from the reduction in the price of binder twine or in farm machinery, which is very small because the production is very small, is insignificant in comparison with the great principle that free labor in this country be not brought into competition with the products of penitentiaries and penal institutions.

I agree with everything that has been said today about the Harvester Trust dominated by the International Harvester Co. We recognized that in Missouri 25 years ago, when, under a law drawn by my father when he was a member of the legislature, we excluded the International Harvester Co. from doing business in the State of Missouri.
